3900. What percentage of error would there be in them?—I think it must be less than 5 per cent. As regards Vital Statistics the Sanitary Commissioners have extraordinary opinions. If the number of births are not up to standard, they come down upon the local officers and say the statistics are all rotten; I know in the case of Tanjore one instance; the birth-rate was very large; they did not make sufficient allowance for the local conditions or peculiarities; so they straight away condemned all the birth-rate figures. On the whole I should say that the error was not more than 5 per cent.

3901. You said that in order to enable the panchayat to administer the schools it might be necessary to modify the educational rules. Do you think it would be to the general advantage to modify those rules in order to give the panchayat something to do?—The modification need not affect the principles of the educational rules; you simply place a certain amount of funds at the disposal of the panchayat.

3902. And you would relax your financial control?—Yes.

3903. Would it be better to waste a little money in order to teach the panchayat its business as a village council?—Yes. It would be open to you, if they abuse that privilege, to withdraw it.

3904. They probably would abuse it at first?—It all depends upon the supervision. We have completely destroyed the panchayats, and we must revive them.

Dewan Bahadur L. A. GOVINDARAGHA IYER was called and examined.

3905. (Chairman.) Would you tell the Commission what your profession is?—I am a pleader in the High Court. At present I am resident in Madras. My native place where I own my land is about 65 miles from here. I reside there between a month and a month and a half in the year; of course, I go there often.

3906. Have you been a member of the municipality there, or of the District Board?—I have been a member of the District Board of North Arcot for over seven years and also a member of the taluk Board for Chittoor for about the same time.

3907. Therefore you have some practical experience of the administration of Local Government?—I believe I have.

3908. Have you any general suggestions to offer in respect of the improvement of local administration?—Yes. In regard to the District Boards it seems that in the matter of appointment of officers, not the President alone, but the Board, might be entrusted with the appointment of officers who draw salaries within a certain prescribed limit. Another point on which the District Board can usefully exercise its functions will be by the District Board members dividing themselves into committees, each committee taking charge of some particular department. In that way I think the work of the Board will be better done and the members of the Board will familiarise themselves with local self-government matters.

3909. Who provides the funds for these Boards?—The funds are taken from the cesses. There is a road cess, or what is called a land cess, at the rate of one or two annas in the rupee. There are also certain additional cesses levied in the case of the taluk Boards. We have tolls levied on different roads, and we have also a house tax levied in the union.

3910. What is the proportion of the money drawn from cesses to the expenditure in your Board?—I am not in a position to tell you the exact proportion.

3911. Is it 50 per cent.?—I imagine the proportion is much higher, I am not sure.

3912. What you wish is that the Board which draws a proportion of its money from local cesses and a proportion of its money from the provincial Government should control the appointment of all officers who receive salaries from the Board, is that it?—Yes, it may be subject to the provincial Government's sanction. In other words, what I suggest is that that which the President is now enabled to do, the Board should do.

3913. What do you wish the committees to deal with?—With the various departments; there is the land assessment for instance; there are the roads; then there are the hospitals, schools and educational institutions; in each a small number, two or three members, as a committee, might be asked to deal with the questions and then bring them up if necessary for the consideration of the Board as a whole.

3914. At present, what subjects do the District Board deal with entirely?—They have according to the Act to deal with roads and educational institutions, charitable endowments, hospitals and dispensaries, sanitation, and buildings which may be necessary for this purpose.

3915. Except imperial buildings?—Quite so; they have also the control of the lighting of the village in some cases.

3916. Do they at the present time deal with all these subjects?—Yes.

3917. How do they deal with them, through committees?—No; the executive work is done by the Vice-President and the President.

3918. And both the Vice-President and the President are appointed by the Collector?—So far as the District Board goes it is the Collector who is the President.

3919. Ex-officio?—Yes, and usually the Deputy Collector is the Vice-President.

3920. Ex-officio?—No, he is appointed by the Government, but in some instances non-officials have been appointed Vice-Presidents.

3921. Is there any other point to which you wish to draw our attention with regard to the District Board?—At present District Boards have to prepare a budget, which is first of all sent up to the Government for their sanction; the District Board is not able to vary the budget even in cases of emergency without obtaining previously the orders of the provincial Government, and that takes of necessity some time, with the result that the emergency for which the expenditure was required passes or is not met. I would suggest that some amount of discretion should be given to the District Board as to how some of the moneys that are placed at their disposal should be spent on such occasions.

3922. Money should be entrusted to them to spend in emergencies?—Yes.

3923. Then with regard to taluk Boards, do you make pretty much the same suggestion?—Yes.

3924. What have you to say with regard to Advisory Councils?—I am in favour of their establishment. I would in the first instance limit it to one Advisory Council for the district as a whole. I would like the experiment to be tried and see how far it succeeded before it is taken down to the divisions as well. I would suggest that they should consist of between 8 and 12 members, half of whom might be appointed by Government and half elected by taxpayers of a certain grade.

3925. One of the previous members suggested 50; you think that would be too large a number?—I am afraid it would be too large.

3927. That would hardly then be an Advisory Council?—It appeared to me that it came within the functions of an Advisory Council.

3928. By "advisory" one usually understands that the advice may be followed or not?—Yes, and so the Collector need not necessarily follow it, but he should send it up to the Government.

3929. Then it has been suggested that the Advisory Councils should deal with minor irrigation works, grazing lands, roads, village schools, and sanitation. Do you think that that would form an adequate programme?—I have other things noted, namely, the remission of assessments on dry lands; the postponement of kist (instalments of revenue); the fixing of the kistbandi, re-settlement, irrigation sources, plague relief measures, famine relief operations, new communications, utilisation of charitable funds.

3931. That would come under the head of education generally?—Yes; then, forest matters with reference to setting apart land for grazing, charging fees, and so on, also the reservation of lands for conversion into forests or removing them from the list. Further they might be consulted upon measures of legislation referred to the Collector by the Government for his opinion, and any other matters of importance to the district on which the Collector is consulted by the Government.

3932. How often do you think the Advisory Council ought to meet?—Once a quarter necessarily; oftener if required by the Collector.

3933. How long would they remain in session?—That would depend on the work; possibly not more than a day or two.

3934. Notwithstanding these subjects which you think ought to be referred to them?—I believe they would be able to manage it in a day or two, possibly longer. All these subjects would not come up every time for consideration.

3936. You think there would be no difficulty in getting suitable people to serve on these Councils?—I do not think there would be difficulty.

3937. You think it would not be difficult to induce all classes of the community to serve on these Advisory Councils?—I do not think there would be any difficulty; you mean on account of caste?

3938. Yes.—I think there would be no difficulty; there are plenty of people likely to serve on the Advisory Council.

3939. You think you could get a high caste person and a low caste person to meet together?—Yes, so far as these Councils are concerned. It is only the people of lower qualifications who may still be affected by such prejudices.

3940. Therefore you would imply that on these Advisory Councils you must have persons of considerable standing socially and from a monetary point of view?—Yes. I have one or two suggestions to make with regard to village committees. It appears to me that we can have these village committees in the panchayats in selected localities; the number of members of the panchayat ranging between five and nine. The work of the committee would be to make recommendations in respect of darkhasts for assessed land, also the assignment, curtailment, and extension of village sites, loans under the Land Improvement Loans Act and the Agricultural Loans Act, the enforcement of kudimaramat, the execution of minor irrigation works, looking after village sanitation and village roads, administering the civil and criminal law as at present administered by the village magistrates and the village munsiff; they could also be trusted with the distribution of seed; they might also have to prepare at the end of every year a statement of what they consider to be the needs of their particular village, so that the tahsildar may look into the memorandum and make his own recommendations in respect of them.

3941. You have not said anything there about village schools; do you mean to include village schools?—Yes. I have also to say something on the question of the personal contact of the Executive Officers of the district with the people. My belief is that at present there is not that personal contact between the Executive Officers and the people that is desirable for good government. The obstacles in the way, so far as I am able to see them, are these:—imperfect sympathy between the people and the Executive Officers; the imperfect acquaintance of the Executive Officers with the vernaculars of the different places they serve in; and also their heavy work.

3942. May I ask if you have had any actual experience of this want of personal contact?—I have known instances; it is only two and a half years since I removed here from the mufassal. I have had some experience of my own district, and I do not think it can be said that the officers are moving so freely among the people, at any rate some of them, as is necessary.

3944. The last witness told us that in his experience the tahsildars too were losing touch with the people in the district. Is that your experience?—I cannot say that my experience is exactly the same; it all depends upon what the Collector is, and what the superior officer is. Perhaps I may give you one instance. I remember a case where one Collector was very keen about loans under the Land Improvement and the Agricultural Loans Acts. I knew that at that time the tahsildars were very busy and a large sum of money was given on that account; that was due simply to the Collector; if the Collector had not taken so much interest in the matter it would have been impossible.

3946. Would that not point to the supreme importance of the Collector being extremely well acquainted with his district?—Yes.

3947. And giving him every opportunity for exercising his authority and knowledge there?—Yes.

3948. You said something about a particular Collector having money put at his disposal for agricultural loans. Do you know anything personally about these agricultural loans?—I hear what is going on in my district.

3949. You are a land-owner yourself?—Yes; I never took any loans.

3950. But you are acquainted with the circumstances of other people who occupy or hold lands about you?—Yes.

3951. Have these loans been of great service to the people?—I cannot say they have been of great service.

3952. Is that because the Executive Officer has no power to grant actual cash loans on the spot?—That is one of the reasons. There are naturally some people who have to be satisfied, and it takes a long time for the application to be granted.

3953. Perhaps it takes something more than time?—Yes.

3955. Do you advocate that?—I would advocate that. I would also suggest that, by having the work of the Collector lightened by giving him a Personal Assistant, he would have more time to tour about the district and become acquainted with the people, which is a necessary part of his duty; that he should camp in various places, giving previous notice to the villagers so that they might if they desired come and see him, and also that he should give a report of what he has been doing, either half-yearly or quarterly. All this would have the effect of bringing the Collector and the Divisional Officers into more intimate touch with the people.

3956. Are there any agricultural shows or meetings of that sort or festivals at which the people could see the Collector and the Divisional Officers?—There are festivals, and there was one agricultural exhibition held three or four years ago.

3957. Did the Collector in your district attend that?—Yes, he took a leading part in it.

3959. With the principal men probably?—Yes, some of them.

3960. As a gentleman living in the country, do you find that there is any personal contact out of business hours between the Collectors and the principal officers and the people who live in the district?—Not very much.

3961. Could that be extended?—I think so.

3962. How could it be extended?—In the case of most of the Divisional Officers or Collectors, suppose a resident in the district pays a visit, he is generally kept out for some time until the Collector chooses to see him, and he is generally allowed to sit in some place where useless articles are placed. Many of those who have business with the Collector would not care to go to see him unless they are compelled. If those relations are improved, it will lead to more intimate contact than there is at present. I am speaking now of the more educated classes. With respect to the uneducated classes, it is only by talking to them in their own language, and with sympathy, that you can draw them out. Some Collectors have done it very well. I know of one or two Collectors and Divisional Officers who have done it, and even now their names are remembered; but usually it is not the case.

3963. Have you heard yourself instances where there was personal impoliteness on the part of Collectors or Assistant Collectors?—I think what I have said constitutes impoliteness, and I have had myself experience of it.

3964. That perhaps might not be so much intentional?—I do not put it as intentional.

3965. Have you ever heard instances of intentional impoliteness?—I cannot say that I have.

I do not want to suggest that it is due to any intentional discourtesy.

3966. It might be perhaps due to ignorance of etiquette or customs?—It might be due to ignorance or indifference—possibly indifference.

3967. And it would be very desirable to remove either the indifference or the ignorance?—Yes.

3968. It would tend to better Government?—There is no doubt about it.

3969. Would there be great difficulty in an officer coming from a different province acquiring a knowledge of the customs and etiquette of his new district or division?—Possibly I am not a good judge, because I am familiar with those customs, but to me it appears that there would not be much difficulty about it. One great necessity would be that they should acquaint themselves fairly with the language of the district so as to be able to talk freely with the people.

3970. Have you noticed during the last few years whether there has been any increase or decrease in the vernacular knowledge of officers?—I cannot say one way or the other so far as my experience goes.

3971. Is there any other suggestion which you desire to make to us?—I do not know whether you will consider this exactly relevant to your enquiry. Many amounts which have not been spent by the District Board and taluk Board are allowed to lapse to Government, with the result that at the end of the revenue year works are hurriedly done and we possibly do not get our money's worth.

3973. And if there were regulations either of the Central Government or of the provincial Government, which stood in the way of this, then you would ask that those regulations should be abrogated?—Yes. There is one other matter with respect to the right of appeal in cases where an officer is personally affected. I would suggest that no change need be made, but that there should be a modification of the existing practice; that is that no information or report be used against an officer who is appealing against a particular order in respect of which he has not been given an opportunity of explaining himself. As a matter of fact now, although it may be that the record is all one way, often the appellate authority gets some confidential report, of which no copy is given to the officer concerned, and to some extent the decision of his case depends upon matter of which the appellant knows nothing. Another suggestion I make in regard to appeals is that the person who is appealing may be allowed to represent his case either personally or by a pleader. It appears to me that the want of these two safeguards is prejudicially affecting the interests of officers and to some extent diminishing the sense of security that they ought to feel with respect to their appointments.

3974. You think then that what has been advocated by some witnesses before us, that an appeal might stop at one person or possibly two persons immediately in authority above the officer who gives the original decision, would not be a sufficient safeguard?—At present I am not aware of any cases where three appeals are allowed; I believe only two are allowed. If the safeguards that I suggest are adopted, I should be satisfied with two appeals.

3975. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) The object of your suggestions really is to increase the influence of the Collector?—To increase his personal influence and usefulness.

3976. You think that if the things you recommend to that end were done, matters might be more finally disposed of within the district than they are at present?—Very probably they might be.

3977. As a vakil of the High Court, you are more or less acquainted with the forms of law and so on?—Yes.

3978. In giving powers which are at present tied up by legislation to higher authorities, it is possible to do it in either of two ways; either by specific legislative enactments, or by a general power allowing delegation. There is a difference of opinion as to which is the better way. Have you seen the new draft Civil Procedure Code?—Yes.

3979. That is an instance of what I mean. What they are now doing is to abandon the old method of tying everything up by legislation; they are stating the principles of law briefly and plainly, and they are relegating the prescription of the persons who are to execute the law and the rules of procedure to schedules, which it will be in the power of the High Court to alter from time to time as occasion may determine. What do you think of that change in the form of legislation?—I think that that is a change in the right direction, if it can be done in the way in which the Civil Procedure Code has been embodied in the Bill. Under certain safeguards I think it is a good system.

3980. Would you apply that to the delegation of powers between Executive Governments; do you think it is a safe principle to apply there?—It will depend upon the matters in respect of which the delegation has to be made. Where an experiment has to be made and the matter has to be furthered cautiously, it is necessary that the Executive Government should be allowed some discretion; for instance, with respect to the village panchayats.

3981. Take the Local Board Act which you have been giving evidence about. Your Madras Act has been in force how many years?—For the past 23 years or more.

3982. I suppose some of your Boards are more backward and others are more forward—some have proved themselves and others are still proving themselves worthy of trust?—Yes.

3983. When the Act was first passed there were a number of powers which the Local Government held in their own hands?—Yes.

3984. There are a number of powers which now you will admit might be safely delegated to Local Board A, an increased number which might be delegated to Local Board B, and a further number which might be delegated to Local Board C, and so on, the most forward Board getting the most powers?—Quite so.

3987. Now we will go to your proposals about village committees. You think they would require some legislation?—Yes, particularly as to the administration of the law.

3988. Would you try to proceed by getting your scheme cut and dried and putting it through the legislature, or would you try some very general Act giving wide powers of making rules, and let the experiment be tried in that way? The object of the first is to satisfy some very general legal principle that you should never take more power by legislation than you actually need; the object of the second is that you may try various experiments; if Collector A thought he could try one scheme, and Collector B thought he could try another, and Collector C a third, you could put them all into force at once and get your experience, if you passed an Act with a section giving very wide rule-making powers?—So far as the village committees are concerned, taking into consideration the general state of the village communities in this part of the country, I should prefer the second method, not cut and dried legislation.

3989. (Sir Frederic Lely.) As to these Advisory Boards, you propose that they should come into existence side by side with the District Boards. Why should they? Would they not be identical?—The functions that I would like to assign to the Advisory Councils are to some extent different from the functions which are now being discharged by the District Boards. There might also be a question whether the number of members of District Boards would not be considered too many for the Advisory Board.

3990. What is the average number of members of a District Board?—It is between 24 and 40.

3991. You can scarcely have a smaller number than that to represent a large district?—If that is so, I do not see any reason why they should not be the same, although of course as matters stand at present the functions of the District Board are very different from the functions to be assigned to the Advisory Board according to my suggestion.

3992. You admit that the multiplication of bodies is an evil in itself so far as it goes?—Yes; if we can get the same body to take the two functions there is no necessity to have two bodies.

3993. These District Boards and also the village body that you suggested seemed to me to be according to your scheme only recommendatory; you do not propose to give them much power?—That is what I suggested.

3994. I am thinking now especially of your village bodies?—With respect to the village bodies, they will be entrusted with the powers which village magistrates and munsiffs exercise in respect of the administration of the law.

3995. For instance, you propose that they should "recommend" certain things; is it entirely "advisory," entirely "recommendatory"?—I suggest that at present they should be recommendatory.

3996. Do you think that that is likely to develop a spirit of self-government and self-reliance?—I think so, provided of course that the superior officers take some interest in the matter.

3997. Suppose that the superior officer did not see his way to accept their recommendations, do you not think they would very soon get sick of the whole thing?—I think the superior officer would find it difficult to reject their recommendations in many cases.

3998. He would probably act on his own view; there is always that danger?—No doubt.

3999. If you do begin to educate the people in self-government, is it not as well to give them as much power as you can?—Yes, I would suggest that so far as the schools are concerned, provided the teaching is according to the rules of the Education Department, the rest of the management should be left to the Advisory Board. Then with respect to the regulation of the darkhast, some finality might be given to their decision; that is to say, it would not merely be that they were to give some piece of advice which the Collector might act upon or refuse to act upon, but which he must act upon unless there was some special reason to the contrary. There might be an appeal from the decision of the village committee to the Collector, or something like that.

4000. What would you say to a proposal to take the best of the villages at first and give them somewhat extended powers, on the understanding that at the end of a certain period, say two years, an investigation should be made as to the way in which they have exercised those powers and that their subsequent treatment should be regulated accordingly?—I am not much in favour of it.

4001. You would leave them alone, whatever powers you gave them?—I would give them power, but on the understanding that the powers were only meant to be given tentatively.

4002. That is what I mean—that at the end of say two years or so an enquiry should be made as to the way they have exercised their powers, and they should be subsequently treated accordingly?—As at present advised I do not think very highly of that. It seems to me that it would be well to give them definite powers and help them to use the powers properly, and then increase their powers.

4003. (Mr. Dutt.) You have told us that the Collector is always ex-officio President of the District Board. Is that absolutely correct?—He is the ex-officio President, but it is competent for the Government to allow any other member to be elected President.

4004. The law provides for that, but it has not been done?—Yes.

4005. And as a matter of fact all the Chairmen or Presidents have been Collectors?—Yes, only in the case of Vice-Presidents some have been non-official.

4006. They have been elected Vice-Presidents?—No, they have been nominated by the Government.

4007. With regard to taluk Boards, is there the same provision?—Yes.

4008. But as a matter of fact the Divisional Officer has always been President?—Yes. Usually the Vice-Presidents are non-officials; only they are not elected.

4009. You said that a District Board ought to have the power to vary the budget a little on emergent occasions for emergency expenditure?—Yes.

4010. I think you mean that you want to be able to spend money as emergency may arise in excess of that already provided in the budget?—Yes.

4011. (Chairman.) Do you mean that the total budget should be exceeded, or that the sum allotted for one particular item should be exceeded?—Sometimes a necessity arises for an immediate advance of money when no specific sum has been allotted for that purpose, and it takes some time for the sanction of Government to be obtained, and when the consent is obtained the emergency has ceased to exist or has become more acute. In order to provide for such cases there might be some provision made in the budget itself, leaving it to the District Board to make advances. Sometimes it happens that the season is one of drought and wells have to be sunk in various places; when the budget was framed no provision was made for that, and before the work can be put in hand the Board has to obtain the sanction of the superior authority. It is to cases such as that that my suggestion refers.

4013. You said that unspent balances lapsed to Government. Is it not the rule that a certain amount of the balance ought to be kept as a working balance for the next year?—Yes, the opening balance must be always something like 5 per cent. or so; but these amounts that I am speaking of are irrespective of that; these do not go to swell the opening balance.

4014. These are items which are unspent under particular heads?—Yes.

4015. And they all lapse to the Government?—Yes.

4016. Are you sure of that?—That was the case when I was a member; I do not know whether it has been changed.

4017. I asked you because the rule is different in Bengal?—I know it was the practice when I was a member; that was up to two or three years ago, and I have no reason to think the rule has been changed.

4018. (Mr. Hitchens.) You have suggested that certain extra powers should be given to District Boards. One of the additional powers was in connection with appointments; another was in connection with Committees?—I may mention that so far as the committees go there is a provision in the law as it stands, enabling committees to be appointed with respect to hospitals and educational institutions and charitable endowments.

4019. Is that ever done?—Not to my knowledge.

4020. Why not?—I cannot give you reasons; I know it has not been done.

4021. Is it not possible that they want local committees rather than subject committees; I mean, you do not want a Works Committee so much as a committee for a certain portion of the district?—I have no decided preference for one committee over another.

4022. But you have really the power to do it if you want to?—Yes.

4023. Are there any other powers which you think should be delegated by the provincial Government to the District Board?—Nothing more than I have suggested. There is one suggestion which I am afraid is of a somewhat far-reaching character. It may be possible to do away with District Boards altogether and to give greater powers to the taluk Boards. At present there are three institutions; you have the union panchayat; you have the taluk Board; and you have the District Board; really the taluk Board is simply to carry out the orders of the District Board, which again carries out the orders mostly of the Government. Now we could do away with the District Boards and effect decentralization on a pretty large scale.

4024. Why do you think that the District Boards are redundant?—As it is at present, the taluk Board's budget has to be submitted to the District Board, and the District Board considers the matter, and the taluk Board has nothing more to do than to carry out the orders of the District Board.

4025. Suppose the taluk Board submits a budget in which a very inadequate provision has been made for education; cannot the District Board send it back to them and make them alter it?—They have that power, but in case of the taluk Boards they are more local than the District Boards, and if you want members to take more active interest in matters, it is more easy to do it in a taluk Board than in a District Board, because the District Board covers a very much larger part of the country than the taluk Board. In that way the local jurisdiction is restricted, and the taluk Board and the District Board perform different functions; or rather they perform the same functions, only one is subordinate to the other.

4026. I understand that to-day the engineering staff, for example, is used by all the different taluks; it is under the District Board and is loaned by them to the different taluks?—There is a District Board Engineer and there are overseers. The District Board at present looks after them; it is the District Board to whom they are responsible primarily.

4027. You would have to increase the staff?—Yes.

4028. That would mean considerable expenditure?—No doubt.

4029. But it would give the taluk Board more independence?—Yes.

4030. With regard to the submission of the budget to the Government, I understand that that has to be done now?—Yes.

4031. Do they in practice alter your budget much?—Yes. I might mention that in respect of the plague charges the District Board have really no voice in the matter; that was the case up to three years ago.

4032. Have District Boards much voice in regard to education?—Yes, the Government generally consults us.

4033. But in your experience it is the case that the budget frequently comes back to you substantially altered?—Yes.

4034. And you have to take it as you find it?—Yes.

4035. The District Board has practically no executive authority?—The District Board, as such, has practically no executive authority.

4037. How often do you meet?—We meet once a month.

4038. Have you reports which show you whether or not the resolutions which you have passed have been carried out?—Yes, but usually the resolutions are carried out which are passed at the meeting. In some instances of a routine character the thing may be carried out in anticipation of the Board's sanction, and the Board subsequently formally sanctions it.

4039. What happens if they do not?—Very possibly the President has calculated on the Board doing it; possibly the fact that it has been already carried out is one of the reasons for the Board deciding to confirm it.

4040. (Mr. Meyer.) Your proposal is to do away with the District Boards. You say first that the taluk Board is merely the agent for carrying out certain resolutions of the District Board?—Yes, mostly.

4041. Do you adhere to that?—Has not the taluk Board a very large discretion as to what roads it shall make and repair, and as to what schools it shall open and so forth?—Yes, but it has to submit all those to the District Board and the District Board has to approve of the Budget.

4043. But within limits—suppose your budget is for Rs. 50,000 for roads, you could spend that as you pleased; the District Board could not say, "You must spend it on one particular road and not on others"?—I am not quite sure; possibly it is so.

4045. The main roads running through a district are kept up by the District Board?—Yes, and there are the trunk roads which are kept up by the provincial Government.

4046. Are you quite sure; can you name any trunk roads that are kept up by the provincial Government?—I believe the road from Madras to Bangalore is kept up by the provincial Government.

4047. That passes through the Mysore State?—It goes through British territory.

4048. However, apart from such roads as the British Government keeps up, which I think are not very numerous, the main roads are kept up by the District Board?—Yes.

4050. How many taluk Boards have you?—Four.

4051. Do you think that if those four Boards were independent entities they would be able to maintain these big roads at the same efficiency as the District Boards?—I think so, of course within their own respective jurisdictions.

4052. At the present time the District Board has a highly paid District Engineer?—Yes.

4053. Under your scheme would each taluk Board have a District Engineer, or would there be a staff of District Engineers for a collection of taluk Boards?—I would have a number of engineers—not District Engineers, but each man doing the work within his own jurisdiction. It would be exactly the same as in the case of two conterminous districts; it would only be carrying specialisation further.

4054. Can you tell me what your present engineer gets?—I think Rs. 700 or Rs. 800.

4055. Would you enable the four taluk Boards each to keep up a gentleman at the salary of Rs. 700 or Rs. 800?—No, I would reduce his salary.

4056. What sort of men would the taluk Boards engage?—Say an Assistant Engineer at between Rs. 200 and Rs. 300.

4057. Do you suggest that an Assistant Engineer getting Rs. 200 or Rs. 300 could be entrusted to keep the roads in repair and look after the work?—I think he could.

4058. If you had these independent taluk Boards would you put them directly under the supervision of the Local Governments?—I would put them under the supervision of the Collector.

4059. That is to say the Collector would pass their budgets and alter their budgets if necessary?—No, the budgets will pass through the Collector.

4060. At present the District Board budget goes to Government?—Yes.

4061. The Government passes it or alters it?—Yes.

4062. It is the same way with the District Board administration report?—Yes.

4063. Under your scheme you would practically have four or five times as many District Boards as you have now, only they would be smaller entities and you would call them taluk Boards?—Yes.

4064. Would you have each of these taluk Boards subordinate to the Government?—Yes, but any proposals they made would go through the Collector.

4065. But it must be for the Government to pass the final orders?—Yes.

4066. Therefore the work of the Government would be enormously increased under your scheme?—Yes, it must be increased.

4067. It would be a centralization scheme in fact in many ways?—I do not know that.

4068. Could you not reduce the power of control of the Government over the District Board?—Take the budget; you said that the budget was so drawn up that in case of some unforeseen emergency arising there is no money to draw upon?—That is so.

4069. Is it not the fact that in the District Boards budget there is a sum for unallotted reserve?—Yes.

4070. Could they not draw upon that unallotted reserve?—That would be only with the permission of the Government.

4071. But you can draw upon it with the permission of the Government?—Yes.

4072. What you desire then is, within your budget, to re-appropriate as you choose?—Yes, that a certain sum of money given for any particular purpose, which happened not to have been used, might be treated as an allotment for unforeseen emergencies.

4073. You spoke about money that was not spent within the year lapsing to Government. Did you really mean that?—It does not lapse to Government; it lapses to the source from which it comes.

4074. Suppose it is District Board revenue, it lapses to the District Board?—But you require fresh sanction and all the formality has to be passed through before it can be re-appropriated for the purpose.

4075. But it does not lapse to the Government—the Government does not confiscate it?—No.

4076. It is merely that you have not spent it this year and therefore you must make fresh provision for spending it next year?—Yes, and it may be that sanction would not be obtained the next year.

4077. But there is no question of Government taking your unspent balances?—No; when I said that it lapsed to Government, I meant that it lapsed to its original source.

4078. You meant the Government Treasury where the money is kept—Government acts as a trustee for your money?—Quite so.

4079. You said that in addition to the money which the District Board raised by taxation and fees and so forth there were large grants by Government?—I did not say large grants; there are some grants made by Government.

4080. Of late years I mean?—There have been grants of late years.

4081. Two years ago the Government of India made a considerable grant I think?—Yes, they did, and I believe there were some made even prior to that for education.

4082. There was one grant made in proportion to the land cess. The Government of India, I think, said that they would add one quarter to the receipts from the land cess?—I believe so.

4083. They have also made grants for education which the provincial Government distributed?—Yes.

4084. Therefore, so far as you get revenues not raised by local taxation, that is practically additional grants made by the Supreme Government and passed on to you by the provincial Government?—Yes.

4085. There is no question of the provincial Government, apart from that, making a recurring contribution?—I am not aware of it.

4087. As regards the appointment of taluk Board members, do you think it is necessary that they should be appointed by the Collector?—As a matter of fact at present it is the Collector who nominates them and sends the nomination up to Government; it is the Government that does it, but although the appointments are made under the orders of the Government, they do not practically differ from appointments by the Collector.

4089. Would it not therefore save trouble if they were actually appointed and gazetted by him, instead of being theoretically appointed and gazetted by the Government?—That would be more in accord with the facts.

4090. And you would be therefore in favour of it?—Yes, because it would be more in accordance with facts.

4091. It would be more straightforward?—Yes.

4092. Who appoints the members of the local panchayats—the village unions?—I believe it is the Collector.

4093. Would you let the Divisional Officer appoint those?—The practice is for the Divisional Officer to make the recommendation and the Collector accepts them.

4094. Then as regards appointments you want a larger scope for the Board?—Yes.

4095. For the Collector as President or for the Board collectively?—For the Board collectively; the Collector as President has the power now.

4096. Has he not the power to make fresh appointments up to Rs. 50?—With reference to some of his superior officers, the engineer and so on, it may be that the Government sanction has to be obtained, but with respect to the others, I think it is the Collector who makes the appointment.

4097. Can he create a new post?—Any new post has to be provided for in the budget.

4098. Do I understand that you wish that the Board should make the appointments without the sanction of the Government?—No; I say instead of the Collector appointing with the sanction of the Government the Board should appoint with the sanction of the Government.

4099. The collective Board?—Yes, rather than the President.

4100. Do you think that a body such as you describe with 24 to 40 members is a good agency for making appointments and selecting?—With regard to some of the major appointments or the big selections I think it is desirable that they should have the power rather than the Collector.

Dewan
Bahadur
L. A. Govin-

Iyer.

26 Nov., 1907.

4101. With regard to smaller appointments?—I would give power to the Collector in the case of appointments below say Rs. 50.

4102. Above that the decision of the Board should be final?—Yes.

4103. Subject to the veto of Government?—Yes.

4104. Suppose the conduct of the Local Fund engineer is not satisfactory, who is to punish him?—The Board on the recommendation of the President; I believe there is an appeal to the Government.

4105. You would agree that there should be an appeal?—Yes, in the case of particular officers.

4106. However low their pay?—No, I am speaking of these officers who are appointed by the Board.

4107. But I am asking you now a general question?—If my suggestion were accepted and appointments were made by the President independently, I would allow an appeal to the Board and there it would stop; but with respect to the appointments by the Board the appeal should be to the Government.

4108. But in the case of any officer appointed by the Board his punishment would come from the Board?—Yes, on the recommendation, it may be, of the Collector.

4109. You have spoken of there being no regular committees; is it not the fact that committees are appointed for special purposes on the Board?—I was not aware of it.

4110. Is not a committee sometimes appointed to consider the budget for instance?—I am not aware of it.

4111. Have you anything to say with regard to municipalities?—With respect to municipalities, I would suggest this system of committees. There is provision made for that in the Act itself, but it is never taken advantage of.

4112. Would you be prepared to delegate any of the control exercised by Government—speaking generally—either to the municipality itself or to the Collector?—I believe so far as educational institutions are concerned they might be entirely under the control of the municipality.

4113. As regards your Advisory Council you have mentioned a variety of matters with which it should deal. As to some of them the Collector could pass orders himself if they were small matters, and in others he would have to refer in many cases now to the Board of Revenue or even a higher authority?—Yes. I would suggest as to, for instance, the remission of assessment on dry lands, if the area affects, say, one or two taluks, the Collector, acting on the advice of the Advisory Council, should be empowered to grant the remission.

4114. In matters where the Collector has power himself, where he can act entirely as an individual at present, if he had this Advisory Council, and the Advisory Council differed from him, would you require him to refer it to the Board?—Yes.

4115. So that so far it would be a measure of centralisation; it would clip the powers of the Collector?—But it would increase the powers of the Advisory Board, otherwise I do not think they will have that sense of responsibility which will enable them to take up the work or do it satisfactorily.

4116. In matters which in any case the Collector could not decide, he would report to the Board of Revenue and say "My Advisory Council agree with me" or not, and the Board would decide?—Yes.

or the taluk Board; but my point is this, that the Advisory Board will merely settle general questions of policy so far as such questions affected the whole district.

4118. Will the Advisory Board deal merely with questions referred to it by the Collector or will any member be at liberty to raise questions?—I take it that the initiative should come from the Collector, but I should have no objection to its being in the power of any member to start a fresh subject for discussion.

4119. You admit the existence of factions in the villages?—There are factions in villages, so I said that selected suitable areas should be taken first of all for the creation of panchayats.

4120. You think that in other areas the existence of factions might make the panchayats useless?—Not necessarily. You would have in the first place the example of successful panchayats, before the thing was tried in other places.

4121. Do you think the existence of an unrepresented low caste population like the Pariahs would be satisfactorily; do you think the panchayat would sufficiently consider the needs of the Pariah community?—I believe that the Pariah interest would be also considered because the interests of the Pariahs are not different from the interests of the raiya holders.

4122. With reference to schools, do you think the panchayat would provide schools for the Pariahs?—I think there is no difficulty in regard to the panchayats doing that. It may be that they would not be allowed to read in the same school—the caste children and the Panchama children.

4123. I am asking you, as a matter of individual opinion, whether you think the panchayat would make provision for that?—Yes. I cannot say that the initiative to start a Panchama school will come from them, but if the matter is suggested, which I am nearly certain it will be, they will take it up and they will act upon it and try to do what they can.

4124. You suggest that the panchayat should have the criminal and civil powers now enjoyed by the munsiff and the village magistrate?—Yes.

4126. Then with regard to civil matters?—The munsiff's power now is limited to Rs. 20; I would increase it to Rs. 40 or Rs. 50.

4127. Would you make it obligatory for persons having civil disputes or criminal cases within those limits to go to the panchayats?—Not in the infant stage of the panchayat.

4128. At first you would leave it optional?—Yes, as it is at present.

4129. And would there be an appeal?—Yes; with reference to civil cases there is an appeal provided for to the district munsiff at present; I would not alter that.

4130. And with regard to criminal cases?—There is no appeal now; it should be final within the limit now covered by the present regulations.

4131. As regards appeals against acts of Government, administrative or disciplinary acts in respect of their servants, what do you say?—I confine my answer to the case of disciplinary acts.

4132. Practically every act of a Government official can be appealed against now. In every administrative act by which a man thinks he is aggrieved he has at least one right of appeal?—Yes.

4133. Sometimes more?—Probably he has.

4134. You do not want to restrict the facilities for appeal in any way?—I have not spoken of appeals in respect of administrative acts, because I do not feel myself competent to give any opinion there; it is only with respect to matters which personally affect Government officials.

4135. About administrative acts you are not prepared to say one way or the other?—At present I am not.

4137. Are you aware that every officer of Government in India now spends a large part of his time in re-doing the work of the men below him?—Yes.

4139. But you do not appear to wish to remedy the matter in the direction of reducing their work; you expect them to make bricks without straw; you would give them as much work as they do at present, and have them find time to receive visitors in addition?—I do not expect that their work in this direction should be lightened, but with reference to routine work I suggest that they might have Personal Assistants who would take the larger part of the work that they would have to do on to their own shoulders, so that they will have more time left for touring and getting into contact with the people.

4140. Practically your remedy is not to decrease the work but to increase the establishment?—Practically that is what it comes to.

4141. About the General Delegation Act, I was not clear as to what you said. You desire, I understand, that the provincial Government should be empowered by a general section to delegate certain powers vested in them by any Act whatever to any local authority?—No. I think my answer was this. The Act need not give the special powers to be exercised by the village panchayats, but the right to exercise special powers might be reserved to Government, which might give them those powers if it found the panchayats suitable for the purpose.

4142. But Sir Steyning Edgerley asked you a specific question. There may be occasions in which, owing to legislation passed a good many years ago, power has been placed in the hands of Government which it would be more convenient now to delegate to the Collector or to the taluk Board or to any other authority?—I cannot think at present of any particular case; it may be possible that circumstances may have so changed as to allow the delegation.

4143. I will put it as a hypothetical case. It may be that in certain cases the law has vested powers in Government, without the power of delegation, which it would be desirable for Government to delegate. Would you approve of a general Act allowing the Government in any case in which the law has put power into the hands of the Government and in the hands of the Government only, to give that power to any selected subordinate authority?—Does your question refer to general or particular cases?

4144. A general delegating authority?—I would not suggest that, but with reference to particular matters, as for instance in the case of the village panchayats, I would suggest that, taking into consideration the fact that village panchayats have to be revived very largely, the provincial Government might be given power as necessity arose to give them more and more powers.

4144a. But you would not give a blank cheque, so to speak, to the provincial Government to delegate powers vested in it to any subordinate authority it chose?—No.

Dewan Bahadur K. KRISHNASWAMI RAO, C.I.E., was called and examined.

4145. (Chairman.) You have been the Dewan of Travancore?—Yes.

4146. As such your position naturally carried with it a large amount of administrative power and experience?—Yes.

4147. How long did you occupy that position?—Six years.

4148. Had you any administrative experience besides that?—No. I was Chief Justice before that for 14 years, and before that I was in service in British India. I entered the British Service in the Judicial Department and remained for about 20 years in that department entirely; then I was transferred to Travancore; there I remained for nearly 20 years, and I was Dewan for six years.

4149. You are of opinion that in no case should the present right and power of appeal be curtailed. Are you fully acquainted with the right of appeal which now exists?—I cannot say that I am fully acquainted.

4150. Could you lay down any general principle within which the right of appeal either from administrative or judicial decisions should be curtailed?—So far as my experience goes in Travancore there is an appeal in every case.

4151. From every authority to the very highest?—Yes; there are only two authorities after all, the District Officer and the Dewan. So far as British Indian experience goes I have no experience.

4152. Those two appeals, you think, were sufficient?—There were also petitions to His Highness and also to the Resident, but there were no further appeals.

4153. Practically the right of appeal terminated with the Dewan?—Yes.

4154. And you, having acted as Dewan, know perfectly well that they got complete justice when the appeal terminated at the second Court?—Anyhow that was the practice there, and they were satisfied.

4155. Would you not admit that, following the same example in British India, if there were two rights of appeal that would be sufficient?—That I cannot say; it all depends on the classes one has been able to deal with; I have no British experience and cannot say whether it would be so or not.

4156. Therefore, your opinions regarding appeals should be interpreted as applying to Travancore?—I am speaking generally of the good that results from the right of appeal.

4157. You consider that European Executive Officers are not able to use the opportunities of personal contact with the people because of their want of vernacular knowledge. Does that apply to Travancore or to British India?—Everywhere.

4158. What has been your experience of British India lately?—I have no recent experience. When I was in British Service, before 1884, I have known cases in which British gentlemen were not able to converse with the people, and I think that that should not be.

4159. Where are you residing now?—In Madras.

4160. Since when?—For the last three years.

4161. With regard to the creation of Advisory Boards you suggest that they should deal amongst other things with income tax appeals?—I think there are some difficulties in regard to that which I had not noticed; I would withdraw that.

4162. And in such things as fixing the number of arrack-shops and the disposal of applications for loans for land improvement and agricultural purposes and so forth?—Yes; the Boards may be consulted.

4163. You are of opinion that the members should be nominated by the Collector in consultation with the Divisional Officers?—Yes, and the tahsildars and leading men.

4164. That you think would produce a satisfactory Council?—It might, I think, because the tahsildars and the leading gentlemen of the place would be consulted, and they would be well acquainted with the circumstances locally.

Mr. H. W. GILLMAN, I.C.S., was called and examined.

Mr. H. W.
 Gillman.

4165. (Chairman.) Do you wish to make a statement?—Yes: the chief defect in the administration is that too many appeals are allowed. The Indian raiyat would be perfectly contented with the order of the Collector or of the Divisional Officer so long as he knew it to be final. But when he is informed that he can go through the Divisional Officer and Collector up to the Board of Revenue and sometimes even to Government, he is apt to entertain an exaggerated idea of the importance of his grievance and of himself. I do not think that the raiyat would go beyond the district authorities, if he were left to himself. But he is not. There are persons hanging round every court in the district who make their living by sending him further in his progress of appeal. There are over 200 vakils in Madura town alone, whereas there is proper work for only perhaps a quarter of this number. The remaining three-quarters have to make work themselves and that is done by entrapping petitioners, parties and accused in the above manner, and by inducing them to appeal. All this surely makes for discontent. I hold very strongly that against revenue and administrative orders there should be only one appeal, and there should be no appeal beyond the Collector except when the original order is passed by the Collector himself.

Apart from this bug-bear of appeals, which is unavoidable under the present system, my experience has been that a Collector is treated with great consideration by the Board and Government, and that he is given a sufficiently free hand in the management of his district. In some matters he might be given extended powers, but they are only details which will not materially increase his responsibility. It is more essential that he should be relieved of the routine with which he is hampered in many branches of his work, so that he may have more time to devote to the supervision of the work of his subordinates and improvement of the administration of his district.

The powers of Divisional Officers are generally adequate. They relieve the Collector of the great bulk of the revenue work.

In Madura during the past five years there have been seven Collectors. The district has two Civilian divisions, Dindigul and Ramnad. During the same period, there have been 11 Divisional Officers at Dindigul and 14 at Ramnad. These frequent changes have not been due to any defect in the method of promotion, and I have no changes to suggest in this respect.

I consider that the pay of tahsildars should be personal and not territorial. This would save a lot of unnecessary and disconcerting transfers.

Government control is necessary over district municipalities for four reasons:—

- (i) To protect its own interests by preventing the streets which are Government property and merely vested in the municipal Council from being encroached upon.
- (ii) To protect the health of the municipality, in regard to which the municipal Council is astonishingly apathetic and careless. Instances from the Madura municipality are (a) neglect of the cholera epidemic this year, (b) resolution to abolish the Health Officer, and (c) resolution to abolish medical inspection at the railway station.

- (iii) To safeguard the revenues of the municipality and veto the improper remission of taxation.

- (iv) To ensure sympathetic administration.

I am of opinion that municipal Councils may be allowed greater freedom in regard to occasional and non-recurring expenditure.

District Boards within their budget are allowed a sufficiently free hand. If it is proposed to relieve the Collector of the Presidentship, I am afraid that the administration would suffer. I cannot make any suggestion for filling his place.

Of all the tribunals in the Presidency, the village court is the most competent judge of fact. The village munsiff or members of a village court do not need evidence to prove the facts of a case, which are already within their personal knowledge: generally, the only question for decision is the award.

The civil jurisdiction and procedure of the village courts in this Presidency is regulated by the Madras Village Court Act (I of 1889). Their jurisdiction is limited to suits of a value not exceeding twenty rupees; but with the consent of both parties they can entertain suits up to two hundred rupees.

There are 501 village munsiffs in the Government taluks of the Madura district, and probably not less than 450 in the zamindari portion. So far only 50 Bench Courts have been started, and of these five have become popular, 22 partially so; while 23 have been decided failures.

The working of the Bench Courts in the district is disappointing. One reason is, perhaps, that the superior officers of Government have not sufficiently supervised the constitution of the Courts or endeavoured to make them popular. This has been noticed by Government, and more energetic action is now being taken. Again, the ordinary jurisdiction of the village munsiffs and of the Bench is the same, and is so low that the members of a Bench do not usually care to attend when summoned.

Moreover, Section 14 of the Act requires the consent of both parties to invest a village court with extended jurisdiction. When both parties are ready to consent to the jurisdiction, they are also generally ready to compromise, and so it seldom happens that a suit above the ordinary limit is submitted to a village court if the parties are directly at issue on matters of fact or are at enmity with one another. Generally, the opposition comes from the defendant, and is merely vexatious in order to cause the plaintiff expense or enable himself to gain time for the payment of his debt. It seems to me that if the plaintiff consents to submit to the village court the defendant should not have the option of refusing, as the impartiality of the Bench is sufficiently safeguarded by Section 9 of the Act.

The value of suits cognizable by the village Bench may be raised to Rs. 50. The jurisdiction of the village munsiff sitting alone may be limited to suits up to the value of Rs. 20 as at present. At any rate, a village Bench may be given concurrent jurisdiction with the district munsiff for suits between Rs. 20 and Rs. 50, and if the plaintiff elects to file his suit in the latter court, the district munsiff may be given the discretion of allowing him only the costs that would have been incurred in the village court if he considered that the suit had been unnecessarily or vexatiously filed in his own court. A small institution fee of half per cent. on the value of suits might be charged as costs in the suit to be credited to the village improvement fund to be hereafter mentioned.

As village magistrate, the headman has jurisdiction over petty cases of abuse, assault, and thefts of property of a value below one rupee, and can confine the offending party in the village Chavadi for twelve hours, or put him in the stocks if he is a man of the lower castes. As a rule these matters are settled by a village panchayat by the award of a fine, part of which is paid to the party aggrieved and the remainder appropriated for village expenses.

I would suggest the establishment of village Benches constituted as in Act I of 1889 for criminal work, also with jurisdiction over cases of theft and mischief where the loss is below Rs. 5 and petty cases of assault, insult and trespass, and also nuisance cases. The Bench may be empowered to fine up to Rs. 5 and confine in the Chavadi for 12 hours. The village Bench should be directly subordinate to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in all respects.

All fines and fees levied by village courts may be credited to a village improvement fund, the money being lodged in the custody of two members of the Bench and the accounts being kept by the karnam. The fund should be applied to the improvement of the sanitation, water-supply or roads of the village entirely at the discretion of the Bench. The accounts and balance in hand may be subject to the scrutiny of the Government officers, but to no other interference from them.

I am of opinion that it is not desirable to give the village community greater powers in the disposal of revenue matters such as applications for land, distribution of remissions, settlement of irrigation disputes, etc. In the Vizianagram zamindari, prior to the assumption of management by Government, the village headmen had been allowed a very free hand in such matters, and the result certainly was that the rich and influential raiyats not only appropriated the best lands and an undue share of the water for irrigation, but unfairly shifted the burden of assessment on to the poorer villagers.

Divisional charges have hitherto been too heavy. I was in the Guntur division for nearly a year and a half in 1895-96, and could not manage to visit the whole of it.

Under Mr. Meyer's scheme divisional charges have been reduced to more reasonable dimensions, but even after this scheme is introduced, I anticipate that there will still be some heavy divisions.

Take, for instance, the Dindigul division of the Madura district. The Divisional Officer is at present overworked. He has three heavy Government taluks and a Hill sub-division. His magisterial file is heavy. He has on the average to dispose of 150 criminal cases and 200 appeals in the year. He has four municipalities to supervise. Such heavy magisterial work compels the Divisional Officer, even when he is in camp, to spend most of his time in court, and does not allow him sufficient opportunity of looking into village needs for himself, or even of personal enquiry into the petitions that are presented to him. He has necessarily to refer petitions to a subordinate for report and decide them on second-hand information.

I am not prepared to say that a Civilian's initial study of the vernacular is inadequate. But as his orders are generally passed upon reports written in English, and as depositions are recorded by him in the same language with the assistance of a clerk, his fluency in the native language of his Division is apt to become impaired through want of practice.

The less magisterial work a Divisional Officer has to do, the better he gets to know his division. For seven years I was in charge of the Vizianagram zamindari and had no magisterial powers. I certainly got to know the raiyats and their needs as I had never previously done as a Divisional Officer.

4166. You are Collector of the Madura district?
—Yes. I have been so for nearly a year; it is my first permanent Collectorate.

4167. What is the longest period for which you have acted as a Collector?—I have been on special service; I was Collector of the Vizianagram zamindari for seven years continuously.

4168. In your judgment is the system of appeal considerably abused?—It is carried to too great a length.

4169. You hold that one appeal beyond the original deciding authority would be sufficient?—Yes; in revenue matters.

4170. And in administrative matters?—In administrative matters there should be two appeals I think, except as regards personal matters of the dismissal of officials; I think that ought to be very carefully safeguarded. I should say that where a Divisional Officer has power to dismiss, the Collector ought to have the final power in appeal; there would not be much chance of injustice being done if that was the case.

4171. Would that necessarily give one court of appeal?—One court of appeal to the Collector; the Divisional Officer is the lowest man who can dismiss.

4172. And would you give an appeal from him to the Collector?—Yes.

4173. Does not the freedom conceded to the Collector in the management of his district very often depend on the character of the Collector?—I do not know: I am speaking only of myself.

4174. A man who is a strong man can get a great deal more freedom out of Government than a weak man?—I should think so, to a certain extent. I think Government would not give so free a hand to a man they did not trust.

4175. You rather suggest that it might be desirable to abolish the practice of promotion by seniority in the case of Collectors?—I do not think it is necessary.

4176. You think that all Collectors are of sufficient character and intelligence to justify promotion in all cases?—I should think that every man ought to be given his chance as Collector.

4177. How long is a Sub-Collector before he reaches the full permanent appointment of Collector?—Now it is about 16 years; he officiates as Collector in about 13 years.

4178. So that for 13 years a man, whether he does ill or well, in your judgment should go straight up?—I think a man who has been working for 13 years should be given a chance as Collector.

4179. I ask you whether a man should for 13 years—which is about the time he begins to act as Collector—go up unchecked by selection for merit?—I think so.

4180. Have you ever in your experience known cases of men who have conspicuously failed as Collectors?—I cannot recollect a case.

4181. If these relaxations of control were granted, would a better class of men be required?—No.

4182. Not at all?—I do not think so: I do not think they add materially to the responsibility of the man.

4183. They are all of such a trifling character that you do not want any more careful selection of the men who would exercise the powers?—Quite so.

4184. With regard to the delegation of powers from Divisional Officers to tahsildars, you want freer power from the Government, and on the other hand you are prepared to hand on to your subordinates further powers?—Yes.

4185. Do you think that in the delegation of powers the best way would be for Government to have the general power to delegate to Collectors, and that the Collectors should have the general power to delegate to subordinates, wherever in each case the delegation can be properly used?—I do not think that that would be the best way.

4186. You think that every Collector should have powers compulsorily delegated to him, and should in turn be compelled to delegate those powers to subordinates?—Yes, and if the subordinate is found wanting he should be found some other appointment.

4187. But the delegation of powers should be compulsory?—Yes.

4188. Amongst these subordinates would be the tahsildar?—Yes.

4189. You think that he might be given greater powers?—Yes.

4190. Is a tahsildar kept very much in his office?—A great deal.

4191. We had it in evidence yesterday that he was kept very much in his office?—He has got a tremendous amount of office work to do—accounts and so forth.

4192. You think that that might very advantageously be diminished?—As to the tahsildar's work, I do not know very well how it could be diminished, because he has to keep the accounts of all the departments; I do not think the accounts work could be diminished.

4193. In what direction could a tahsildar's work be diminished?—He could be given some one in his office who could relieve him of part of his work. In the case of Madura, which is one of the heaviest taluks in my district, the tahsildar has now what is practically an additional deputy tahsildar; he is an office assistant, who does a vast amount of routine work, to the great relief of the tahsildar.

4194. In your judgment the clerical work which is now laid on the tahsildar is necessary, but he has not got staff enough to cope with it?—I think so; in heavy taluks he ought certainly to have a trained assistant.

4195. You tell us that the tahsildar's recommendations are almost invariably maintained?—Yes, in regard to the jamabandi.

4196. Is that because he knows there is an appeal from him?—No, it is because they are mostly according to rule.

4197. He looks in a book?—It is really a mere matter of rule of thumb.

4198. Not requiring the exercise of discretion?—Very little.

4199. Do tahsildars as a rule have to exercise a certain amount of judgment?—In the management of the village officers they have to exercise judgment.

4200. In that direction would you give them greater freedom?—Yes, I propose that they should be allowed to suspend village officers.

4201. Have you calculated what might be the financial effect, say in your Collectorate, of giving these greater powers which you suggest to yourself and the officers subordinate to you?—I do not think there would be much extra cost. If I have not the power of sanctioning myself, I have to get the sanction of the Board of Revenue.

4202. Do you always get it?—Yes.

4203. They do not necessarily surcharge you?—No, these are necessary establishments which must be maintained.

4204. It is really only a formal sanction?—Yes.

4205. And you want to prevent reference?—Yes.

4206. In your judgment, there would be no increase of cost if these increased powers of sanction were given to you?—No; the only reason the Board insist on it now is that Collectors might sanction establishments which the Board may possibly not consider necessary.

4207. What is Special Fund work?—It has reference to cattle pounds and things of that sort.

4208. You have no power now to sanction in those cases?—I have got certain powers, but I propose that they should be extended up to Rs. 250.

4209. You want an extension to the Divisional Officer?—And to myself; that is not so important.

4210. When you say that the tahsildar might be given the power of suspending and fining village officers do you mean without reference to higher authority?—Subject to appeal to the Divisional Officer.

4211. What power is there at present?—The tahsildar can fine up to one rupee.

4212. What would the power of suspension imply?—The limit of suspension is two years. It would be perfectly safeguarded if there was an appeal.

4213. You think the appeal to the Divisional Officer (not to yourself) would safeguard it?—Quite.

4214. You do not think there would be danger of injustice from the tahsildar wanting to bring in some relation of his?—He could not do that according to the rules; it has to be done according to hereditary right; he has to appoint the nearest relation of the karnam or munsiff.

4216. Then with regard to the wiping off of irrecoverable arrears; is that not a question of the Court of Wards?—Yes, it gives real trouble.

4217. You say that quite an appreciable portion of your time is occupied in passing drafts to the Court, generally for a few rupees?—Yes.

4218. When you say it occupies an appreciable portion of your time, what do you mean?—I think it occupies a quarter of an hour a day.

4219. That is about an hour and a half a week?—Yes, that is a great deal in a heavy Collectorate.

4220. I suppose in these cases you do not look very closely at them yourself; you merely counter-sign them?—No, the manager of the Court of Wards sends up proposals giving full explanations; I have got to go through his explanations and see that they are correct, and send them on to the Court of Wards; I have to send on even for an arrear of 6 pies.

4221. What limit would you have?—I would have a Rs. 50 limit; that would be quite enough; most of the cases I have are below Rs. 50.

4222. With regard to the question of transfers; you say that in Madura there have been seven Collectors in five years; is that to the advantage either of the district of Madura or of the Collector?—No, distinctly not.

4223. Do you make any suggestion as to how that might be avoided?—I think there should be more care taken at headquarters.

4224. In what direction?—By posting Collectors to a district who are likely to remain there, as far as possible.

4225. Do you know whether officers, having been posted to a district which they do not like, are frequently allowed to get a transfer?—I have not heard of that.

4226. You have not heard of it in conversation and so forth; it has not been suggested to you in any way?—No.

4227. You have no other suggestion to make as a remedy?—I do not think there is anything wrong in the method of promotion of Collectors or Divisional Officers. The pay of Divisional Officers is personal, and it does not matter to which division in a district he is appointed. I think there is nothing wrong in that, but I think more care might be exercised to see that men who are posted to a district are likely to stop there, as far as possible.

4228. You say that the pay of tahsildars should be personal and not territorial?—Yes.

4229. I understood that in a great many cases the system had been altered in Madras and that the pay generally throughout the Civil Service in Madras was personal and not territorial?—I think Government refused to entertain the proposal when it was made by Mr. Meyer.

4230. You would like to see the tahsildars' pay arranged on the same principle as that of Gazetted Officers?—It would be a great saving of transfers in the district.

4231. Are tahsildars transferred as frequently as Gazetted Officers?—It is not so much that as that when a higher grade tahsildar comes in from leave or has to retire, he turns out the whole line of tahsildars down to the bottom again.

4232. Is it not quite as necessary that a tahsildar should know his district as it is that a Deputy Collector or a Divisional Officer should know his district?—He ought to be given three or four years in the taluk.

4233. What is the size of your Madura district?—8,700 square miles.

4234. Is it not going to be divided?—Yes.

4235. How long would it take an officer to get to know personally a district of the size of Madura?—I mean as Collector?—A year.

4236. He would be able in a year to get round the whole of his Collectorate and make himself fairly well acquainted with the people?—I think so; it has taken me a year at least.

4237. Not more?—I do not think so.

4238. He would get to know the principal gentry in the district?—He would get to know the gentry, but he would not know the villagers.

4239. How long would it take him to know the people generally as apart from the notables?—Double the time I should think.

4242. Is Government control over a district municipality necessary to protect the health of the municipality? So far as Madura is concerned, you instance a case of neglect of a cholera epidemic, a resolution abolishing the Health Officer, and a resolution abolishing medical inspection at the railway station. Are all those three subjects matters which require very careful attention?—Health I think is a subject requiring most careful attention.

4243. Was there any particular local dispute which caused the municipality to desire to get rid of their Health Officer and to abolish medical inspection?—No.

4244. It was a sort of general carelessness?—Yes; the native character I think accounted for it; it is fatalism.

4245. That prevents them cleaning the streets and so on?—It prevents them taking enough trouble when an epidemic breaks out, and certainly they do not clean the streets as well as they ought to.

4247. Up to what extent?—I would not make any limit.

4248. A witness told us yesterday that he would like to give the District Boards freedom to spend a certain sum on unforeseen expenditure up to a limit which should be laid down in the budget, which should be provided for en bloc but not in detail. Would you like to see the same power given to municipalities?—I should have no objection.

4249. What should be the limit?—I do not think I should put a limit, because you would have to put it down in the budget, and Government would consider whether the sum was adequate or not for the particular municipality.

4250. It would depend upon the size of the municipality?—Yes.

4251. Within their budget are District Boards freer than municipalities?—Municipalities have to go up more frequently for sanction to occasional expenditure. A District Board has practically complete control within its budget.

4252. Have they got all the latitude to which they are reasonably entitled, looking to their composition?—I think so.

4253. Have you found that the village courts on the whole work well?—I think so on the whole.

4254. Ought the system to be extended?—I think so; I think they ought to be given a greater chance.

4255. For executive or for judicial functions?—For judicial functions.

4256. You think they are quite competent to consider all the sort of general village questions which in practice arise between the inhabitants of a village?—Yes, in regard to civil and criminal work—petty disputes—I think so.

4257. Both civil and criminal?—Yes.

4258. And you think they ought to be fostered in every way?—I think they ought to be.

4259. Would that require favourable supervision for the first few years or months of the existence of village courts?—Not so much supervision as encouragement.

4260. I said favourable supervision?—Yes, they probably would.

4261. They might otherwise go out of existence?—They would be inclined to; that has been my experience of civil courts in Madura.

4262. They want to be very carefully nursed?—They require to be nursed.

4263. Are you the officer who deals with agricultural loans?—Yes. The Collector allots the money, and the tahsildar distributes it.

4265. Is the budget of loans put in after you have been round the district?—No, it is put in on the reports of the tahsildars.

4266. How long is it between the time when you first of all put in your budget and when you get the actual cash which you can hand over to the agriculturalist?—We first of all have got to get the sanction of the Board; from the time of my application for the loan I should think it would be about two months.

4267. Is it the fact that the season when you most require the relief may have passed by the time you actually get the money?—There is a possibility of that; it depends; loans are given all the year round.

4268. What is generally speaking the amount of money required in a Collectorate like Madura?—The loans there are generally either for sinking wells or for the purchase of cattle; the average loan is from Rs. 150 to Rs. 250.

4269. Do you find as a rule when you have recommended a loan that the provincial Government says "Well, we have not got the money" or "We do not think the project a good one"?—We are given a free hand in the matter of spending the money; we are given a budget lump sum.

4270. If that is so, would it not save time, and perhaps a great deal of correspondence, if upon the requirements of loans of one year the Collector was permitted to draw upon the local treasury for a similar amount, of course stating the purposes to which he devoted the loan, so that he might have the actual cash to hand to the agriculturalists quickly?—The whole allotment for the district is sanctioned; we send up the application in March, and the sanction comes in April; that lasts for a year. According to that allotment from the Board we distribute it among our taluks. The only people who would have to wait are the people whose applications are pending while the sanction of the Board is arriving; otherwise the money is ready to hand as soon as the necessary enquiries have been made and it can be given out by the tahsildar on the spot. There would not be any delays in the case of loans coming after sanction for distribution had been received.

4271. Any loan, therefore, that would be proposed to you between April and December would be promptly made?—It is not proposed to me at all.

4272. Proposed to the tahsildar and then referred to you?—No, it is not referred to me.

4273. Then what is the process?—The sanction is by the Divisional Officer.

4274. To be confirmed by you?—No, I have nothing to do with it.

4275. You always take the recommendation of your Divisional Officer?—All I do is to check the expenditure of the loans; in a few cases I have done so.

4276. Would it be of advantage to the raiyat if the Divisional Officer had this power, which I have suggested might be given to you, of at once producing the money and giving it to the raiyat?—He has the power.

4277. Except as to those requests which are put in between April and December?—He has no power until the new allotment is out. There may be a little delay in getting the Board's sanction for the new allotment.

4278. There is practically no delay in the first part of the year?—No, practically none, except for the necessary enquiries to be made.

4279. The forest officer and the District Superintendent of Police are subordinate to you for administration, but independent of you for technical purposes?—Yes.

4280. But the Public Works Engineer is independent of you for all purposes?—Yes.

4281. Might the same relations which now obtain between you and the forest officer and the District Superintendent of Police advantageously obtain between you and the Public Works Engineer?—I think it might with regard to irrigation.

4282. Not with regard to other things?—That is not so important; buildings and works generally are not so important.

4283. You think it would be advantageous and would save delay and perhaps correspondence if these relations were made similar to those which obtain between the Collector and the forest officer and the District Superintendent of Police?—It is not so much the saving of correspondence. I think the Collector ought to be the authority who decides matters of irrigation, especially as to the distribution of water.

4284. He would know much better the requirements of the locality?—Yes, I have a case at present in Madura where I have expressed to Government my dissatisfaction with the arrangement of the Executive Engineer.

4285. How is it that the Collector knows better than the engineer the requirements of the locality as regards water?—First of all from his own enquiries, and secondly from the knowledge of the revenue inspectors and tahsildars, whose constant duty it is to go over the area.

4286. The Public Works Engineer has no subordinates?—He has subordinates.

4287. Then would not his subordinates give him the information?—Well, they would give him information; of course it is a matter of opinion; I consider that in this particular case the information he receives is incorrect.

4288. But each has a similar opportunity of obtaining, through subordinates, the information which would lead him to a correct judgment?—I think so.

4289. However, you think it may be supposed that the judgment of the Collector in individual cases would be better than the judgment of the Public Works Engineer?—I think so; the Collector is the Head of the District, and I think his opinion ought to prevail until he is over-ruled by Government.

4290. Would an Advisory Council be of use to you as a Collector?—I think that the Local Boards and probably District Boards would be made more useful if the district were divided into areas and members chosen in the areas. I think it would be possible to let them advise in matters of village economy—not to advise exactly, but to make suggestions to the Collectors with regard to matters which do not come within the purview of those Boards—that is to say particularly with regard to the needs of village irrigation. I think that would be possible and advisable.

4291. Should extended powers be given to taluk Boards?—It is not so much a matter of giving them powers, but these people, representative of small areas in the district, would directly advise the Divisional Officer of the needs of irrigation in their areas, which he would not otherwise perhaps have the opportunity of knowing.

4292. If the sphere of influence, we will put it, of taluk Boards was extended, you think the special Advisory Councils would be unnecessary?—I do not think they would be necessary.

4293. Their place could be taken by the extension of influence which would be given to the taluk Boards?—I think so.

4294. And to the District Boards?—I do not consider that there would be any harm in the District Boards having the same power; it would be more useful in plague matters.

4295. Do you think that panchayats could be usefully revived?—In regard to what matters?

4296. It was suggested to us the other day that minor irrigation works, grazing land, roads, and so on, were matters that might be dealt with by a village panchayat?—Village roads, sanitation, and drinking water wells I think are all matters that could be dealt with by the village panchayat.

4297. And schools?—I do not see any real objection to that.

4298. Small questions of sanitation and irrigation and so on?—Certainly.

4299. Distribution of seeds?—I suppose you mean distribution of seeds for experiments; I think that might be done.

4300. You think that the panchayats might be usefully revived?—In regard to these matters, yes.

4301. Would it be very difficult to revive them?—I think not.

4302. Would the natural inclination of the people of the village be to make use of a Council of this sort?—I think so.

4303. Should they be actually limited to five, or should it be, as I am told it is in certain parts of the Punjab, extended to eight members?—I do not think the number matters; you would pick the best men in the village.

4304. There would be no difficulty in getting five or ten members?—There would be difficulty in some villages; sometimes you could only have three members.

4305. You probably would not be able to start them in all villages at once?—No.

4306. You have no famine duties?—I have had, but I have not any at present.

Mr. H. W.
Gillman.
27 Nov., 1907.

4307. Of course they fall very heavily on the Collectors?—Yes.

4308. More heavily than on the Divisional Officers?—They fall very heavily on both, but theonus is on the Collector.

4309. During a time of famine do the provincial Government rather throw control to the winds and give you a pretty free hand?—They give the Collector a very free hand.

4310. All that he can reasonably desire?—I think so. In my experience in Bellary we had a very free hand.

4311. You have a large power of remission with regard to wet crops?—Yes, absolute power.

4312. You have practically no power of remission in the matter of dry crops?—No.

4313. Would it be desirable to give you the same power of remission with regard to dry crops as you now have with regard to wet crops?—I do not think so.

4314. Why not?—Because it is so exceptional.

4315. But because it is exceptional is that any reason why you should not have the power?—I do not think there should be any remission on dry crops unless the area affected is very large.

4316. Why should you not have power to remit where remission would advantageously affect a single village?—Because I think sufficient allowance is already made by the Government assessment.

4317. Might it not be that some exceptional calamity might fall on an isolated village and the people be in great distress with regard to dry crops?—I do not think so.

4318. That has never occurred?—I do not think so; I think when there is distress it is in a large area.

4319. You know no case of isolated distress?—No.

4320. Do you have many cases of dry crops in Madura?—Yes.

4321. Therefore you have experience in regard to the matter of dry crops?—I have had considerable experience.

4322. (Sir Frederic Lely.) With reference to the delegation of powers to subordinates of the Collector, you think it should be according to fixed rule: that all tahsildars should have certain powers, and all Sub-Divisional Officers should have certain powers?—I think so.

4323. Would it not be a valuable power in the hands of the Collector to be able to discriminate between his subordinates?—I do not think it is necessary.

4324. But do you not think that it would be desirable that a Collector should have power to say, "You are doing very good work; you are the best man in the Collectorate, and I will give you so much extra power"?—I do not think so.

4325. You do not think that that would have a good effect?—I do not think it would have a good effect; to begin with, I do not think any Collector ought to say that to a tahsildar.

4326. As a matter of fact, I suppose, you do consider some of your tahsildars more trustworthy than others?—I do.

4327. Why should you not show that by your official action; do you not think it would stimulate good work?—I am not prepared to say that.

4328. As a matter of fact, leaving tahsildars aside, there is a great difference between a young Assistant with one year's service, and another man who has had 10 years' service?—There is.

4329. Should you not treat the two differently?—I do not think the matters in which I have recommended extra powers necessitate that.

4330. I am not referring to the matter of extra powers, but to the general delegation of powers?—I do not think that any subordinate ought to be placed in such a position that he knows that he is not given powers because you do not trust him; I think in that case he would be inclined to do bad work.

4331. But presumably the man of one year's service would be the first to admit that he was not so fit as another man who had had 10 years' service?—That is so, but I think it would discourage a subordinate if he knew that he would not be given so much power as another.

4332. Would it not have the reverse effect—would it not encourage him so to act as to justify you in increasing his powers?—I think not.

4333. You do not think it would strengthen the Collector's personal hold on his men to give him the power to discriminate?—I do not think it is advisable.

4334. You think that ordinarily one appeal is sufficient?—Yes.

4335. Is that opinion given in full recognition of the fact that one of the greatest attractions in the Government Service to natives is its certainty?—You are talking now of appointments; I specially except appointments; I am talking of revenue and administrative matters.

4337. At present, the lowest officer can appeal up to Government?—I think so.

4338. And you would retain that appeal?—With regard to menials I certainly would not. For instance, with regard to peons and perhaps the lowest paid clerks, I do not think it is in the interests of good government that clerks who can be dismissed by a Divisional Officer should have the power of making many appeals.

4339. Even though abolishing the right of appeal would have the result of making the tenure of Government office more precarious?—In regard to the lowest paid clerks I do not think there is any necessity for so many appeals.

4340. How would it be to limit the right of appeal as is suggested to one officer above the officer who passes the order, except in cases of reductions and dismissals; suppose you fined the karnam, or your Sub-Divisional Officer fined the karnam?—There is no appeal against that.

4341. There is no appeal whatever the amount of the fine?—No, there is no appeal certainly from the Collector, and I do not think there is an appeal from the Divisional Officer; I am not sure.

4342. Then going higher in the scale, suppose you fined a revenue inspector, may he appeal to the Collector?—Yes.

4343. You would draw the line of appeal there in the case of an order of fine, but if you dismiss him or reduce him then you would give him the full power of appeal as it is now?—That would be in accordance with my suggestions.

4344. That is, you would retain the old power of appeal in the case of reduction and dismissal generally?—Generally, except as I have said.

4345. Is not the Collector very heavily worked?—Yes.

4346. A large part of his duties consists in the management of estates under the Court of Wards?—Mine do, in Madura particularly so.

4347. There are a large number of estates?—Four including one very large one. Three are comparatively small.

4348. That is work in which the Collector's personal interest would be of special value?—Yes.

4349. Have you a free hand in the management of these estates?—No, everything has got to be referred to the Board—practically everything.

4350. That must cumber your work very much?—It does.

4351. Have you a manager for each estate?—Yes.

Mr. H. W.
Gillman.

27 Nov., 1907.

4352. Could you not raise his pay without reporting it?—No, I cannot write off 6 pies without reporting it.

4353. Have you a good deal of engineering work to be done on these estates—making tanks and buildings and so on?—Yes.

4354. How is that arranged for?—The Collector has power in regard to works under Rs. 1,000 I think.

4355. But how do you arrange for the carrying out of the work?—In one large estate that I have to do with we have an assistant engineer and four overseers under him. In minor estates we are limited by our means, and we have an overseer generally.

4356. Is the assistant engineer in the regular list?—No.

4357. He has no hopes of promotion?—No.

4358. What is his pay?—Rs. 150.

4359. I suppose he is not a very efficient man?—No, he is generally a retired Government servant.

4360. He is generally more or less effete?—Effete and not over trustworthy.

4361. To begin with does he make the estimate?—Yes.

4362. And you have to sign it?—Big estimates go to the Executive Engineer for remarks.

4363. But all smaller ones you sign on your own authority?—Yes.

4364. Do you know anything about them?—I have inspected a lot of his works.

4364A. You sign most of them on your own personal knowledge?—I will not say most of them—a certain percentage.

4365. And as to those that you cannot sign on your personal knowledge?—They go through the manager, and I have got to take his, and the manager's, word.

4366. As to the engineer who makes the estimate, can you trust him to measure up?—I have to trust him; I have inspected some of his measurements and found them to be correct.

4367. You have got four estates you say; could you not club them together and pay for an efficient engineer?—It could not be done, because they are at all ends of the district.

4368. But they are all under you; therefore why should they not all be under one efficient engineer?—You mean to supervise them?

4369. To be responsible for the public works. If you made a proposal like that would there be any chance of the Board of Revenue entertaining it?—I do not think so, because they would say that there would not be enough work in the district.

4370. I do not wish you to criticise your superior's experience beyond limits, but the Board of Revenue, I take it, takes a very conservative view of things as a rule—they look with suspicion on any change?—They would not give me power the other day to write off irrecoverable arrears up to Rs. 50.

4371. Now take the question of encroachments; they are settled, are they not, at the jamabandi every year?—Yes.

4372. By the Sub-Divisional Officer?—Yes.

4373. By encroachments you mean certain cases where the cultivator has overstepped the limits of his field?—Yes, on to communal land.

4374. It involves often only a few feet of land?—Often.

4375. And these encroachments occur again and again, year after year?—Yes.

4376. It would be true to say that the cultivator often does not even know that he has been fined for the encroachment; the Sub-Divisional Officer fines him at the jamabandi and he does not even know that he is fined?—I am not prepared to say that; he knows that he has to pay something extra above his ordinary assessment.

4377. But if he knew that he was fined every year he would surely give up the encroachment?—No, that is what he does not do.

4378. Even if he knows that he is to be fined he prefers to go on paying the fine?—Yes.

4379. As a matter of fact some men go on paying fines year after year?—That used to be the case, but under the new law we have the power to eject them, and we are now using that power.

4380. Is the result of the new law that you are gradually clearing your files of these old encroachments?—Yes.

4381. Then, you have the direct charge of a large number of small tanks?—Yes. Minor irrigation works.

4382. Is that a good plan?—I cannot suggest any better.

4383. Whom have you to work through?—The minor irrigation supervisor.

4384. Is he on the Government list—the Public Works Department list?—I am not sure; he is not necessarily so I think.

4385. Is he a reliable man?—I am not prepared to say that.

4386. What pay does he get?—I think he gets about Rs. 80.

4387. You have to trust him to do the work and to make the payments; I suppose you have to trust him all through?—The Sub-Divisional Officers are supposed personally to look after their own divisions and inspect his work and check his measurements as far as possible.

4388. The Sub-Divisional Officer has got no expert knowledge either?—Oh yes. When I was Sub-Divisional Officer I inspected and checked most of my minor irrigation works.

4389. Then you trust chiefly to the Sub-Divisional Officer?—You ought to do so, if the Sub-Divisional Officer does his work.

4390. You have a good many civil suits in your district, I mean suits in the Civil Courts against Government?—Yes.

4391. Who is responsible for making the Government defence in cases of that sort?—The Collector in certain minor matters, particularly in regard to land acquisition; and the Board of Revenue in important matters.

4392. Does the Board of Revenue really mean the Collector?—Not necessarily.

4393. The Collector has the preparation of the case?—The Collector has the preparation of the case, but the Board often requires further information and amends the plaint.

4394. It all has to be done through you?—It all has to be done through the Collector.

4395. Can you give an idea of how many suits you have on hand on the average?—A good many.

4396. That must be a great burden on you?—Yes.

4397. Have you a professional assistant?—Yes, the Government Pleader.

4398. Is he of any use?—He is of very much use.

4399. What is his pay?—He has a retaining fee of Rs. 50 a month, but he gets fees in each case in which he is employed.

4400. For the preparation of the case he does not get paid?—No; he is paid fees for being engaged in a case; the Rs. 50 a month retainer is supposed to cover the preparation of the case.

4401. Suppose a man gives you notice that he intends to bring a suit against Government, you take up the case?—Yes, but I do not consult the Pleader until everything is filed.

4402. It is a very heavy burden on you to have to enquire into the case?—It is.

4403. Afterwards you send it to the Government Pleader?—When the suit has been filed I send the records to the Government Pleader and ask him to prepare the defence.

4404. You have no other assistance than that of the Government Pleader?—No other legal assistance.

4405. All the work is done in your office?—Yes, the report in the case comes from the Divisional Officer and the tahsildar, and I then send the records of the case to the Government Pleader, and ask him to consult the tahsildar if necessary upon the preparation of the case.

4406. You have no such person in this Presidency as a Legal Remembrancer?—No, we have the Government Pleader only.

4407. Is it not a great advantage that the Collector and his Assistants, the District staff, should be as mobile as possible?—Certainly.

4408. Would it not be an advantage if you had a house in every central place so that if any of you wanted to go to that place you might just pack up and go there and find a house furnished ready for you?—We have bungalows pretty well all over the district.

4410. If they are for the convenience of Government officers the cost would be fairly payable by the Provincial Government, would it not?—I have not considered that.

4411. Now as to grading tahsildars. You would not attach the pay of the tahsildar to the taluk?—No, certainly not.

4412. Do not taluks differ very much in difficulty and in the amount of work which they involve?—Some taluks are heavier than others.

4413. And is the tendency to send the most capable men to the most difficult taluks?—That would be so.

4414. Then would not the result of grading the tahsildars, with the pay attached to the taluk, be to impose a sort of fine on the cleverest men so long as they were juniors?—Yes, but you generally promote your tahsildars by seniority.

4415. Suppose your cleverest man happened to be your junior man?—You would not put him over the older men.

4416. But you would send him to the most difficult taluk?—Not necessarily, but that would be the tendency.

4417. So that the result would often be that the cleverest man who happened to be junior, and therefore the lowest paid, would have imposed upon him the most difficult taluk?—It might happen, but not necessarily.

4418. But would that not be the tendency?—Perhaps.

4419. In conjunction with the grading system, would it also be advisable to attach to some of your most difficult taluks a special local allowance, so that a junior man who is sent to a difficult taluk, merely because he is a clever man, should have some consolation, say, in an extra Rs. 50 local allowance?—That might possibly be done.

4420. Would that be on the whole a just arrangement?—Suppose your clever man happened to be paid Rs. 250, you would be giving him too much.

4421. Would there be any objection to that?—I do not think it is necessary.

4422. You do not think that a clever junior man would have reason to complain if he was sent to a difficult taluk?—I do not think so; I think he would be glad of the opportunity of improving himself.

4423. When you are asked whether municipal budgets should be treated in such and such a manner, we have to recognise that the municipalities differ greatly?—Tremendously.

4424. The municipality of Madura, for instance, requires very different treatment from a small mufassal place?—No doubt.

4425. In the case of a municipality like Madura, why should Government interfere in its budget at all?—I do not think the municipality is to be sufficiently trusted to prepare its budget.

4426. What sort of mistakes would they be likely to make?—Over-establishment would be one.

4427. Is there not enough popular feeling to prevent that?—No; there are very apt to be factions.

4428. But you, as Collector in the place, would detect that, if it was tried, at once?—I should not have any power.

4429. But suppose you draw the attention of the Council to it, is there not enough popular feeling to listen to your advice?—Not unless I had the power to enforce it.

4430. Then you think they should be interfered with?—I think the budget should go to Government for sanction.

4431. And the Government should have the power to alter the details?—Yes.

4432. Is local self-government likely to grow under a system like that?—I think that within the budget they ought to be given a free hand.

4433. You would give the Government power to vary the budget?—I am afraid it is necessary at present.

4434. As to village schools, the suggestion has been made that if the schools were entrusted entirely to the villagers, the lower castes and the Pariahs would suffer; do you think there is that danger?—I think the villagers would be quite prepared to listen to advice. I do not think village schools should be left absolutely to the villagers; they might possibly suffer; but if the villagers knew that there was a general eye over them without much interference, the lower castes would not suffer. If the villagers were told, say, by the Collector or the Divisional Officer or somebody of that sort, that they must not neglect the Pariahs, they would not do so.

4435. Would it be sufficient to leave a village absolutely to itself, subject to, let us say, a biennial supervision?—I think it ought to be more frequent than that.

4436. You think it ought to be constant?—Not constant, but I think the villagers ought to know that some interest is being taken in their schools.

4437. But not an authoritative interest?—No, I do not think that is necessary.

4438. Is the District Board in any real sense representative in your district?—I should think fairly so; it represents the different classes.

4439. Does it consist of members of the agricultural classes?—There are some of them on it—not representatives of the agricultural classes, the actual cultivating raiyats; I mean the landlords.

4440. Are they all landlords?—Some are landlords, some are vakils, and some are merchants.

4441. The vakils would not come from the villages, surely?—No, from the headquarter towns.

4442. Do vakils have seats on the taluk Board?—Yes.

4443. Then they must be outsiders?—Well, you may call them so; they are also landlords some of them—most of them.

4444. Would it be good to have a rule confining the taluk Board to genuine residents?—I do not mean that they are outsiders with regard to the taluk; they are residents in the taluk, and generally they own land in the taluk, but they are vakils.

4445. (Mr. Dutt.) A suggestion was made to us yesterday that the tahsildars might be made Gazetted Officers, so as to increase their rank and position and to secure better service. Would you be inclined to agree in that opinion, the power of appointment remaining with the Government?—I do not think that is necessary.

4446. Who has the power of appointment of tahsildars now?—The Board of Revenue. I send up a list every year on the 15th March of the men

Mr. H. W.
Gillman.
27 Nov., 1907.

Gillman.

that I propose to put on the tahsildars' list and on the deputy-tahsildars' list; the Board sanctions that in whole or in part. According to that list I can do whatever I wish with those men. I can promote them according to their seniority; I have full discretion in the matter of selection and promotion.

4447. And you can appoint new men out of that list?—Yes, without reference.

4448. If they were made Gazetted Officers their appointment would rest with the Government?—Yes.

4449. Would that not add to their prestige and their efficiency?—It would not add to their efficiency.

4450. You have referred to some acts of neglect on the part of the Madura District Board in the matter of not taking the necessary precautions as to plague, and in one case in which they wanted to get rid of a Health Officer. In those cases did the Government interfere?—Yes, in the two cases of the Health Officers and the Health Inspectors Government vetoed the action of the District Board. In other cases I had to send and make special arrangements myself, through my Divisional Officer, to improve the sanitation.

4451. In the third case the Government did not interfere?—I think both proposals came up in the budget, and Government ordered the men to be retained.

4452. When was that?—Somewhere about March this year; I may say that that particular municipality on the whole works very well.

4453. The municipality has a paid Chairman?—Yes.

4454. How long has he been in charge of that municipality?—This is the beginning of his second term; he has been so for the past three years.

4455. Previously was it under another paid Chairman?—Yes.

4456. Under the Municipal Act is not the approval of the Government necessary to the appointment of a Secretary?—There is no Secretary to this municipality; this is the only case of a paid Chairman in the mufassal; in other cases municipalities have a Secretary, and the sanction of the Government is necessary to his appointment.

4457. How many other municipalities have you got in the Madura district?—Four.

4458. In all these four you have got Secretaries? I think so.

4459. The law is that a Secretary is appointed and the appointment is subject to the approval and sanction of the Government?—Yes.

4460. Is it your experience that, as a matter of fact, much or nearly all of the municipal work is practically done by the Chairman and the Secretary?—I think that is so.

4461. The budget is prepared by the Chairman and the Secretary?—By the Secretary you might say.

4462. And a large number of duties have under the law been made over to the Secretary?—I think so.

4463. Under that system do the Municipal Councillors get much encouragement to take interest in their own concerns? Suppose the municipality was cut up into committees for different departments, one working on the preparation of the budget, another looking after schools, another looking after hospitals and so on, the municipal committees being thus made to do their own work?—I see no harm in that.

4464. Would that not induce municipal councillors to take a little more interest in their work?—Certainly.

4465. On the whole would that be an improvement?—Probably it would.

4466. You say the District Engineer ought to be subordinate to the Collector so far as irrigation works are concerned?—As concerns the distribution of irrigation chiefly.

4467. You say you have your own subordinates, tahsildars and others, who keep you informed, and the District Engineer has also his subordinates to keep him informed. Do you not think that the Collector is really far more in touch with the people than the District Engineer can be?—I think so.

4468. That he has far more sources of information than the District Engineer?—I think so.

4469. Would you not suggest on that ground that the District Engineer should be subordinate to the Collector?—That is certainly true; I think the Collectors are naturally more in touch with the people, because they deal with the whole economy of the people.

4470. And do not the people as a matter of fact, when they have anything to say about their crops or their irrigation, more naturally come to the Collector?—They do. This year for instance, with regard to the Madura matters I mentioned, the first person they came to complain to was the Divisional Officer; then they came to me.

4471. Would it be a popular measure if the District Engineer, so far as the distribution of irrigation water is concerned, was placed under the orders of the Collector?—It would certainly be popular.

4472. Do the subordinates of the District Engineer have more technical knowledge than knowledge of the actual requirements of the people?—They have of course knowledge of the actual requirements in the matter of water, but they are technical men. They have knowledge certainly of the needs in regard to water, but the difficulty is that they do not always apply it properly.

4473. (Chairman.) From your point of view, the subordinate officers of the District Engineer have not the same local knowledge of the general social economy of the people as the tahsildar or the Deputy Collector?—Certainly not.

4474. (Mr. Dutt.) With regard to the creation of an Advisory Board: you thought that we had got the District Board, and that that could be utilised?—I think so.

4475. And that the taluk Boards could also be utilised as Advisory Boards?—I have not given the matter much thought, but I think that is where the opening might come.

4476. If you vested new functions in these existing bodies would it not be necessary to re-cast the Act and mention that these bodies may be convened or called together for new duties?—You might make a separate Act.

4477. But I understand you to say that you have not quite thought out the matter, and you do not give any decided opinion on that subject?—I have not thought of it specially; there certainly is an opening in that direction with respect to District Boards; the men might be more carefully chosen and elected from certain areas in the district as representing those areas; you might perhaps have to alter the Act with regard to that.

4478. Is it not the fact that they are selected from different areas?—Not always; some areas are not sufficiently represented.

4479. Where there are already village unions under the Local Self-Government Act would you entrust the duties which you have mentioned as suitable for panchayats to the existing village unions?—Yes.

4480. You would not create special panchayats in such cases?—I do not think it would be necessary.

4481. Where you would entrust duties to panchayats and village unions, would you include some sort of supervision of the communal lands, pasture lands and grazing fields?—I certainly would not do that; I have had peculiar experience in that respect. I was in charge of Vizianagram where there had been chaos for 40 years, and where the villagers had been left to themselves. The Government took over the management from the Rajah of Vizianagram after it had been under native management for 40 years. The villagers had been left much to themselves, and the management of village affairs had been left to the village panchayat. When I was introducing the survey settlement, I found that the principal villagers—the panchayat—had appropriated the best land and taken most of the water, and shifted the burden of assessment on their poorer brothers.

4482. My question referred only to pasture land; whether some sort of supervision could not be entrusted to the village panchayat with regard to pasture land?—I do not see the advantage of it; they are not interfered with now with regard to village pasture lands by officers of Government; they are left to themselves.

4483. Who is in charge of those village grazing lands—is it the Forest Department?—That is what you call reserved lands.

4484. A great deal of pasture land is now included in reserved lands?—Yes, that would be under the Forest Department.

4485. In very serious questions of law cannot you refer to some legal officer of the Government at Madras?—The Board of Revenue does that. When my report goes in they consult the Government Pleader at Madras.

4486. The Government Pleader at Madura does directly correspond with the Government Pleader at Madras and get his opinion direct?—No.

4487. He has to get it through the Board of Revenue; that, I suppose, answers all practical purposes?—Yes; I hand it on to my Government Pleader.

4488. So that the present system works smoothly?—Yes.

4489. (Mr. Hichens.) What is the principle on which village unions are appointed; is it based on area or population?—It is chiefly population.

4491. Are there a large number of unions in your district?—Yes.

4492. How many?—I could not tell you, but a great number.

4493. A large proportion of your district would be covered by village unions?—I would not say that—not a large proportion of the villages. I think there must be about a thousand villages, and I do not suppose there are more than 30 or 40 unions.

4494. And the reason for that is?—Because the population is not sufficient.

4495. Do areas often petition you to have a union?—No, they do not like it; nobody ever wants a union.

4496. Because it means local taxation?—Yes; I have never heard of a single case of a village applying to be made a union; it has got to be forced upon them as a rule.

4497. You cannot suggest any way of making these unions more popular?—No, the taxation is the unpopular part of it.

4498. It has been suggested to us pretty generally that panchayats should be established. Is there much difference in essence between a panchayat and a village union?—They would have the care of the same things.

4499. But the inference from what you said is that they would be equally unpopular?—If they had to levy fees on the villagers they would be.

4500. Would you suggest that you could appoint a panchayat without giving them that amount of financial responsibility?—I have proposed that they should be given power in criminal and civil work; they would have the Village Improvement Fund; if taxation was not permitted that Fund might be added to by the Government or by the District Board. It would be necessary to impose some taxation, and they would have to have the power of imposing taxation.

4501. Therefore you think the panchayat would be equally unpopular?—If it had to impose taxation it would be.

4502. And you think it would have to impose taxation?—I am not prepared to say that; they might get small grants from the District Board to keep them going. If you wanted to do anything big with a large village I think you would have to have taxation.

4503. Is it obligatory on the union to impose a house tax?—Yes.

4504. And you would not make it obligatory on the panchayat?—So much depends on the size of the village; if it is a big village I think they would have to do it in order to do any good at all.

4505. Now with regard to the taluk Boards, is it not the case that their budget is sent up to the District Board, who incorporate it in theirs, and the District Board may modify it in certain respects?—Yes.

4506. In what respects?—The District Board cuts down their allotments when it cannot supply them; the taluk Boards give us a statement of their requirements and we modify that in consideration of the needs of the whole district, according to what we can afford.

4507. Has not a District Board a more or less fixed revenue?—Yes.

4508. It has a definite proportion of the land cess?—Yes.

4509. What about the Government contribution; has it a definite proportion of that?—Our revenue is not from Government contribution; it is from land cess.

4510. The Government do not give you a contribution?—They do as a matter of fact to Madura, but that is a special contribution.

4511. The suggestion was made to us yesterday that it would be desirable to abolish the District Board and give the powers that are now exercised by the District Board to taluk Boards. What do you say to that suggestion?—I do not think the Presidents of the taluk Boards would be able to exercise the same supervision over their subordinates as is at present exercised by the District Board Engineer and the President and Vice-President of the District Boards. I think the existence of the District Board is advisable in order to maintain the efficiency of the establishment in the whole district at the same level.

4512. I understand you to imply that you thought that Collectors should be appointed by seniority?—Yes.

4513. You do not think it is desirable that they should be appointed by merit?—I think not; I think every man ought to get his chance.

4514. He would have his chance probably in an acting capacity for some little time. Government would very soon find out whether he was capable or not?—Yes.

4515. Could not the Government very easily find out before he was appointed; by that time he will have been some 13 years in the service; will not practically all the responsible officers in the Government by that time have formed their own opinion about him?—They will have a general idea of his efficiency but I do not think you can say until you have tried; you cannot say that he would be efficient until you have tried him.

4516. Suppose it has happened that the responsible officers have found out after the Collector has been appointed that he is no good; that has occurred?—I suppose it has.

4517. What do they do?—They cannot do anything.

4518. What do you suggest?—I think the only thing is to retire him—to give the Government more power of compulsory retirement.

4519. You are not prepared to anticipate that change by allowing the appointment to be made by merit?—No, I am not.

Mr. H. W. Gillman.
27 Nov., 1907.

Mr. H. W.
Gillman.

27 Nov., 1907.

—More careful selection of men who are not likely to have to be shifted, and so on.

4520. That is to say you would not take a man who is likely to want to go on leave presently?—No, if it was possible to avoid it, and I think more could be done in that direction.

4521. Are not many transfers caused by a rather rigid adherence to seniority in making acting appointments?—I think that is so.

4522. Suppose a Collector went on leave, would it not be possible to put in the senior Sub-Divisional Officer in the district, assuming him to be regarded as fit?—Yes, that might be done if he is a fairly senior man—if there is not so much difference between him and the man that ought to go in.

4523. Suppose the Sub-Collector was a man of six years' service—you say that ordinarily a man does not become a Collector for 13 years; but suppose there is a short vacancy, say three months, would you then put in the Sub-Collector of six years' service?—Yes.

4524. And if the Collector went for six months' leave?—That would be a matter for consideration; I do not think I would do it then.

4525. You would rather bring a man of 12 or 13 years' service from some other district?—I think it would be necessary.

4526. That largely adds to the number of transfers?—Yes.

4527. Suppose you had the other system of making acting appointments locally; as far as the interests of the Service were concerned, would not things balance themselves in the long run; you might lose promotion at one time, but you would gain it at another?—I suppose in balance it would come to the same.

4528. Then what is the objection to the proposal?—I am not sure that a man of six years' service would be able to run a district for six months.

4529. It varies with the individual, but speaking generally at what time do you say an average Civilian would be capable of running a district for six months?—I should think after about 10 years' service.

4530. Then when you have got to the 10 years' limit would you allow the acting promotion to be made locally?—I would.

4531. Has most of your service been in Tamil districts or Telugu?—Telugu.

4532. How long had you been in a Telugu district when you were transferred to a Tamil district?—From 1895 to last year.

4533. Did you find that your knowledge of Tamil was rather rusty?—It was slightly rusty.

4534. As a general question, do you find from your experience that officers are frequently transferred from Telugu districts to Tamil districts?—I think so.

4535. Would it be possible to keep officers more within the same language area?—I think it would.

4536. How long have you been in the country?—19 years.

4537. What then is your experience as to the power of the ordinary Civilian—the Divisional Officer and the Collector—to converse with the raiyats in their own vernacular?—I do not think it is adequate.

4538. In your experience, which has now lasted a considerable time, have you noticed a falling-off or otherwise? Should you say that the Divisional Officer of to-day is able to speak the vernacular more freely or less freely than you found the Divisional Officer did when you came out?—I should say he is much about the same; I should certainly not say they are worse; if anything, they are better, I think.

4539. But there is a deficiency?—Yes, owing to overwork.

4540. Is it at all due to the fact that English is more largely used?—English is more largely used; when I was in Vizianagram I did not know whether a man spoke in English or Telugu; I spoke to him in Telugu.

4541. You think the fault lies not with the officer but with the system of work?—Yes, magisterial work especially.

4542. Could it be remedied by giving an officer nothing to do but learn the language at the beginning of his career?—I think he learns the language sufficiently well now; the only thing is that he has not the opportunity of keeping it up.

4543. Does he not tour a great deal?—Yes.

4544. Does he not talk to the people then?—He has not the time when he is touring.

4545. Do you mean to say that when you go through a village you do not talk with the people?—You talk with the people as far as you can.

4546. If you have once an accurate knowledge of the language cannot you keep it up?—It has been my experience that you can.

4547. You were speaking of the tahsildar and his heavy account work; is it not the fact that there is a taluk head accountant who is in special charge of the accounts, and the tahsildar's work is only supervisory?—Yes.

4548. Then does not that largely meet the point?—It does help him considerably; still, he has a great amount of supervision and he has got to personally supervise particularly the accounts of revenue collectors, the revenue accounts, in order to see that the collections are got in; every one of these he must supervise himself so that he may not be held responsible for insufficient collections.

4549. To put it briefly you think the help given him is not sufficient?—I think not. I think he is not prepared to trust the head accountant; he is not of sufficiently high standing.

4550. You would replace the taluk head accountant by an officer of higher standing?—By an assistant tahsildar.

4551. Do you think the village accounts are too numerous?—I am not prepared to say that.

4552. How many of them are there?—Twenty-six I think.

4553. You think they are necessary?—I think they are necessary.

4554. Assuming that an account itself is necessary, is it too complicated as a matter of fact—are there unnecessary columns within the account or anything of that sort?—My experience of essential village accounts is that they are not too complicated.

4555. Some questions were asked about the personal grading of tahsildars; would not one advantage of that be that a tahsildar, who had rendered good service to the State and was getting a little past his prime, could, as a reward for his services, be given a light taluk without loss of pay?—Certainly.

4556. Otherwise, under the present system, he would be in charge of the heaviest taluk?—That is so.

4557. And either you would have to reduce him or put up with inefficient work in a heavy taluk?—Yes.

4558. On the question of local allowances; suppose the local allowance were attached to the taluk, would that not be regarded practically as an advance in salary?—Yes.

4559. And there would be a tendency to send the senior men to the taluk in which there was local allowance?—Yes.

4560. Are you in favour of giving Collectors power to suspend the collection of revenue pending the orders of higher authority as to remission in the case of dry crop land for instance?—I think there would be no harm in that.

4561. If the Collector considers that a crop has failed he remits the assessment on that crop?—Yes.

4562. But when there is an arrear in the accounts which you consider irrecoverable, because the raiyat has left the village or is too poor to pay, that matter has to go to Government?—Yes.

4563. Even the Board of Revenue cannot remit?—No.

4564. Do you think that is necessary?—I do not think it is necessary to go to Government.

4565. You would give powers to the Board of Revenue?—Yes.

4566. Would you give any power to the Collector in the case of small sums?—You might give him power up to a certain limit.

4567. Does it not sometimes happen that a sum appearing in the Government accounts as due might have been really collected?—Yes.

4568. Has the Collector power to remedy that?—No.

4569. Surely he might have that power?—He might.

4570. Then with regard to the Court of Wards, the estates that fall under a Collector's charge may be of quite different characters; one may be a big and important estate and another quite a small one?—Yes.

4571. In regard to the small estates would you give the Collector full powers of management?—He certainly might be given very much fuller powers than at present; I think he might almost be given full powers.

4572. And with regard to the larger estates?—I think the budget ought to go to the Board, but within that he ought to be given power to manage.

4573. The budget of every estate ought to go to the Board of Revenue, but when the budget is allotted he ought to be given a free hand?—Certainly.

4574. Whether the estate is a large one or a small one?—I think so; I do not see any difference.

4575. Except that one is on a bigger scale?—Quite so.

4576. You speak in your schedule of giving the Collector power to make appointments of temporary clerks and so forth. Would you see any objection, within the budget allotment of each district, to giving the Collector power to entertain clerks permanently?—I would rather get sanction for anything permanent.

4577. The Chairman mentioned the case of local loans to agriculturalists, and you explained how you framed your budget estimate. Suppose the season suddenly altered; suppose drought came on the district, might not your budget estimate prove inadequate?—Yes.

4578. You would then go up to the Board of Revenue for an extra allotment?—Yes.

4579. Have you had experience of that?—Not exactly of that, but I have had experience this year of requiring extra money for loans, which will involve the necessity of asking the Board for extra money this year; I have not had it for this year.

4580. My point is that if there was an emergency, if money was available, you could get extra money?—I could.

4581. Probably by transfer from another district where circumstances were better?—Yes.

4582. As regards the District Boards, does not the Government exercise a very considerable control?—Yes.

4583. Not merely has your budget to go up, but you have to go up over the alterations of allotments?—Yes, and you cannot take any money out of balances. As to allotments within the district grant, I do not know whether it is necessary to go up.

4584. If for instance you find that you have put down for roads more than you can spend in the year, and you would like to add to the education expenditure, can you transfer from roads to education without sanction?—I am not sure; I do not think so.

4585. So long as your whole budget is not exceeded would you be in favour of your being empowered to make such a transfer?—Certainly.

4586. Do you consider that the control of outside departments is unnecessarily strict in regard to Local Boards—for instance by the Director of Public Instruction in the matter of education?—I am inclined to think that Local Boards should be left to themselves in the matter of elementary and primary education. I do not see why the Education Department need interfere in that matter.

4587. Would you have the District Board's budget go up to Government?—I do not think that is necessary. As I have said already, the whole budget must go up.

4588. But suppose in scrutinising the budget the Government were struck by an extremely small grant for education, might they not intervene in such a case?—The Government might intervene, but that would not necessarily involve the interference of the Director of Public Instruction. I think your point was as to whether he should interfere.

4589. The Director of Public Instruction and his subordinates should not interfere with your management of particular schools—the abolition of one school and the construction of another and so forth?—I do not think so.

4590. Then with regard to your lump provision for education in the budget, should the Director of Public Instruction have the right of criticism?—I think Government is quite in a position to pronounce upon that; I do not see why the Director should be asked.

4591. But is not the Director the legitimate adviser of Government in educational matters?—Well, he might have that power of criticism—there is no great objection to it—I mean criticism in the lump, but not in regard to details.

4592. It has been suggested that Government should take over the whole of education within the Local Board areas; do you agree with that?—I do not think so. I think the Local Boards might be allowed a much freer hand in the matter of education.

4593. You think that primary education would be better promoted under a Local Board system than under a direct departmental system?—I think so.

4594. You say that primary education is more expediently left in the hands of the Local Boards; does that apply to secondary education also?—It might; in Madura we have lower secondary schools. I think District Boards could look after lower secondary education quite as well.

4595. That is not education of a very advanced description?—No.

4596. Would you say the same as to high schools?—I would not say as to that; I think they might be separate Government schools.

4597. The lower secondary education like primary education might be safely left to the Local Boards?—Yes.

4598. Who appoints the members of the taluk Board?—The taluk Board President, with the approval of the District Board President.

4599. To whom would you give the final power?—The District Board President.

4600. Half the members of the District Board are elected and the other half nominated?—I think in my District Board two-thirds are elected.

4601. As to the nominated ones, some are ex-officio members?—Yes.

4602. The others are appointed by the Government?—Yes, on my recommendation.

4603. Would it not save time if you were to nominate them and gazette them straight away?—I do not think there is any reason why I should not; Government always approves.

Mr. H. W. Gillman.

27 Nov., 1907.

Mr. H. W.
Gillman.
27 Nov., 1907.

4604. You mentioned a contribution from the Government to the District Board. Does the District Board take all that money itself or does it distribute it to the taluk Boards?—It distributes it to the taluk Boards at its discretion.

4605. To what is the money applied generally?—Rs. 32,000 of that goes to what is called Periyar cross-roads; that is special Government works in the district; the rest is applied to repairs of roads throughout the district.

4606. I do not quite understand about the Rs. 32,000.—In the Periyar area, which has been newly started, new roads are necessary, and the Government has put the cost of that on the District Board, and they have ordered that out of the Rs. 80,000, that we get, Rs. 32,000 are to be spent on these cross-roads every year.

4607. It is an area in which roads have been newly made, owing to the irrigation policy of the Government, and you are constructing the roads there?—Yes.

4608. You also get the benefit of the land cess on that area?—Of course.

4609. As regards the control of municipalities, ought such powers of outside control to be now exercised by Government or might they be delegated to the Collector? Could the Collector be allowed to pass the municipal budget for instance?—I think not; I would not let him pass the municipal budget.

4610. Are not some of your municipalities quite small?—Yes; even in those cases I would not let the Collector pass the budget.

4611. In the case of the smallest municipality you would have the budget go up to Government?—Yes, because Government has an opportunity I think of seeing that the administration of the municipality is more or less homogeneous, which the Collector would not have.

4612. Is it necessary that the administration of the municipalities should be homogeneous?—I mean, with regard to superfluity of establishment, a Collector might be very apt to make mistakes.

4613. Who is the more likely to know whether the establishment is too much—the Collector on the spot or the Government in Madras?—The Government in Madras I think.

4614. By comparison—comparing it with the statistics of other municipalities?—Yes.

4615. There was a suggestion as to whether the smaller municipalities might not be placed under the District Board?—I do not see any reason why they should at all.

4616. You do not approve of it?—I do not approve of it.

4617. As regards the Advisory Board, that would be purely advisory?—Purely.

4618. The Collector would not be bound to accept its recommendations?—No.

4619. You suggest that the District Board might act as an Advisory Council also?—It might.

4620. There was a question as to fresh legislation; would any new legislation be necessary?—The amendment of the present Act would be necessary in order to secure proper representation of each area in the district.

4621. That is because you are not satisfied with the District Board quâ District Board?—Yes.

4622. You might amend the Local Fund Act for that reason, but, apart from that, is it necessary to make any legislation in order to give any additional advisory functions, which are not administrative at all, to the District Board; might it not be done purely by executive order, by telling the Collector that on certain matters he should consult the District Board?—I suppose it might.

4623. As regards the question put to you about village unions, you said that they were unpopular because they were expected to raise taxation?—Yes.

4624. The suggestion other witnesses have made to us in regard to the panchayats was not in the direction of fresh taxation, but rather that they should have the distribution of money from Government. If it was that, and not fresh taxation, would the panchayat be unpopular?—No.

4625. Would you be in favour in case of a revenue remission of giving the remission to the village in lump and letting the panchayat distribute it amongst the individual raiyats?—Certainly not.

4626. Your reason?—My experience in Vizianagram.

4627. Do you think you can always rely upon your subordinate agents departmentally?—I think you can rely upon them much more than on the head of the village.

4628. But the person who recommends remissions now in the first instance is the head of the village?—Are you talking of general remissions?

4629. I am speaking of a case of general flood or general drought which has caused considerable loss over a large area?—I had a case of that kind in Kistna in 1896. I had the lower part of the taluk swept out by a flood; I inspected three-fourths of the land myself; I consider that it is the duty of the Divisional Officer to do that.

4631. But if you had not had time to make a field to field inspection but had had time to make only a village inspection, what would have happened?—I cannot contemplate that; I think it is absolutely necessary for the Divisional Officer to make a field to field inspection of a fair percentage.

4632. There are a large number of Shanars in your district?—Yes.

4633. There has been very acute animosity, has there not, between them and the higher castes?—Yes; the Sudras caste; very bitter feeling is existing now.

4634. If you had a system of village panchayats managing the schools and so forth, would the Shanars be fairly treated do you think?—I think the only way to manage that would be to have a separate school for the Shanars, or a separate panchayat, if necessary. That would be a matter for consideration.

4635. You could not safely trust the Shanars to the sympathies of the upper caste panchayats?—No, I am not sure that you could—or vice versa.

4636. You would have to make some special arrangement?—In that tract you would.

4637. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) You said that you thought a Collector took two years to learn his district: what do you take to be the minimum time that a Collector should stay in one district?—4 to 5 years.

4638. Do you think that in the last two years he could do everything he could usefully do—having learnt the district in the first two years is the remaining two years sufficient time for him to put all his ideas into practice?—I do not know as to that; in 5 years probably he would be able to do all he wants.

4639. If the tahsildars were de-localised, how far would you go?—Only within the district.

4640. So that in that case it would be unnecessary to alter the system of appointments at all?—Quite so.

4641. As to the Executive Engineer and the Collector; who is the next man to the Executive Engineer in the taluk?—The Sub-Divisional Officer; he has got an assistant engineer in one or two taluks, and then he has what they call a Sub-Divisional Officer.

4642. How many assistant engineers have you got in the district?—I am inclined to think that in Madura we have only two assistants.

4643. How many Sub-Divisional Officers have you?—Four.

4644. He has two of what we may call the descending grade as against four of yours?—Yes.

4645. Next to that he has what?—The Sub-Divisional Officers.

4646. How many?—in the Periyar area there are four: I think it is one for a taluk; I am not sure.

4647. What is their pay?—Rs. 100 to Rs. 200.

4648. You would call them the same class of officer as your tahsildar?—No.

4649. You say a municipal budget ought to go to the Government; do you mean that there is any necessity for it to go beyond the Board?—It does not go to the Board at all at present; the Board has nothing to do with municipalities.

4650. There was a suggestion made as to the abolition of the District Board and the glorification of the taluk Board; the idea underlying it was that you would get a much livelier local interest amongst the non-official members, because everything would be much nearer home. Do you think that is an advantage which you can set against the disadvantages you have mentioned?—You get as lively an interest now as you would under any system, I think.

4651. You do not think anything of that argument?—No, and I do not like the idea of abolishing the District Boards.

4652. As to the vernacular, you said the control of magisterial cases interfered with the officer studying the vernaculars. I do not understand that, because all the questions are given in the vernacular: must it not be continuous practice to him?—But he does not question the witnesses himself; the interpretation is always done by a clerk; of course, he listens to it.

4653. He does not put his own questions?—I suppose some magistrates do.

4654. Still the proceedings are all in the vernacular?—Yes.

4655. And he must understand the whole thing?—I suppose so.

4656. Then he has three or four hours a day listening to the vernacular, and all sorts of subjects must come to him?—That is so in criminal work.

4657. So that I do not understand why his magisterial work should interfere with his knowing the vernacular?—Because he is not compelled to speak in the vernacular, and I am not sure that many magistrates do.

4658. But is not the language of the Court the vernacular?—The official language of the Court is English, I think.

4659. Would it be a good thing to make it vernacular?—It might be done; do you mean that the records should be in the vernacular?

4660. Under the Criminal Procedure Code my recollection is that there are two records; there is the record of the notes in the magistrate's own hand, and there is a full record by a clerk in the vernacular?—The magistrate is given power by the Government to take down evidence in English always.

4661. He does that under the Code?—There is no other record kept.

4662. Not in a warrant case even?—No.

4663. Would it be in any way a help to the maintenance of vernacular knowledge if the local Courts were bound to use the vernacular?—Yes, if they were bound to write the evidence in the vernacular, but it would be a terrible task.

4664. They could not write it themselves in the vernacular?—It would be a useless duplication to have two independent records.

4665. Is the power to make the record in English given at once, or does it come when a magistrate has had certain experience?—That power is specially given to him by Government after they are satisfied of an officer's knowledge of the language.

4666. Then you are inclined to think that in consequence of that his knowledge of the vernacular begins to deteriorate?—That is my opinion.

4667. Therefore you think that that is a discretion which might be given much more sparingly. How does an officer record the evidence before he is given that discretion?—He records it in English and the clerk records it in the vernacular.

4668. Then you said in answer to a question about village accounts that you did not consider the essential village accounts were too complicated or too numerous; I did not understand the force of the word "essential"?—I think the latter accounts are chiefly statistical; when I say "essential" I mean the accounts actually dealing with the revenue and accounting for the revenue.

4669. I suppose you must keep statistics?—Yes.

4670. Especially of irrigated villages?—The latter accounts are accounts of live stock and statistics of that sort—rain registers, vital statistics, and so on.

4671. When speaking about the ward's estates you said you thought the budgets and so forth ought to go up from the Collector to a higher authority. Why do you think that? Cannot Collectors be trusted to look after a ward's estate without supervision?—I should prefer to know that my budget had been approved; I suppose he could be trusted, but, for my own part, I should prefer to have my budget approved and my responsibility thereby lessened.

4672. Would you object to the responsibility?—I would not personally.

4673. A question was asked you about placing the municipalities under the District Board, and I am not sure that that was quite fully explained. Assuming that by legislation or otherwise you developed the District Board so as to serve as an Advisory Council, in order to enlarge the sphere in which the people came into the local administration, the question was whether, if that were done, you might not take power so as to enable the people themselves gradually to exercise a certain proportion of the control that is at present exercised by Government officers; in fact you would put into commission, into the hands of the District Board, a certain amount of the control which at present necessitates references, that has to go either to you or to the Government?—It would come to me as a matter of fact all the same.

4674. But the people would have more hand in it; it would be an increase in local self-government—a certain increase at any rate?—If you had that, you might just as well give the Municipal Councils absolute discretion themselves.

4675. You must have an outside body of control?—Then I do not think the District Board is the proper body at all.

4676. You think it could not be made fit?—I do not think so.

Dewan Bahadur R. RAGOONATH RAO was called and examined.

4677. (Chairman.) You were for some time the chief ministerial officer of the District Courts in the Tanjore district?—Yes.

4678. You were also Deputy Collector of the Tanjore, Kurnool, Trichinopoly, Coimbatore and Madras districts?—Yes.

4679. Then you were the head Sherishtadar of the Madras Board of Revenue, and a special Land Commissioner for acquiring lands in Tanjore, Kurnool, Trichinopoly and in the town of Madras?—Yes.

4680. Then you were in charge of the Abkari Department?—Yes.

4681. Finally you were for some time Prime Minister to Maharaja Holkar of Indore?—Yes.

4682. So that you have a considerable experience of local Government?—Yes, I have some experience.

Mr. H. W. Gillman.

27 Nov., 1907.

Dewan Bahadur R. Ragoonath Rao.

27 Nov., 1907.

Dewan
Bahadur
R. Ragoonath
Rao.

27 Nov., 1907.

4683. You say that you do not think that provincial Governments ought to possess any borrowing powers of their own?—That is my opinion.

4684. Did you when you were Prime Minister to Maharaja Holkar have any such powers; had the State of Indore any borrowing powers; could they raise loans?—No.

4685. Not for State purposes?—No.

4686. They never did?—No, we had plenty of money.

4687. So there was no necessity to borrow?—No.

4688. You suggest that your experience as head of the Abkari Department made you think that Government was rather too rigid in its methods, and had too much an eye to revenue and too little regard to the wants of the population?—Yes, the object was more revenue than anything else.

4689. Can you give us any example of that?—We had for many years a system of manufacture of arrack by a number of families in Madras; then the drinking propensity was not so much encouraged as it was afterwards. When this began to take place those people were dismissed, and a European contractor was given the power of manufacturing and establishing a distillery and selling the liquor. Since that our sales advanced, and from the effects of that, as the abkari officer going to inspect the shops, I very often found that drunkenness had increased as compared with what it was before.

4690. Was any attempt made to put down that drunkenness?—It was beyond my powers; my powers were limited by law, and I could only go so far as the law allowed. I was able to prevent spirit of higher degree being sold, or diluted spirit, and my care was only to see that it was not so done; I had no power over drunkenness.

4691. I suppose this was some time ago?—This was in 1872 or 1873.

4692. You say that the influence of the Forest Department has not been very good?—That is so.

4693. Would you explain that a little to us?—I am a landlord, and I am the President of a District Association. The work of that Association is to represent the grievances of the people through higher authorities, and I certainly have means of knowing things that take place in different quarters of the district. As the result of complaints that we received, our Association had to look into the matter and enquire whether there was any real foundation for the grievance or whether it was only imaginary. On looking into it we found that it was not imaginary, but that it was to the disadvantage of the people. That induced us to find out whether it arose from the bad law or order of the Government of India, or from mismanagement from below, or from misconstruction of the orders of the Government of India. After very searching enquiry we found that the orders of the Government of India were perfectly good, and that if they had been honestly enforced there would have been no room for any complaint whatever, but we found that in practice the enforcement of those orders was not good, and the result was that agriculture suffered immensely. Almost every day the agriculturalist had to spend some time other than for his own agricultural purposes, in order to get out of the difficulties into which he was drawn owing to the enforcement of those rules. Thus we had to represent the matter to our Collector, but our Collector was powerless; he could do nothing in the matter, so we applied to the Board; there we got nothing, and then when we took it up to Government, the Government agreed with the Board. Then we applied to the Government of India, and did not get anything there. All we asked the Government of India to do was to enforce their own orders; we did not ask for any privileges, we did not ask for any favour; we did not ask for anything at all. All we said was, "You have said so and so; see that it is properly executed." We got nothing from the Government of India, and we then represented the matter to the Secretary of State, and I am sorry to say that we got nothing from the Secretary of State also. Every single tree within a village is put down as a part of the forest, although the forest is nowhere to be found within two or three miles of that tree.

4694. What you represent is that very often land is reserved as forest which is not forest at all; that is your point?—Yes; that that is declared to be forest which was not ordered to be declared to be forest by the Government of India, and that that part which the Government of India reserved for the people was all declared forest, and agriculturists were put to an immense deal of difficulty.

4696. When they were smaller were they as far as you could judge more efficiently managed?—Yes; when I was Deputy Collector the taluks were smaller; but afterwards when I came back I found the number of taluks had been reduced. There was too much work for the tahsildar; he could not supervise and do the work as satisfactorily as he used to do.

4697. You think that if the taluk areas were made smaller the work would be better done?—Certainly.

4698. Where are you living?—I used to live at Madras; now I am living at Kumbakonam.

4700. And you think there would be plenty of people in a village union who might exercise such larger powers?—Yes, they ought to be so constituted that they can exercise those powers for the benefit of the people.

4701. And you think from your experience, they would be so exercised?—Certainly.

4703. Was the right of appeal freely exercised there?—Yes, it was very very simple and very effective. The Maharaja used to drive in the evening, and one of the *raiya*t went up and asked the Maharaja to stop; he stopped, and then they began to converse together as if the two were mere *raiya*t; sometimes a *raiya*t brought forward some complaint or other; if it meant some loss of revenue—the Maharaja was very careful about his revenue—he used to give the *raiya*t a very good dinner and send him away.

4704. Everybody was satisfied?—Yes; at least temporarily.

4705. That is what you would call the exercise of personal influence?—Yes.

4706. (Mr. Dutt.) Have you given any opinion as to restricting the right of appeal?—I think it ought to be restricted in particular instances and not in others.

4707. Can you briefly mention in what instances it ought to be restricted?—When it is personal I would restrict it; when it involves a principle or the general good of the people I would not restrict it.

4709. Have you any clear remedy to propose as regards the grievances of the people with reference to forest administration?—My proposal is very simple—carry out the orders of the Government of India.

4710. Did you say that under the orders of the Government of India no parts which are not actually forests should be reserved as forests?—The Government of India said that major forests ought to be entrusted to the forest officers, and all minor forests they should have nothing to do with—that the village community should not be interfered with, and the village forest ought to be allowed for the use of the people. That seems to be the abstract of the Government order, and I cannot think that any order could be more just than that. These gentlemen, the forest officers, have been appointed and are well paid, and they may as well make all these bleak mountains green by exercising their powers; but whenever they come they interfere within a village to the disadvantage of agriculture.

4711. You propose that only major forests should be reserved by the forest officers?—Yes.

4712. And that they should have no control over the minor forests?—No.

4713. You say the taluks now are too big and their size should be reduced?—Yes.

4714. Have you any suggestion to make with regard to the tahsildars?—By the increase of taluks the number of tahsildars would be increased. The tahsildars that are now appointed are more educated men than they used to be, and so they might prove better officers of the taluk than is the case now.

4715. You have no suggestions to make about their pay?—No, I think they are well paid.

4716. And you do not suggest that they should rank as Gazetted Officers?—That does not make much difference in my view.

4717. (Mr. Hichens.) Are the village unions popular with the villagers?—The unions as now formed are not popular unions. The ideas of the West and the East are blended together, and the mode of forming these unions is not the popular mode, so that in some places the unions are not popular. If the unions were formed as they used to be before, they would be more popular. What I understand by a union is village autonomy—either one or two or three villages blended together, formed into a village Government, conducted by the people, selected or elected according to circumstances; then they would be very popular.

4718. Is the main thing the villagers dislike the local taxation—the house tax?—They do dislike it.

4719. That is the main thing?—They dislike it, but I think their dislike could be got over if it was properly managed.

4720. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) What do you consider is the full area that a tahsildar could manage properly as a taluk?—It depends upon the character of the country. In a taluk where there is an immense deal of cultivated lands the area must be very small. In an area where there is a good deal of waste land and only a little cultivation, and particularly irrigation, the area might be larger than the other.

M. R. Ry. S. ANNASWAMI AIYER AVARGAL was called and examined.

4721. (Chairman.) You are a Deputy Collector at North Arcot?—Yes.

4722. Will you state briefly the nature of your duties?—I am the Treasury Deputy Collector of North Arcot. As such I am in charge of the district treasury, the Account Department, stamps, postage labels, yeomiah, pensions, the district press and records. I am in the position of a Personal Assistant to the Collector and dispose of routine papers of the office. I am in charge of the audit of the Special and Local Fund accounts of the district and I control the working of the taluk treasuries, and conduct the technical examination of the sub-treasuries in the district at least once in two years. I am also the Vice-President of the District Board and Superintendent of the sub-jail at the district headquarters.

4723. And from time to time you examine the sub-treasuries?—Yes.

4724. Do you assist the Collector in his dealings with the whole of the district, or do you hold administrative charge of any portion of the district?—I have no administrative charge of any portion of the district assigned to me except the treasury.

4725. I think you heard the evidence that was given by the first witness to-day as to writing off irrecoverable arrears?—Yes.

4726. Is that not a pure formality?—Yes; the arrears that are eventually ascertained to be irrecoverable are written off the accounts; when a raiyat has left the village or his whereabouts are not known, and there is no probability of proceeding against him, the arrears are written off as irrecoverable. It is more or less a formal thing. The Collectors get all the information from Divisional Officers and tahsildars, including inspectors, and send a statement to the Board; they compile it and then submit it to Government. The regulations require that Government sanction shall be obtained.

4727. It is a purely formal correspondence?—Yes; mostly the sanction is according to the Collector's recommendations.

4728. Would you tell us something about your duties as Vice-President of the District Board; what do you do as Vice-President?—It depends upon what powers the President delegates to the Vice-President.

4729. Do you prepare the budget?—Yes, the office prepares it, and I check it.

4730. You have a full acquaintance with both the needs and the powers of these Boards?—Yes.

4731. Do you think that on the whole the powers are well exercised?—Yes; but I would propose the abolition of the District Boards, because the business is twice done, once by the District Board and again by the taluk Board. When taxation is raised (that is land cess) the District Boards appropriate half of it. They merely exist for the purpose of trunk roads, as they are called, and for the sake of vaccination. I think the Collector could exercise supervision over the work of taluk Boards, as he does in the case of municipalities.

4732. Suppose you got rid of the District Boards would you hand over any of their powers to the taluk Boards?—(Whatever power the District Boards have the taluk Boards would exercise in the ordinary course.

4733. Do you think that the capabilities of the officers employed by the taluk Boards would be lower than those of the officers employed by the District Boards?—These engineers are not very capable men, nor does the office require very capable men, because the work consists of making roads, the construction of bridges and buildings, etc., which could be well attended to by the graduates who are turned out of the Civil Engineering College here; they would look after the work better and more cheaply.

4734. Could all the work now required to be done by the District Board Engineer be perfectly well done by engineers or other people employed by the taluk Boards?—Yes, assisted by overseers.

4735. Would that throw any extra work on the Public Works Department engineer?—Even as it is, works beyond a certain amount are required to be submitted to the Superintending Engineer for check. If that system continues and officers of the Public Works Department are also required to give help, when necessary, to the Local Fund Engineering Department, it will be quite ample.

4736. How many members are there on your District Board?—Thirty-two.

4737. Are they drawn from the whole district?—Yes.

4738. And they fairly represent the opinion of the district?—Yes, more or less.

4739. Are they drawn mostly from one class?—No, they are representative, in a way, of all interests.

4740. Would you increase the number of members of the taluk Board if the District Board was abolished?—It might be raised.

27 Nov., 1907.

4741. How many members are there on the taluk Boards now?—The minimum is 12, the maximum is 24 I believe.

4742. How many are there in practice?—Between 12 and 16.

4743. Are most of the members of the District Board members of the taluk Boards in your district?—Yes.

4744. So that the Boards not only do double duties but the actual members do duplicate duties?—Yes.

4745. You think it would simplify correspondence and get rid of routine if the District Board disappeared?—Yes. We might have to construct bridges or build hospitals or some big works; all that could be carried out as at present; for those purposes the Collector could arrange for a contribution to be made by the other taluk Boards, the funds of the several taluk Boards being treated as a common fund. The agency for the execution of those works would be the officers of the taluk Board in which those works are necessary.

4746. You would leave the District Officer as at present?—Yes.

4747. And you would leave the Collector a superintending power over the work of the taluk Boards?—Yes.

4749. Do you manage to get about your district pretty well; do you go through the whole of your district on tour?—Yes, I go on inspection duty.

4750. You accompany the Collector when he goes?—No, I go by myself; that is what they call the technical examination of the sub-treasuries; I am required to conduct it once in two years at least.

4751. The rest of the time you remain at headquarters?—Yes.

4752. Therefore you do not necessarily know the people who live in the district very well?—I come in contact with them in various ways.

4753. How long have you been in your district?—Three years; before that I was in the Revenue Board as second and first assistant.

4754. You heard what the witnesses have said about Advisory Councils and the revival of panchayats; do you agree generally with what has been said?—I have embodied my views in the following statement.

Executive Officers have not sufficient opportunities for personal contact with the people and they do not use the opportunities they have. The large increase of work thrown on them by the calls of various departments for information, statistics, reports, etc., hardly leaves them sufficient time to move among the people. The frequent transfer of officers is another reason. Insufficient knowledge of the vernaculars is the third. This, however, does not apply to native Deputy Collectors. A fourth reason lies in notions of dignity or natural reserve or shyness. The first two reasons suggest their own remedies. As regards the third, junior Civilians have two languages to pass in and the standard in each does not, in my opinion, require raising. The defect lies in the fact that the knowledge is not kept up after the examinations have been passed, and means should be devised to prevent this. If the system of passing orders on office notes is put a stop to, at least in Divisional Offices, it will enable the officer to be more conversant with the vernaculars. As regards the fourth, no hard and fast rule can be laid down, but steps should be taken to impress on the officers their duty to move freely among people and ascertain, at first hand, their wants and wishes.

The administrative staff, i.e., Collectors, Divisional Officers, and tahsildars, undoubtedly requires strengthening. Some of the districts, divisions, and taluks are unduly large, and should be split up. The sizes of revenue inspectors' ranges should also be reduced and their number and pay increased. The strength and pay of the taluk establishment are still inadequate and require to be improved. There is no need to alter the present system of promotion of graded officers which is based entirely on merit after a certain stage, even after the grant of larger powers. The selection of tahsildars and deputy tahsildars is generally based on merit.

The recently introduced system of retaining junior Civilians in their charges irrespective of promotions should be continued and care should also be taken to see that, as far as possible, an officer is retained in a division for at least five years. In the case of Deputy Collectors, their pay being personal, frequent transfers could hardly be necessary. In the case of tahsildars and deputy tahsildars, also, the pay may be made personal in each district, the Civil Service Regulations being suitably amended.

District Boards should be abolished. They chiefly exist for the sake of trunk roads and vaccination, appropriating for these purposes one half of the total land cess collections of the district, but the matters can well be looked after by the taluk Boards concerned. Collectors who are ex-officio Presidents of District Boards are now doing an amount of unnecessary work which the abolition of the Boards will relieve them of. One taxation is raised for both the District and taluk Boards and the same work is done for the district by the District Board and for the taluks by the taluk Boards. There is nothing of importance to be done in the name of, and for, the whole district. Every local concern can be attended to by the taluk Board within its sphere. It may be objected that big works, such as bridges, causeways, hospitals, etc., which may be within the means of a district fund as a whole, will be beyond the means of taluk Boards. But the taluk Boards concerned can carry out the works, other taluk Boards in the district being made to contribute in some proportion which may be fixed by the Collector under the control of Government. Another possible objection is that Government will have to deal with a large number of Local Boards. But even as it is, taluk Boards correspond direct with Government on several matters, and if extended powers of final disposal are given to the Boards, the objection will lose much of its force. The additional establishment required for the taluk Boards may be provided from the saving effected by the abolition of District Board establishments including the District Engineer and his staff. The taluk Boards may, in view of the increased powers and responsibilities, be constituted partly by election and partly by nomination. The Collector can occupy a position similar to that he now occupies in respect of municipalities.

It is not possible to make every village a union, but there is an imperative necessity to improve the sanitary condition of every village. A fund obtained by the levy of house tax in all villages would be an unpopular measure in the present state of the country; and its proceeds could hardly cover the cost of sanitary measures in every village. As sanitation is a matter of vital importance, Government may contribute towards it or allow a portion of the contribution now being made for education and communications to be utilized in providing each village with a staff of totties, the number being fixed with reference to the area of the village site, the number of houses, and population. The establishment will form a part of the village staff, and its work may be supervised by the village panchayats subject to the supervision of the taluk Boards.

If Collectors and Divisional Officers would only move freely with people and ascertain their wishes or wants, there is no necessity for any Advisory Councils. Local Boards, municipal Councils, and various Associations already exist in the District. After a few months' experience, Revenue Officers can also come to know qualified native gentlemen whose opinion will be useful. The disinclination of officers to consult them is at the root of the evil. This can only be remedied by the creation of recognized Councils and insisting on District Officers consulting them. To begin with, the present Local Boards and municipal Councils, which are fairly representative in rural and urban tracts, may be declared as Advisory Councils. It should be open to those Councils to offer advice not only when asked but on their own initiative. Their advice should be taken in all matters affecting the general welfare of the raiyats in the district or division, e.g., revision of settlement, water rate, etc. The advice so given should be recorded in formal proceedings, whether acted on or not.

No area is constituted into a municipality in this Presidency which is not sufficiently large and populous to require separate administration. Such urban tracts have enough resources and qualified personnel within themselves to cope with the needs of municipal administration. Between Local Boards as they are now constituted and municipalities, I see no connection such as to warrant the latter being placed under the supervision or control of the former.

It is desirable and possible to give village communities greater powers in the disposal of petty local affairs. Village panchayats may be formed to which the disposal of petty civil suits up to a certain monetary limit may be entrusted, but if the system is to be successful, the concurrent jurisdiction which district munsiffs now have over such suits should be taken away. The trial of petty criminal cases which are now triable by village magistrates may be entrusted to this body. This body may also be utilized for such revenue matters as kudimaramat, etc., and for sanitary matters. Factions exist in villages, but the difficulty can be overcome by a judicious selection of men for the panchayat and by making the office tenable for a fixed period, say three years.

There ought ordinarily to be only one appeal. If in that appeal the original order is confirmed, there ought to be no further appeal. If, however, the original order is reversed or modified, a further appeal should be allowed, but the decision of this appellate authority should be final. The opinion of the Commissioner, i.e., Board, should be supreme in irrigation matters except so far as regards purely professional questions.

4755. You say that there is a disinclination on the part of officers to consult the existing Local Bodies; what causes that disinclination?—There is no obligation placed upon them to consult; they think they can act on their own discretion. Some Collectors do consult privately as regards various matters, and where they do so I have known cases in which they obtain beneficial results. A number of them do not do it, and in those cases it would be better if there was an Advisory Council formally constituted.

4756. What I take to be really your view is that the Collector and the Divisional Officers should be required to consult, more freely and more often than they do now, the views of the taluk Boards as they would be constituted under your scheme?—That is my view; my opinion is that it would be beneficial.

4757. It would bring the Divisional Officers into close touch with the people of the districts?—Yes.

4758. And that would suffice for the present?—Yes.

4759. You admit that on the whole municipal administration is pretty good?—I have no personal experience of municipal administration; I think there is no necessity in this Presidency for municipalities to be looked after by the District Boards.

4760. With regard to the village communities, you would like to see the revival of the panchayat?—Yes.

4761. Would you in places where there is already a village union substitute the panchayat for the village union?—This might be done; but unions and panchayats are different institutions, under different controlling authorities.

4762. (Mr. Hichens.) What, roughly speaking, is the size of the village unions to-day in area or population?—There are now 22 unions in North Arcot with a population ranging from 3,000 to 15,000; the revenue ranges from about Rs. 600 to Rs. 7,000.

4763. Are the panchayats which you advocate to replace village unions or to be in addition to them?—They will be quite apart from the village unions; I want to have a panchayat in every village.

4764. In every village however small?—Yes.

4765. You would have first of all the panchayat, and then the village union apart from that?—Yes. The panchayat would not be under the taluk Board; it would be under the Revenue Officers for the trial of civil and criminal cases.

4766. Would it not deal with many of the functions that the village unions deal with to-day?—No, it will exist as a separate body.

4767. Take education for example?—The panchayat will have nothing to do with that unless the taluk Board, who have to look after education, entrust it to them.

4768. And as to sanitation?—The panchayat might be treated as a Sanitary Board because I want to have an honorary body to look after sanitation. I would have the village officers and 2 or 3 independent raiyats to look after the sweeping of the village and to keep it clean. It would save a lot of expenditure which Local Boards are now put to on account of sanitary defects.

4769. (Mr. Dutt.) You are the Vice-President of the District Board, and as such it is a part of your duty to prepare the annual budget?—Yes.

4770. Under the Act, does the Collector as ex-officio President exercise all executive power?—He does.

4771. And under the Act does the official President of the District Board appoint all permanent servants?—Yes; of course, the taluk Boards have their own powers.

4772. And the official President has the power to fine, suspend, and dismiss all District Board servants?—Yes, subject to certain limitations placed by the Government.

4773. Does the official President generally give out contracts for works for the maintenance or repair of roads?—It is the Engineer who does that.

4774. Is the Engineer under the orders of the official President?—Yes.

4775. Then virtually, from the making of the budget to the execution of all District Board works, the whole work is practically done by the official President and his paid subordinates?—Yes.

4776. Do you think that system is likely to encourage non-officials to take much interest in District Board work?—As a matter of fact they take very little interest.

4777. My question is, would this system encourage them to take any interest if they have no power?—No, it will not.

4778. In order to encourage them to take more interest would it be advisable to have Sub-Committees of the District Board and distribute the work among these Sub-Committees?—It would be better.

4779. You have suggested the abolition of District Boards; might that interfere with the uniformity of administration?—No, we have got several District Boards now. The same principle applies to taluk Boards.

4780. Do you not think that under those circumstances the primary education in one taluk may be different from the primary education in another taluk?—Yes, there is the Collector and the Educational Officers, who will see that the system is uniform.

4781. Are there not roads now which run through several taluks of the same district?—Yes.

4782. If the repair and maintenance of roads was entrusted entirely to the taluk Boards, is it not likely that the first portion would be repaired and the second left unrepaired and the third repaired again?—The Collector would see to that. The raiyats will be able to represent that one portion of the district is bad and the other is good, and the Divisional Officers or the Local Fund engineers of the taluk Boards would take care to bring about uniformity. It is not a difficult thing.

4783. But suppose they did not agree; suppose one taluk Board says "we will repair this," and the next says "we have no money to repair our portion?"—I think these are all extreme cases; they would not say so.

4784. A road generally runs through several taluks?—Yes.

4785. And it is not likely that two taluks would agree to repair the roads running through them?—But (except the trunk roads) there are always taluk Board roads now which go through several taluks; there is no practical difficulty. The same thing will hold good in the case of trunk roads also; there are what we class as taluk Board roads, only they are not confined to particular taluk Boards; they also run into other taluk Boards, and what applies to these roads will apply to the trunk roads.

4786. Have not the District Boards control over those roads?—They have nominal control.

4787. But under your proposal they would have no control, because there would be no District Boards?—There would be no District Boards.

4788. Therefore you suggest that matters should be decided by conference?—And also by the Collector giving advice. Everything is under his control, and he could advise the taluk Boards and engineers and they would remedy it.

4789. Therefore a great deal more work would be thrown on the Collector?—I do not think so; practically I think no additional work will be thrown upon him, as he would be relieved of the District Board work.

4790. Under your proposal the Government itself would have to deal with a vastly larger number of bodies—a larger number of units?—Each unit of a taluk Board is now also separate in all matters; they pass their own resolutions and forward them to the Department of the Secretariat, and our office only acts as a post office.

4791. Is it not the fact that at present each District Board is considered a unit by the Government for the purpose of self-government?—It is now considered as a unit.

4792. And those units would be multiplied under your proposal?—The same number will continue.

4793. So far as the Accountant General is concerned would he not have to keep accounts with regard to a larger number of bodies if your proposal was to be carried out?—There is an officer attached to my office as Treasury Deputy Collector and I audit the accounts.

4794. The Accountant General does not audit?—No; he only conducts the annual inspections: an officer comes and examines the district accounts and the engineer's accounts and the taluk Board's accounts too.

4797. But has he, or has he not, the power to convene a meeting simply for the purpose of taking their advice about crops or irrigation or any other matter?—He has not got the legal power perhaps.

4798. In order to give him the legal power fresh legislation will be necessary?—Yes.

4799. (Sir Frederic Lely.) Practically I take it there would be no distinction between a village panchayat and a village union; you would not have them both co-existing?—They will not be one body; the village union, as you call it now, is under the control of the Local Board, but the panchayat would be for the trial of civil suits and criminal cases and would be directly under the control of the Board of Revenue.

4800. Under this arrangement you would probably have one body representing the village community, to which you would entrust all these duties?—Yes, the duties of unions.

4801. You have mentioned that the village unions are very unpopular because they levy the house tax?—It is not so much that, as the incidence, of which they complain.

4802. They are forced by Government to levy the house tax?—Until they realise the usefulness of things there is always certain to be a complaint about taxation.

4803. They levy a house tax not of their own free will but because they are forced to do so?—Because the interests of the village population demand it.

4804. Is not that the very way to make so-called self-government hateful?—I will not say hateful; provided help was given by a provincial grant it would be different.

4805. When you take a village and say "For certain essential purposes you must levy a house tax and you must admit an establishment of chuprassies or whatever you call them," is not that associating self-government with very distasteful measures?—Self-government based on additional taxation is no doubt a thing which is disliked generally.

4806. How would it do to take a village and impress upon it that better sanitation was absolutely necessary, but to leave the people, at first at any rate, by way of experiment, to themselves, and instead of levying a house tax to say "You may pass a rule requiring that every householder shall keep the ground opposite his own house clean and so forth"?—That would never work.

4807. Do you not think it might have a chance of working; would not the people like it better?—I have tried that system in my own village. I did not want to raise the money for an establishment, and I proposed to levy a small tax; I proposed to the villagers that for every quantity of paddy sold they should contribute a small sum to a separate fund, and out of that fund have a separate establishment for keeping the village clean. I tried the experiment but I found the taxes were not levied, and there was a lack of interest.

4808. But after all, those proposals, however excellent, were your own proposals; they did not come spontaneously from the villagers themselves?—No.

4809. Do you not think it would be worth while to try the experiment of saying to a village, "Sanitation is one of the most important objects that can be had in view; you must arrange to keep your village clean, and if at the end of a certain time you do not do it yourself by your own methods we shall prescribe the means"?—But you levy a land cess; out of the proceeds of the land cess the Act professes to promote sanitation; yet there is always a plea of want of funds.

4810. Might we not leave it entirely to them by way of a trial?—I do not think it would work unless you provided them with the establishment out of the provincial grant, and you constituted a Sanitary Board, as it were, to look after them.

4811. Is it not the fact that they hate an establishment only less than a house tax?—They would welcome an establishment provided they had nothing to pay.

4812. A man with belts and so on?—Perhaps they would welcome that.

4813. You think it is necessary to begin with certain methods indicated by Government officers?—Yes; until education improves and the people recognise the importance of sanitation you must make an appeal to their eyes and not to their ears.

4814. You propose to establish an Advisory Council, or to give the District Board advisory powers by legislation?—Yes, legislation will be required.

4815. Will that be of any use to these people? If the members did not come voluntarily to offer their opinion, their opinion would not be worth much?—They would not volunteer if there is no certainty of their being heard or the possibility and probability of the advice being acted upon.

4816. But would there be anything gained by establishing the Advisory Council on a statutory basis?—To begin with, departmental orders might do, but if that experiment did not succeed I should resort to legislation and make attendance compulsory. I would go a step further only after the departmental system failed.

4817. You would establish your Advisory Council, and you would order the Collector by executive orders to convene it and consult it?—Yes.

4818. Is not that practically what every good Collector does even now?—Even now some of them do it.

4820. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) Speaking about the vernaculars, you allude to some system of office notes which you think helps to destroy the knowledge of the vernaculars; will you explain what that is?—In submitting the vernacular papers the clerks make notes in English about everything; then the Divisional Officer passes orders on these notes and then it is that the orders are issued.

4821. You mean to say that the Sub-Divisional Officer does not refer to the original papers?—No, I do not think he does. Of course, the office is held responsible for the correctness of those notes; if there is any complaint enquiry is made, and the clerk who makes the wrong translation is punished.

4822. Does it not put very great power in the hands of the clerk?—There are general complaints that the clerks may bias the opinion of the officer by the way in which they translate things, instead of the officers seeing the originals themselves.

4823. I believe there is generally now a dispensation given to the more senior Divisional Officers to have a record of magisterial cases made only in English; has that any effect on the vernacular knowledge of the officers?—Certainly; if they heard it in the vernacular and recorded it in English, with the help of the munshi here and there, that would also improve their knowledge. I would object to their being given powers to record in English only with the help of an interpreter. The other system involves work, no doubt, but it is a means of keeping up the vernacular and facilitating work in it.

4824. How do you mean facilitating work in it?—It gives them the meaning of certain phrases better than if they wrote in English what the interpreter renders in English. The law allows also the system of their writing notes in English while the deposition is taken by the clerk in the vernacular.

4825. But in every case the magistrate has to make a note in his own hand?—Yes.

4826. And while he is doing that the clerk is able to put down the vernacular?—Yes.

4827. How would the abolition of the dispensation of the vernacular record delay the work?—The Magistrate does not record it in the vernacular himself.

4828. Not he himself, but while he makes his English note of it his clerk is able to make the vernacular note?—His knowledge of the vernacular is not so perfect as to write down everything in the vernacular.

4829. Do you mean the clerk's knowledge is not perfect?—No; if he is required to write the whole thing in the vernacular it will delay the work; the clerk takes it in the vernacular, and the Magistrate takes a note of it in English.

4830. The point is, the clerk cannot take longer over his vernacular note than the Magistrate takes over his English note?—Both of them work together; they adjust it somehow; he allows some time for the clerk to complete it.

4832. Who is the President of the municipality as a rule?—The Chairman is appointed by Government.

4833. The Chairmen are not officials?—Most of them are not officials.

4834. I will put it the other way round; if your taluk Board were appointed, the Collector would no longer be President or Chairman of any taluk Board or municipality in the district?—He need not be.

4835. He might be outside?—He would be outside; he would be the officer of the Government in all these matters to watch the proceedings of these Councils.

4836. At present you say these taluk Boards send up a certain portion of their proceedings to Government; they do not go to the Board—they go past the Board to the Government?—Yes.

4837. And the same in regard to municipalities?—The same—through the Collector.

4838. If your system were put into effect, is there any reason why all these proceedings should go up to the Central Government?—Some system of check is required.

4839. But need that somebody be the Local Government?—Yes, I would like the power to be with the Local Government.

4840. Not with the Collector?—The Collector is the advisory hand, but I would not put everything into his hands; he would be the adviser of the Government.

4841. You do not think the controlling power should be given to the Collector?—In some matters you might give it to him, but in certain matters of control I would reserve the power to the Government.

4842. Do you not think it better that the control should rest with one of the members of the Board of Revenue who travels over the whole Presidency?—They have nothing to do with it at present.

4843. But I am asking you whether you wish this system or whether you think you could get a better?—Whether it is the Local and Municipal Department of the Government or the Board makes no difference; there must be some sort of supervising authority beyond the Collector.

4844. Have you any preference at all about it?—The Government would be better I think.

4845. (Mr. Meyer.) There are now about 22 or 23 District Boards?—Yes.

4846. If you had independent taluk Boards you would have about 80?—Yes.

4847. Would it not enormously increase the work of Government to deal independently with these 80 Boards?—They deal now with all these local bodies.

4848. At present each taluk Board makes its own budget. Those budgets are considered and modified where necessary by the District Board?—Yes.

4849. They are consolidated by the District Board?—Yes.

4851. You say the Collector may consolidate the budgets, but may he alter them?—Subject to the final orders of the Government he might propose alterations.

4852. Then you would empower the Collector to make alterations in the budget, but not finally?—Yes.

4853. Similarly with regard to the administration report; there is one administration report in the whole district for Local Fund matters, representing the consolidation of the four or five reports. You say there again the Collector should consolidate?—He may be left to consolidate it.

4854. But as the Collector would ex-hypothesi not have been concerned with the working of the Local Fund throughout the year, would not such consolidation be difficult for him?—He is on tour, and he knows the requirements of the district, and it would not be very difficult for him to do it.

4855. But he would no longer have that intimate knowledge of the transactions of the taluk Boards that he obtains at present as District Board President?—He would not have that intimate knowledge.

4856. Under your system each taluk Board would receive the whole of the land cess and other local fund receipts levied within its area?—Yes.

4857. Are there not grave inequalities within large districts—are there not divisions which are large in point of area but poor in point of revenue?—There are.

4858. At present such a division is helped by a grant from the District Board?—Yes.

4860. Under your system they would no longer do that?—The District Board fund is only an appropriation of the land cess of those Boards. The other taluk Boards may as well be asked to contribute, the whole being treated as a district fund. We find that some of the villages are not able to afford the village establishment; then it is the District Fund that comes to their aid. The same thing would apply there.

4861. Then you would have a system of pooling the resources of the Boards?—Yes.

4862. At present the taluk Board has only the right to one-half of the cess, and the rest is pooled, but if it has the right to the whole of the land cess, how is the pooling to come in?—That would be adjusted to the requirements of each taluk Board.

4863. That is, the Collector is to have power to say to a particular taluk Board "You are not to have the whole of your resources, but you are to contribute a quarter of them to the adjoining taluk?"—He could make adjustments from time to time as regards the appropriation which, with the sanction of the Government, should be binding on these bodies. Of course, as it is now, the difficulties are only met by what the District Board appropriates from these funds; that is, they take half the land cess.

4864. But at present the District Board has statutory power to do it?—The same provision may be made; the law has to be altered anyhow, and we have only to put in a provision to that effect.

4865. Would not much more friction be caused by a system of pooling carried out by an outside agency—the Collector—than is at present caused by the District Board, on which the taluk Boards are all represented, and which represents the common interests of the district?—But the Collector is not likely to do it unfairly; you can trust to the Collector to do it in a fair way.

4866. You think a taluk Board which found a large amount of its money taken by another taluk Board would accept the position cheerfully and with absolute confidence in the Collector?—They would also be helped in turn; suppose there was a hospital to be built or a bridge to be constructed they would also get a contribution, and in the natural course of things matters would adjust themselves; it is only mutual help.

4867. As to the Advisory Council, do you desire to make all its proceedings public?—Whether public or private there must be a record.

4868. Might there not be certain confidential matters which could not be conveniently recorded or discussed in a large body of people?—Then the Collector might not convene a meeting for that purpose at all; it is optional with him.

4869. It is to be optional with the Collector to consult the Advisory Council?—I also provide for the Advisory Council taking the initiative. The Collector can convene a meeting and record what they say, and if he thinks that the steps that he takes ought not to be divulged it would be for him to say.

4871. Therefore he need only consult them or not as he thinks fit?—As far as he is concerned, yes.

4872. Suppose he does consult them and they do not agree with him?—He is not bound at all.

4873. He can over-rule them or not as he likes?—Yes.

4874. Have you had much to do with municipalities?—No.

4875. You could not say whether it would be desirable to give the Collector the powers of control that are now vested in Government or some of them?—I am not in a position to speak with the same knowledge.

4876. You were for a long time in the office of the Board of Revenue?—Yes.

4877. You therefore have a very good idea of the character of the work that goes up to the Board from Collectors and goes to Government from the Board?—Yes.

4878. There are a large number of routine matters that at present go up?—Yes.

4879. A large number of matters, for instance, that go from the Collector to the Board of Revenue, which the Secretary disposes of on his own authority and never troubles the members with?—That is what they call the routine papers.

4880. Also the Board has to send to Government a large number of more or less routine matters?—Quite so.

4881. Some of these restrictions are due to law?—Yes, to laws and Codes.

4882. Others to the Standing Orders of the Board of Revenue?—Yes.

4883. Has the Board of Revenue power to alter its own Standing Orders without the sanction of the Government?—Yes, but a copy of those orders goes to the Government, and it is open to the Government to object to them or not.

4884. Has it in practice interfered much?—Very rarely.

4885. You say the promotion of graded officers is based on merit; what do you mean by that?—Until the Civilian reaches the position of a Collector he is promoted by seniority; it is after that, when he comes to be made a member of the Board or is promoted to the High Court, that I think that merit should come into play. Until then I understand, unless there is something definite against the officer, they go by seniority.

4886. That you regard as fairly satisfactory?—Yes.

4887. Then I will take Deputy Collectors; in their case the promotion goes by seniority, does it not?—Yes; I think when there is a black mark against a certain officer they also overlook him; a Deputy Collector may be passed over for certain misconduct.

4888. For inefficiency we will say?—I do not think they will take account of inefficiency, because it is a matter which would differ in different Deputy Collectors.

4889. You say when a Deputy Collector has been found guilty of misconduct he is not promoted?—Generally the Local Government takes care not to promote him.

4890. But apart from that the promotion of Deputy Collectors goes by seniority?—Up to the Rs. 500 grade.

4891. What higher grades are there?—Rs. 600 and Rs. 700.

4892. Those are supposed to be selected by merit and not by seniority?—Yes.

4893. Are the men who would go into the Rs. 500, Rs. 600, or Rs. 700 grades generally senior men, or men sent up not according to seniority?—Up to the Rs. 500 grade they go by seniority; I have known instances when men have been passed over.

4894. There are certain proposals to create further sub-divisions and taluks now under consideration?—Yes.

4895. Speaking generally, do these proposals go far enough or would you go further yourself?—They were proposed after a good deal of discussion and after the ascertaining of various facts and figures relating to the work in each taluk.

4896. These proposals would meet the requirements of the case?—Yes.

4897. You have mentioned the sanitary assistant to the District Medical Officer; you say he is appointed at the expense of the Local Boards, and there is no sanitary work for him to do?—Yes, the Board does not know what to do with him; it finds it impossible to give him any work; he adds to the work. He writes reports and says that the sanitation of a village is bad and requires improvement; then he sends up periodical reports; these add immensely to our work; if we issue orders thereon to the tahsildar he sends orders to the inspector, and nothing is practically done except the creation of work.

4898. But is it not interesting to you to know that that particular village is in a good, bad, or indifferent condition?—It is no satisfaction to know, without any means of remedying it.

4899. You mean you have no money?—Yes.

4900. What about the village unions?—There are only 22, and even in their case there would be poverty of funds.

4901. If there were funds the officer might be useful?—Certainly, if the establishment were provided.

4902. Has he anything to do in municipalities?—No, they have their own sanitary establishment.

4903. Do you know at whose instance this officer was appointed?—The Sanitary Commissioner of the Government of Madras.

4904. When a clerk sends up an office note, is it not accompanied by the records of the case and by such facts as are necessary for reference?—Yes.

4905. Then the office note is a précis for the guidance of the Divisional Officer?—It is supposed to be.

4906. And there is nothing to prevent the Divisional Officer from reading the papers?—If he is so inclined.

4907. Does the office note as a rule give facts, or does it suggest an order that should be issued?—It depends upon the individual clerks; some of them venture to do it; some are afraid to do it.

4908. But take an energetic and industrious Divisional Officer; would he be influenced by the office note?—I do not think so.

4909. (Chairman.) From your knowledge of returns, are they accurately compiled?—As far as possible.

4910. I mean the crop returns, vital statistics returns, and so on?—My impression is that there is delay as regards the statistics of cultivation. Take the month of May; the returns may be brought in in the month of June or July; of course, the karnam takes some time too. Unless there is close supervision and the karnam is brought to book for such small delays, inaccuracies may take place. There are also instances in which cultivation has not been brought into account at all.

4911. So that the returns are not accurate?—I do not say not accurate—not very accurate I will say.

4912. (Mr. Meyer.) A previous witness produced a large number of returns prescribed by the Board of Revenue, yearly, quarterly and monthly. Were you in the Board's office when these returns were last revised?—Yes.

4913. What year was that?—They were revised by a Committee; I do not think that full effect was given to the recommendation of that Committee.

4914. That revision was in 1898 or 1899; originally there was a Committee of sherishtadars; other officials came in subsequently. Was there a general tendency to increase returns or reduce them?—To reduce them.

4915. There was a considerable reduction?—Yes.

4916. In your personal opinion, could further reduction have been made?—Yes, I think it is possible.

Mr. D. W. G. COWIE, I.C.S., was called and examined.

4917. (Chairman.) You are acting Inspector-General of Police in the Presidency of Madras?—Yes.

4918. Will you state briefly the organization of the Police Department in Madras?—The Inspector-General's office is in charge of a Gazetted Officer of the rank of Superintendent called the Assistant Inspector-General. There are 5 officers of the rank of Deputy Inspector-General. Of these, one is the Commissioner of Police for Madras City, and another the Deputy Inspector-General in charge of the Criminal Intelligence and Railways. The other three officers are in charge of ranges which divide between them the districts of the Presidency. Officers of the rank of Superintendent number 34, and Assistant Superintendents 36. Forty appointments of Deputy Superintendents have been sanctioned, of which 21 have been filled up. There are 379 inspectors, 728 sub-inspectors, 89 sergeants, 2,505 head constables and 19,239 constables in the mufassal police. The strength of the Madras City Police is 1 Commissioner, 2 Deputy Commissioners (who are Superintendents of Police), 1 Assistant Commissioner (who is a Deputy Superintendent), 13 inspectors, 61 sub-inspectors, 29 sergeants, 219 head constables and 1,376 constables. The powers of the Inspector-General are defined in section 9 of the Madras Act XXIV of 1859. He is charged with the general direction and control, the distribution, government and equipment of the force. In the execution of these duties he is subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. The fulfilment of his obligations necessitates frequent tours of inspection. The Inspector-General has certain powers assigned to him under the financial codes of sanctioning expenditure, and he can sanction for departmental execution building works not exceeding Rs. 2,500 in cost each. There are no rules as to what orders should be submitted to the Government for approval, but alterations involving expenditure or the conditions of service of officers would necessarily be so submitted.

Mr. D. W. G.
Cowie.

27 Nov., 1907.

4919. You are charged with the discipline and interior economy of the police force?—Yes.

4920. With what department of the Local Government do you correspond?—The Judicial Department.

4921. Do you correspond direct with the Chief Secretary?—Officially, and demi-officially as well.

4923. I think you are not merely a police officer?—No, I am a member of the Indian Civil Service, with 22 years' service.

4924. You are frequently of course on tour in the Presidency?—Yes.

4925. Have you got any general suggestions to make to us as to the possibility of so decentralizing the work as to enable it to go both smoother and quicker?—One idea I had was that there might be a reduction of appeals.

4926. Personal appeals or disciplinary appeals?—Personal appeals and other appeals—general administration.

4927. First of all let us deal with personal appeals; do you mean appeals of constables or officers under your control from small fines or punishments?—Yes.

4928. Would you follow the line taken by many other witnesses to limit that to a single appeal above the officer originally inflicting the punishment?—Yes, except perhaps in cases of dismissal.

4929. You would give a double appeal there?—Yes, I think I would allow a double appeal there.

4930. Or would you give a single appeal to a much higher authority?—Do you mean a single direct appeal to the higher authority than the officer next above?

4931. Yes.—I think I would give a single appeal to the officer next above, and then to one above him again.

4932. That you think ought to satisfy justice in every case?—Yes, I think so.

4933. What were the other kind of appeals?—I really meant general appeals on questions of general revenue administration; that is not a police matter at all; the personal appeals are the only ones we have to deal with.

4934. I understand you are below the strength of your force in the Madras Presidency—below the strength now sanctioned?—We are gradually working up to our sanctioned strength; different instalments have still to be sanctioned; there is one up now before the Government of India.

4935. Would you tell us what your relations are with the Director of Criminal Intelligence?—We have practically no relations.

4936. Is it advisable that he should enter into relations with you as the superior officer of police in this Presidency, or are you more happy under an independent system?—I think it would be better to remain under the present system.

4937. Do you ever correspond with the Inspectors-General in other provinces?—Every now and then we ask them what their practice is; for instance, we had a large correspondence about exchanging men for railway work on frontier railway stations.

4938. Do you have conferences among yourselves?—There was one some years ago; it was before my time—before I came into the province.

4939. Do you have a great number of statistics and returns to prepare?—No, I do not think so; we are not overburdened with them.

4940. Nothing that causes undue correspondence?—No, I should not say so from my experience of the office.

4941. How long have you been in the office altogether?—Eight months.

4942. Are you satisfied, so far as you have seen, with the relations between the District Superintendents and the District Magistrates?—Yes.

4943. There is no suggestion that you can make as to removing delay in certain cases?—No; I was District Magistrate for a number of years, and I never had any trouble with my Superintendents of Police.

4944. Their relations are happy so far as you know?—I think generally they are.

4945. Now with regard to officers subordinate to the District Superintendent, are you satisfied that their relations with the people in their districts are fairly good and speedy, and that no unnecessary delay occurs in dealing with crime and so on?—Of course, it is difficult to say how far things will be satisfactory, because we are in a transition state at present.

4946. You do not feel that you can usefully offer any remarks at this point?—Not with regard to that side of police work.

4947. What side can you offer any suggestions upon?—I have not any serious suggestion to make. There are a few little points in which I think Government might give the Inspector-General a free hand.

4948. Will you tell us what those points are?—One is the question of the appointment of unpassed men—men who have not passed the prescribed tests for certain appointments; the Inspector-General I think might be given a freer hand in that respect.

4949. Have you had lately any instructions or regulations issued by your Government restricting or enlarging your responsibilities as Inspector-General?—No, nothing.

4950. Do you know whether the Police Commission recommended any increase or restriction of these responsibilities?—One result of the Commission's work was that the Commissioner of Police for the City of Madras was placed directly under the Inspector-General.

4951. That is a purely local change only affecting the City of Madras, not the police force generally?—Yes, it affects the city only.

4953. But what is supposed to be the division of duties in the Presidency—the District Magistrate is responsible for the repression of crime in the district?—The District Magistrate is responsible for the peace of the district.

4954. And for the suppression of crime?—Yes.

4955. And you for the organisation of the force in the district?—Yes.

4956. We were told yesterday that the District Superintendent of Police was wanting in the influence he ought to have because his powers were too restricted. It was suggested that the District Superintendent ought to have power of petty punishment, petty rewards, promotion up to 14 or 15 rupees, power of transfer of inspectors within the district. What have you to say to that?—I think he might promote constables to head constables for instance; I think it would be a good thing if he had the power of giving petty rewards so as to reward a man on the spot and promptly.

4957. Suppose you agree with him about those sort of things, who could do this; would you have to get the sanction of Government?—The Deputy Inspector-General can sanction rewards to a certain extent.

4958. Suppose you wanted to alter the constitution so that the District Superintendent could sanction these things, whose authority would be necessary?—I should have to ask the Government

4959. Another suggestion that was made was that the system of placing the Superintendents and Assistant Superintendents in charge of a district was not so good a one, as attaching an Assistant Superintendent to a district and allowing the Superintendent to use him as he thought best?—My own opinion is that the Assistant Superintendent should have his own range.

4960. The suggestion was that being in one office they could be in and out, could tour more easily, and that the Assistant Superintendent's office should be abolished?—I do not think that that would work very well. After all, the Assistant Superintendent has not much office work; he has a very small office.

4961. You are not in favour of the change?—No.

4962. You said you were in a state of transition; how does that come about?—The additions to the strength consequent on the recommendations of the Police Commission are being gradually introduced.

4963. Have you got all the sanctions that you want for that?—We have got the main sanction; now the re-allocation of the district forces is going on in instalments; the first instalment is now with the Government of India.

4964. What do you mean by the re-allocation?—Doing away with the old stations and boundaries, and forming new circles, and adjusting the new force to them.

4965. Have you got any of the new force yet?—Some of the proposals have been carried out; the reserves are now practically complete, and higher rates of pay of the superior staff have been introduced; half the new rank of Deputy Superintendents has been recruited, and so on.

4966. But you really have not carried out any of the re-organisation in the police stations?—No, we have not got any of the new circles or new stations yet.

4967. Have you got any new sub-inspectors yet?—Yes, we have 789 at present.

4968. What is the aggregate number to be?—1,444.

4969. Have you had any difficulty about that?—No, we get crowds of applicants.

4970. But I mean any difficulty with the Government of India?—No, none whatever.

4971. Do you know whether the Government of Madras have accepted the recommendations of the Police Commission generally?—Yes, I think they have.

4972. I understand that recently the uniform for the whole of India has been prescribed?—Yes, for Gazetted Officers.

4973. Has that made much change in your uniform here?—No, really very slight. I believe it was intended to be less expensive than the old uniform, but the fact is it costs much about the same; the new working dress—the khaki dress—is very popular.

4974. You are satisfied with that?—Yes, of course there are one or two very small items which might have been different perhaps.

4975. Practically you have had nothing to do with the Director of Criminal Intelligence?—No, nothing at all.

4976. (Mr. Meyer.) You have a Deputy Inspector-General in charge of Criminal Intelligence?—Yes.

4977. And correspondence would go on between him and the Director at Simla or Calcutta?—Yes.

4978. Has there been any complaint of excessive calls for information or interference on the part of the Director of Criminal Intelligence?—None whatever.

4979. Has there been any good obtained from his advice based on the work in other provinces?—I think our Criminal Investigation Department gets valuable information from him.

4980. You spoke of some delay in your district arrangements; before the Police Commission sat, the Madras system was one of stations under head constables?—Yes.

4981. And the head constables were directly subordinate to the inspectors?—Yes.

4982. The finding of the Police Commission was that that was not quite a satisfactory system, and that you wanted officers of superior standing in charge of police stations—sub-inspectors?—Yes.

4983. And such delay as has occurred in re-organising your establishment is rather due to the fact that you have had to recruit a new agency to replace an old one, and you can only do that gradually?—Just so; the first instalment if sanctioned would have been introduced this October; it could not have been done sooner.

4984. You have spoken of Deputy Superintendents; was the intention that the Deputy Superintendent should take charge of a portion of the district as the Assistant Superintendent does now, or that he should be a Personal Assistant to the District Superintendent at headquarters?—I think he is intended to be a Personal Assistant at headquarters, but there also must be a number of them in charge of divisions.

4985. Then there will be both?—When we have full strength we shall have 40; there will be 28 police districts; that would give a Personal Assistant for each district, and we should nearly always want some at least to fill vacancies in divisions vice Assistant Superintendents on leave.

4986. Therefore you will have a certain number in divisional charge too?—Yes, we have seven or eight now.

4987. It was put to us by a previous witness that a constable cannot be black-marked even by his District Superintendent without an appeal; is that necessary?—I think an appeal against a black mark, unless it is the last black mark of a series which entails his dismissal, might be abolished. In fact, that is proposed in a draft Police Act for all India.

4988. A black mark only acts against a man seriously when a certain number have been piled up?—The third loses his increment if he has earned one, and a sixth entails his dismissal.

4989. Then you would not allow an appeal against a black mark until the sixth, when the consequences became serious?—I should rather be inclined to allow one against the third black mark, because it means that it takes away his increment.

4990. But you see no reason for appeals against the first and second black marks?—I do not think so.

4991. Is there anything in the law which obliges an appeal against the first and second?—Not that I know of.

4992. So that it is purely a departmental order?—It is practice I think.

4993. You have been a Collector for several years?—Yes.

4994. Have you any suggestion on which you feel particularly strongly which you wish to put before us in that capacity?—No, I do not think so. There is the suggestion that second appeals may be done away with generally.

4995. In administrative matters, or in disciplinary matters, or in both?—I should say in both.

4996. As a rule one appeal should suffice?—Yes.

4997. Would you say so in the case of the dismissal of an officer?—I do not think I would allow an appeal in the case of an officer except in the case of dismissal.

4998. But in the case of dismissal you would allow one?—Yes.

4999. Always or under certain conditions?—I think I should allow it in all cases of dismissal.

5000. You are acquainted with the report of the Police Commission?—Yes.

5001. (Mr. Hichens.) Generally, were the recommendations of that Commission in favour of uniformity throughout the different provinces on a large number of matters?—Yes.

Mr. D. W. G.
Cowie.

27 Nov., 1907.

Mr. D. W. G. Cowie.
27 Nov., 1907.
5002. Could you instance any cases where the uniformity that they recommended would not be desirable. For example, take uniforms; did they recommend that they should be uniform?—Only for Gazetted European Officers.

5003. Did they make that recommendation?—That is settled.

5004. Is it desirable to have uniformity in a point of that sort?—I see no objection to it.

5005. Then with regard to pay, did they make any recommendation in regard to uniformity?—I think the pay of the superior ranks is the same all over India, but the pay of the lower ranks varies to a certain extent with locality.

5006. Do the Government of India leave it to the provincial Government to pay their subordinate officers whatever they think fit?—No, I think the Government of India settled the whole thing on the lines of the Commission's Report.

5007. That is to say, the provincial Government have not got the power to settle the pay of their own subordinate officers?—They were consulted before the pay was settled.

5008. Should not the Government of Madras be able to settle for themselves what they are going to pay their subordinate officers without having to get the consent of the Government of India?—I do not think the Government of India could settle it over a certain figure without the consent of the Secretary of State.

5009. But without entering into the relations of the Government of India with the Secretary of State, is that not a matter that should be settled locally?—Well, it is a very big thing; personally, I should say it is a thing that ought to have gone to the Government of India.

5010. There are no municipal police anywhere in Madras?—No.

5011. The police are all under Government?—Yes.

5012. You would not recommend that any police power should be devolved upon local authorities?—No, certainly not.

5014. Can the appellant go up as far as the Government of India?—He can send up a petition, I think.

5015. But he has not a right of appeal?—I do not think so.

5016. Do you sometimes get remarks recorded by magistrates about the conduct of police in the investigation of cases which have come before the magistrates for trial?—Every now and then the magistrate reports a particular case, or the conduct of the police in connection with a number of cases.

5017. In Bengal there is a book in which the magistrate who tries a case can enter any remarks he likes about the conduct of the police; is there any such book here?—I think there is a form for every case the magistrate disposes of, and if he likes he can make remarks on the conduct of the police.

5018. Do these remarks go up to you or to the Deputy Inspector-General?—They do not go to the Deputy Inspector-General unless there is something very special; I do not think they go beyond the District Superintendent.

5019. Is action taken when such remarks are received?—I think so.

5020. But they do not generally come up to you?—No.

5021. What are the relations of the police with village watchmen in Madras villages?—The police have no control over them; they are entirely under the village magistrate.

5022. Are they not bound to report the occurrence of crimes to the nearest police station?—They need only report to the village magistrate and he will report to the police station.

5023. It is not part of the duty of the watchman to go direct to the police station?—I cannot say that it is his duty.

5024. (Sir Frederic Lely.) As to appeals, would you allow a second appeal in the case of reductions as well as dismissals; reduction is partial dismissal of course?—I do not think I would, because the controlling authority could always interfere if injustice had been done.

5025. You would not give a second appeal as a matter of right in a case where a man was reduced say from Rs. 25 to Rs. 10; it might be a more serious thing to him than a full dismissal?—You would have to limit it somewhere, would you not?

5026. My own suggestion is that reductions should be put on the same footing as dismissals; you do not think so?—I do not think I would do that.

5027. Do you not think there is a real danger of depriving the lower police Service of some attraction by reducing the right of appeal? The police Service is not very popular, is it, in itself?—There is no difficulty about recruiting in most of our Madras districts.

5028. You do not think there would be any real danger in reducing the right of appeal—I mean in making the service dangerously unpopular?—No, I should not say so.

5029. As to your relations with the District Magistrate; do you work at all in concert with him; when you visit the district do you make a point of seeing him?—Yes, always.

5030. Have you a special detective staff at your disposal in your office—I mean detective experts?—In the Criminal Investigation branch of my office.

5031. That is under your Deputy?—Yes.

5032. Suppose you or your Deputy heard rumours of some impending trouble say in a district, or a gang of coiners, would you send one of your special staff to enquire into it?—My Deputy would.

5033. Would he do that in consultation with the district authorities?—Yes, I think he would in the ordinary course consult them; I think they would work together.

5034. Is he not bound to do so by the rules; under present conditions is it possible for him to send one of his own men into a district without even the knowledge of the District Superintendent?—It is quite possible.

5035. Is that right?—I do not think it is usual.

5036. Do you think it should be allowed; is it not subversive of discipline for a policeman to be working in a district without the knowledge even of the local head of the police?—Yes, I think he ought to know certainly.

5037. But there is no provision making it compulsory to inform the district authorities?—I should not like to answer that question yes or no.

5038. You think it ought to be made compulsory?—Yes.

5039. Does the Director of Criminal Investigation under the Government of India ever act in that way; if he sent his emissaries into a district under your control would you have no objection?—I think he would only do it through the local Inspector-General.

5040. But you are not clear as to the division of authority in that way?—I think he would act through his own subordinates.

5041. Independently of the District Officer?—I am not sure.

5042. As a general principle, you would agree that the District Superintendent of Police, acting under the general supervision of the District Magistrate, should be solely responsible for the treatment of crime in his district—I mean local crime?—Yes.

5043. Then as to this change of system that has been recently introduced; do you consider that on the whole the changes are improvements or do you not?—It is rather too soon to give any opinion I think.

5044. I suppose they were made by the Government of India?—Yes, by the Government of India on the recommendation of the Police Commission.

5045. They also gave the money?—Yes.

5046. If the Local Government had had the money there is no reason to suppose that they would not have made improvements before?—No doubt they would.

Mr. C. J. HIGGS was called and examined.

5047. (Chairman.) You are acting as Chairman of the Madras Trades Association?—Yes; the Madras Trades Association having been invited by Government to nominate witnesses to give evidence before this Commission, I have been desired by the members, as Acting Chairman, to represent them. I am unable to say that trading interests are unduly hampered by the existing state of affairs, but on the question of decentralization in the abstract the trading community would prefer to see as large a measure of decentralization introduced into the Government of this country as is compatible with the safeguarding of imperial interests.

We know from experience that all large business concerns can only be successfully worked on a carefully arranged system of decentralization, and we think that an analogy between such concerns and the larger operations of Government may be fairly permitted. A large trading concern with branches in several parts of India offers some comparison in regard to methods, and in any such business concern the system of trusting the man on the spot is the keynote to success. As traders, therefore, we entirely believe in a system of decentralization and would apply it within all reasonable limits to the Government of the country. We think that centralized rules put a premium on irresponsibility and incompetence, and that men who possess originality, executive ability and the power to act promptly and wisely in an emergency are handicapped by such rules and reduced to the level of the incompetent. We recognise that such rules have been made to protect the weakest link in the chain, but we think it better that the chain should occasionally snap and the weak link thus disclosed be supplied by a stronger one, than that all initiative should be denied to good men by cast-iron regulations. We recognise that the rules by which the officers of Government are guided are the outcome of years of experience and have not been framed capriciously and without reason, and we admit that in a country like India it is necessary that a large measure of controlling power should remain in the hands of the highest authority, but we think the time has arrived when a larger share of control may safely be given to provincial Governments and scope for initiative be afforded to officers of Government of proved ability.

The hard and fast rules laid down in the Civil Account Code and the Public Works Department Code in regard to the purchase of European stores might with advantage be relaxed and purchasing departments might be given a freer hand in placing their orders. It is unjust that trading firms in India should be specifically excluded from any share of the Government orders for articles in which they deal. This is felt to be a distinct grievance by my Association, the members of which bear a heavy share of the burden of taxation and invest their capital—and incidentally their lives—in enterprises which tend to the general prosperity of the country. It is presumed that the prohibition against giving orders to local firms for articles of European manufacture is based on the fallacy that such articles can be more cheaply procured and imported through the agency of the India Office. There is scarcely an article of this description so imported by Government that local traders would not be prepared to supply to Government at rates at least as low as those now paid. If the spending departments were entrusted with larger powers and given an unrestricted market they would soon find where orders could be most advantageously placed.

If it is not considered possible to give the free hand I ask for, I would ask that at least the low limit of Rs. 50, within which an officer may buy locally, may be very considerably increased, say to Rs. 500. The present limit operates against Government frequently, as, for instance, when small quantities of an article have to be purchased at a higher rate than a larger quantity can be obtained for, in order to keep within the limit. It will be said, of course, that in such a case the officer should put his order through the usual channel or obtain formal sanction to exceed the limit, but it is well known that many cases arise in which even the delay of obtaining the formal sanction would defeat the purpose for which the goods are wanted.

There are many other restrictions on trade in the Government Codes which seem to be quite unjustifiable. Such for instance is the prohibition against buying typewriters or Chubb's locks in the local market. The purchase of books or newspapers is also strictly prohibited. There appears to be some relaxation in favour of Madras and Bombay in this respect, as in these Presidencies a Government official can get his books or newspapers through the local Superintendent of Stationery, but in all other parts of India orders must go through the Controller in Calcutta. Except that small sums are placed at the disposal of one or two officials annually for the purchase of books in the country, every book required for official purposes is ordered from one home firm.

The appointment of Inspectors-General attached to the departments of the Government of India and dealing with departments which are primarily administered by Local Governments is unsound in principle and acts detrimentally to trade. In a country like India it is impossible to bring into line the varying conditions existing in different parts of the Empire, and the attempt to standardise practice throughout the country without regard to local conditions must result harmfully. I believe that since the appointment of the Controller of Printing and Stationery a few years ago attempts have been made to standardise the methods of work and rates of wages in the official printing establishments throughout the country. It must be patent to everyone that this is wrong in principle when conditions vary so greatly as they do between north and south India. Labour in the south is cheap, in the north it is comparatively dear. An attempt, therefore, to force the Local Government press to do binding work by the piece on the lines adopted by other Government presses in other parts of the country, would result in a very serious disturbance of the labour market here which would affect the printing and binding trade most adversely. If my information is correct, local employers of labour in this industry owe much to the Madras Government for resisting this and similar attempts to interfere with established trade customs without due regard to local conditions. Periodical conferences between provincial Heads of Departments would be quite sufficient to systematize work and keep up such a standard of uniformity as is desirable, and would certainly be a much less expensive method of arriving at this end.

Private printing establishments occasionally do work for Government departments on the condition that all charges are approved by the Superintendent of the Local Government Press. As this officer has himself to work under the same labour conditions there is no particular unfairness to local trade in this, but now that an official in Calcutta has the right to dictate rates which may be quite unsuited to local conditions, the local printer has no guarantee that his work will not finally be paid for at rates that he cannot regard as fair, because in some other parts of India, under different conditions, other rates prevail. In one case, an amount passed and closed two years ago has recently been reopened by the Controller and much useful time and some stationery has been spent in correspondence over a sum of 8 As. and 10 pies.

The Controller of Stationery may interfere with contracts placed by the Superintendent of Stationery, and without regard to the suitability of the articles ordered to the purpose for which it is required, may decline to sanction such order and may place it elsewhere. It is open to him to decline to sanction an order placed with a Madras firm and order it to be placed with a Calcutta firm.

The frequent change in the officer holding the position of Collector of Sea Customs has been more than once called attention to by my Association and the Chamber of Commerce. This officer is necessarily in close touch with trading matters, and our complaint is that when a man has become thoroughly acquainted with local trade conditions he is shifted and a new man takes his place. I would desire to see more permanence in posts of this kind, and I think that the frequent transfers in Government service generally are not conducive to good government.

5048. You are yourself in business here?—I am partner in a business firm here.

5049. Are you a member yourself of the Madras Municipality?—I am a member of the Corporation of Madras and also a member of the Port Trust; I am also an ex-Sheriff of Madras.

5050. Then you have some practical experience of the local government of the city of Madras?—Yes. I may claim some small practical experience.

5051. Are you still a member of the Port Trust?—Yes.

5052. With regard to either the Port Trust or the Municipality, do you find that there is any undue delay in dealing with the Local Government, or is there excessive correspondence, or are there any general improvements which you could suggest to us?—I certainly entertain the opinion that there might be a very much freer hand given to the Corporation in many matters. I am not disposed to say that an absolutely free hand should be given; I believe that Government control is not only good but necessary; but I think that in regard to petty details, particularly in regard to the establishment of the Corporation and in its minor budget proposals, they might be given quite a free hand without the interference of Government.

5053. You think from your experience that there is certain relaxation of control desirable both in the interests of the Government and in the interests of the Municipality?—Certainly in the interests of the Municipality, and I take it that Government interests would not suffer.

5054. As Chairman of the Trades Association you make a statement with regard to the purchase of European goods by local authorities; would it save time if that were sanctioned?—I think it would; I think also it would be in the interests of Government.

5055. You are aware that the matter is now under consideration?—I am aware that a Committee visited Madras, before which my Association had not an opportunity of giving evidence.

5056. What was that Committee?—I think it was called the Stores Committee.

5057. Was that a Government of India Committee?—Yes. We corresponded with the Committee afterwards more or less on this point. In the Civil Account Code there is an absolute prohibition against dealing with local firms; we regard that as a grievance.

5058. This Committee did not ask you to give evidence?—No, we were not asked to give evidence and we afterwards communicated with them on that point; they said that we might have offered to give evidence, but we did not know that we were entitled to offer ourselves.

5059. However, the matter is under consideration, and I will not press you further on that point.

Generally, your view is that the local officials might be given some increased powers with regard to the purchase of European goods and goods produced in this country?—Yes, generally.

5060. With regard to the control of the local press; you say that the desire of the Government of India for uniformity has adversely affected you?—With reference to the appointment of a Controller of Printing and Stationery, the endeavour to apply conditions which exist in other parts of India to this particular part of the country is dangerous to local interests. I have mentioned the case of binding work, which has been done at the Government press on the same system as is the case with all private establishments. I have reason to believe that the Controller has tried to enforce a system there which obtains in some other part of the country, which system if introduced would undoubtedly unsettle the Madras wages market, and cost the Government of Madras a larger sum.

5061. With regard to the point you raise about the transfer of officers, does this adversely affect traders when those officers happen to be Collectors of Sea Customs?—I am speaking only of the Collector of Sea Customs, because he is the officer with whom traders are most in contact. Speaking generally, I believe that transfers throughout the country are objectionable, but with regard to the Collector of Sea Customs it has been a matter of complaint that he has been so frequently transferred that before a man has accustomed himself to local conditions he is sent away and a stranger comes in.

5062. That has the effect of delaying the liberation of goods?—It certainly has an adverse effect on trade generally; a man who is known to, and accessible to, the traders generally, is a man who can expedite business, and he has started, and gone a long way towards, understanding any matter put before him.

5063. Are goods often liberated from detention before a cheque is actually paid for the customs dues?—I think not; in my experience it is rather the other way about. I think customs dues are frequently paid before the amount due on the goods is made up.

5064. Therefore the knowledge of the Collector of Customs of the financial standing of a firm would not affect his dealings with the trading community?—Probably not, because I think Government takes no risk in that respect.

5065. Still, you would like to see a greater permanency?—I think a greater permanency would be beneficial all round.

5066. (Mr. Meyer.) About the Collector of Sea Customs and his transfers; was that a subject on which your Association memorialised the Government of India 2 or 3 years ago?—I am not sure that we memorialised the Government of India; I know that the matter has come before us and that we have made representations on the subject.

5067. You say you made representations to the Government, but you are not quite certain whether it was to the Local Government or to the Government of India?—When I say that we have made representations, I would confine myself to saying that we have commented in our annual reports and at our annual meetings on the frequency of transfers.

5068. Are you aware that there has been a change made in the status of the Collector of Sea Customs and the method of his appointment?—Yes, I am aware that an Imperial Service, and a very centralised service I take it, has now been established.

5069. Are you aware that one of the reasons assigned for the formation of that Service was to avoid these frequent transfers and to give officers sufficient inducement to stay a long time in the customs?—In so far as that is the reason, I entirely approve of it, but I believe that the present Collector of Sea Customs, who has been here quite a short time, and is the first appointed under the new scheme, is about to be moved.

5070. If the creation of the Imperial Service had the effect of reducing these constant transfers of which you complain, you would welcome it, but otherwise you would not?—I should welcome anything which tended to permanency in a department such as that, because that is a department which very closely affects trade interests.

5071. You speak of interference by the Controller of Printing and Stationery with the Madras Government Press; have you any knowledge of the work of the Madras Government Press?—I have some knowledge—not of course any official knowledge. I am aware, as a printer myself, of what is going on in other printing establishments, including the Government Press.

5072. You say there are orders in such matters as book-binding which are injudicious?—I do not attack them as injudicious orders; I merely state that instructions have been given to the Madras Superintendent to conform to the conditions existing in other places with regard to this particular work.

5073. But what is the foundation of your opinion; is it hearsay or have you direct knowledge of the subject?—My information is derived more or less from private conversation with the people concerned.

5075. You are therefore not in a position to say what the precise orders or instructions of the Controller were, and what his motives were?—Precisely; I am not dealing with that except as an illustration of the point that centralization as represented by Controllers-General is likely to interfere with local conditions and local trade interests.

5076. Can the Controller force the Madras Government Press to do anything he wishes; is it not a matter for the discretion of the Madras Government?—That I cannot answer; that is entirely beyond my knowledge.

5077. You are on the Port Trust?—I am a member of the Port Trust.

5078. Do you consider as a member of the Port Trust that the Government control is too rigid?—No, I do not. I think with regard to the Port Trust, as recently constituted, that it has a free hand and a full measure of responsibility. Government, of course, maintain financial control, but all schemes that have been prepared in the past by the Port Trust have been sanctioned, and I cannot think of any instance in which Government interference has been detrimental.

5079. For all works over a certain amount you have to send estimates to the Government for sanction?—Yes.

5080. Apart from ordinary budget control, these specific works have to go up?—Yes.

5081. Is that necessary in all cases?—I should not consider it necessary in small matters—works of say under a lakh in cost—but with regard to harbour works, they are usually of an expensive and important nature, and I think probably Government supervision in these matters is desirable.

5082. Do you happen to know what the present limit is beyond which you must send up to Government?—I do not.

5083. Is it below a lakh?—Yes, it is below a lakh.

5084. Your point is that within a lakh the Port Trust might be left to their own discretion and over a lakh they should go to Government?—I think so.

5085. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) Are the big markets in India now ready to supply European goods for Government?—Undoubtedly.

5086. Are they capable of meeting the demands of Government?—Quite capable. Naturally, if Government orders were suddenly thrown on the market there would be a shortage at first, but that would rectify itself probably within the course of a few months.

5087. Do you consider it of any advantage to the trade of the country, or do you consider it a matter of indifference, that the management of all the different customs houses should be identical—I mean is the system of Bombay, Calcutta, Rangoon, and Karachi, a matter of indifference to you in Madras?—It would be a matter of indifference if our landing and customs house arrangements are taken into consideration; but so far as the general system is concerned I think it is uniform throughout the country.

5088. Up to the other day the control was in the hands of the provincial Governments?—Until quite recently.

5089. Apart from the question of the transfer of officials—which is an accident—do you consider that a change which practically would bring about great uniformity is, in the matter of sea customs, a change for the benefit of trade or not?—I think, on the whole, it is for the benefit of trade.

5090. Then you think it is desirable that the control of the sea customs of a country, however big, should all be in one hand?—I think so, inasmuch as the customs duty would be the same everywhere; the conditions apply all over the country.

5091. You think it is a function practically of the Central Government?—I think it is.

5092. (Sir Frederic Lely.) Have you had experience of any complaints on behalf of the minor ports of Madras that port dues are levied there and instead of being spent locally are absorbed in the work of the port of Madras?—I have no knowledge of that.

5093. (Mr. Dutt.) Does the Government of India give any preference to goods produced in this country if they can be supplied at the same rate and of the same quality as goods imported?—Yes, there is a distinct preference in favour of Indian-made goods; in fact, it extends to the prohibition of the use of European articles in many respects—paper for instance.

5094. Is that rule on the whole a sound one?—In the interests of the trade of the country, which is thereby protected, it is probably sound, but taking a wider view of it I do not think it is.

5095. Is there not risk of extravagance if the rules as to the purchase of European goods were relaxed?—I think not.

5096. And in the case of the lower officials, you do not think there would be any risk of corruption?—I do not see that the door is any more opened to corruption.

5097. (Mr. Hichens.) Has the Madras Municipality power to purchase their stores locally?—They may purchase their goods locally but they must purchase by contract; they cannot go into the open market and buy.

5098. They must put the things up to tender?—Yes.

5099. Suppose, for example, they intended to embark on some scheme or another; I take it that first of all probably, if it was a large scheme, they would have to get the approval of the Government?—Yes, to anything over a lakh in expenditure.

5100. Having got that, would they have to submit their tenders to the Government, or would they be allowed to select the tender which (within the rules) appeared to them most desirable?—They would not need to submit their tenders to the Government. Government sanction having been given to the general work, the details of it would be supervised by the executive of the Corporation; it would be the Standing Committee of the Corporation who would deal with tenders.

5101. So far as the Madras Municipality is concerned you are satisfied that they have all the powers they could want in that matter?—Yes, I think they have.

5102. (Chairman.) Will you state briefly the nature of your duties?—I am a Deputy Collector of Namakkal. I am in charge of two taluks, which comprise an area of about 900,000 acres with a population of 600,000, and a demand of nearly 10 lakhs of rupees under land revenue and cesses. There are over 200 revenue villages. Collection and account work is done by a staff of 300 village munsiffs and monigars and 180 karnams. The whole work is supervised by an outdoor staff of eight revenue inspectors, three deputy tahsildars and two tahsildars. I have also to dispose of first class cases, maintenance cases and cases under the security provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code and also hear appeals from the sub-magistrates of the division. Besides revenue and magisterial work I have to do a certain amount of work for the Local Funds as the President of the taluk Board. In that capacity I have to supervise the work of 11 union panchayats.

As an instance of the excessive leaning of the Government of India towards uniformity, mention may be made of the recent orders under which the interest on advances to cultivators under the Loans Acts has been raised from 5 to 6½ per cent. The former rate has been in force in this Presidency for the last nine years and is the rate which the Local Government had always thought to be a proper rate. The reasons adduced by the Government of India are that 6½ per cent. is the rate which is adopted in provinces other than Madras, Bombay and Burma, and that the general opinion of the Local Government of Northern India is that there is no reason for reducing their present rate of 6½ per cent.

The existing rules regarding appeals are not unnecessarily liberal and may therefore be continued.

Executive Officers have sufficient opportunities for personal contact with the people in their frequent tours. Under the rules, a Divisional Officer has to spend 2½ months in every half year in camp.

I do not think that transfers of Deputy Collectors are unnecessarily frequent. In fact as many as 18 were at one station for more than five years at the beginning of this year; Government have recently transferred eight of these officers. District munsiffs are as a rule transferred after three years' stay, but in the case of Deputy Collectors not less than five years seem necessary. One year will be required to make the officer tolerably well acquainted with his division, another will be needed to make him thoroughly familiar and view questions from all points of view. During the next three years he will be able to frame schemes and do something useful out of the ordinary groove of office routine for the improvement of the people and for the enhancement of the revenue.

There are at present five grades of tahsildars on Rs. 250, 225, 200, 175, and 150. After the appointment of stationary sub-magistrates the work of the tahsildars has been appreciably reduced, and with the redistribution of taluks which is now awaiting the sanction of the Secretary of State, there will not be much difference between one taluk and another. There is therefore no reason why any tahsildar should be paid more than Rs. 200. The two grades 225 and 250 may well be abolished. Another reason for the proposed abolition is that the pay of the last grade Deputy Collector is fixed at Rs. 250, and it is often not a pleasant state of things to have an acting Deputy Collector of the last grade (probably a permanent tahsildar on Rs. 200 or 225) wielding authority over a permanent first class tahsildar on Rs. 250 with many years ripe experience at his credit. The saving thus effected might be utilized in creating a third class of deputy tahsildar and sub-magistrates on Rs. 150. Considering the enormous power which a sub-magistrate wields, it does not seem to be too much to pay some of them Rs. 150. This overlapping between the last grade tahsildar and the first grade deputy tahsildar will also be conducive to good results in another respect. Persons who have done well only as Magistrates may be promoted to the first class of deputy tahsildars, while those who show an aptitude for revenue work also may be promoted to the last grade tahsildars.

Deputy tahsildars and tahsildars should be made ex-officio members of the taluk Board. They tour about the roads frequently and inspect so many places, and it will be a distinct advantage to have them on the taluk Board. The control of and the revenue from markets in unions may be transferred to the unions themselves. At present it is the taluk Board that gets the income. The panchayat will be able to carry many reforms if their resources are thus augmented.

In the matter of location of liquor shops the union panchayats may be usefully consulted.

Outside the Presidency capital and certain important towns, there is no material worth the name for the formation of Advisory, much less of Administrative, Councils to assist Divisional or District Authorities. It is with very great difficulty that Presidents of taluk Boards find suitable candidates for vacancies in taluk Boards and union panchayats. It must be many years before the scheme can be thought of. Before the introduction of any such system, the inhabitants should have learnt sufficiently of the need for tolerance, in respect of caste and religion. At present the several elements are in check only under the firm hand of the British Government.

In the early days of the British administration, the village panchayat was a powerful body. Even now, it is so in remote localities or among certain sects of people. It is very strong among artisans. In consequence of the non-existence of such a panchayat, the villagers are now driven to towns in respect of their civil and criminal cases, where they come under the unwholesome influence of law touts. Every step taken to resuscitate the old system will be a boon conferred on the poor ignorant litigants of villages. At each revenue village a panchayat of five should be constituted with the village munsiff as the President and the karnam as the Secretary, the remaining four members being selected by the tahsildar on account of their property and other qualifications, due regard being had to the representation of factions and classes of communities. This panchayat may for the present be invested with power to dispose of all thefts under section 379, Indian Penal Code, where the value of the property does not exceed rupees five, and inconsiderable assaults and affrays, either by fine up to that amount or by simple detention for 12 hours or detention in stocks for six hours in the case of lower classes. In respect of civil matters they may have power to dispose of all suits up to Rs. 20.

At present the village munsiff in his individual capacity has power to take cognizance of thefts up to one rupee and of inconsiderable assaults and of suits for amounts up to Rs. 20, but for various reasons these powers are not sufficiently utilised. In some cases the village munsiffs are lazy, in others people have lost confidence in them for one reason or another, in certain other instances the fascination of having the cases tried before the higher tribunals is great. The law touts are not slow to avail themselves of all these causes to their advantage. To combat against the tendency I would propose that district munsiffs and sub-magistrates should steadily set their faces against entertaining cases of the nature mentioned above, and refer such cases to the village panchayat for disposal in the same way that complaints of the second and third class cases when presented to a first class magistrate are referred by him to those magistrates for disposal according to law. In the first place cases of hard swearing will become rarer. A witness will think twice before he tells a falsehood before the village panchayat. The eyes of the whole village are on him and the opprobrium attaching to the giving of false evidence is not a negligible factor. In the next place all costs of suits and vakils' fees will be a clear saving to the parties. The work of the district munsiff will also be materially reduced. Out of 3,314 small cause suits filed in the local district munsiff's court in three years as many as 1,326 relate to claims of Rs. 20 and less.

Another direction and a most important one in which the village panchayat can be utilized is in keeping the place sanitarily clean and accessible to the outer world. At present nothing is done in this direction for want of funds. All the money collected from the villages on account of land cess is utilized for the roads and the big works which are constantly engaging the attention of the taluk Boards. The villages are generally left to take care of themselves. There are several villages which have not even a fair weather track connecting the village site with any of the roads. The villagers have to carry their produce on their heads for a distance of about two or three miles before they can put them in a cart. In many villages people have to go long distances to bring drinking water. All these defects will disappear if out of the land cess collection of one anna in the rupee one pie in the rupee is earmarked for local expenditure. The training which the village panchayat will receive in the administration of this fund and of justice in civil and criminal cases will make them very useful citizens and will fit them to take active part in greater schemes affecting their interests at a later date.

5103. Might some increased power be given to tahsildars in the appointment of village officers?—Yes.

5104. What is the pay of these village officers?—It rises from Rs. 5 to Rs. 14.

5105. Would you give the tahsildar power to dismiss them?—Yes; if they can appoint, they should also dismiss.

5106. In such a case as that should the tahsildar submit a copy of the proceedings?—Yes, he does so in the matter of appointments, and it is open to the Divisional Officer, on reading the papers and the proceedings of the tahsildar, either to call for the records or to wait until the party appeals. In either case he can pass his own verdict if the party is aggrieved.

5107. So that the Divisional Officer should confirm the appointment by the tahsildar?—Yes.

5108. And if the man is subsequently dismissed there should be an appeal to the Divisional Officer?—Yes, and there should be a revision by the Collector if necessary—a first appeal and one revision.

5109. You have no particular desire to alter the present status of tahsildars?—No, no particular desire, except that I should like to have a grading of deputy tahsildars at Rs. 150.

5110. You would like a grade of tahsildars below that which now exists?—We have now five grades of tahsildars from Rs. 250 to Rs. 150; deputy tahsildars, only two grades, Rs. 100 and Rs. 120. I should like a grade of deputy tahsildars at Rs. 150 and to do away with the first two grades of tahsildars, the Rs. 250 grade and the Rs. 225 grade. Then there would be opportunity for an officer to rise from the lower rungs of the ladder—first as deputy tahsildar, Rs. 100, then Rs. 120, then Rs. 150; then by gradual rises to tahsildar at Rs. 200, then becoming a Deputy Collector at Rs. 250. That is the lowest grade of Deputy Collector.

5111. You think your scheme would provide some chance of promotion to the tahsildars?—Yes; at present there is some anomaly in the grade of tahsildars at Rs. 250 being subject to an officiating Deputy Collector on Rs. 200 or Rs. 225.

5112. You complain that sometimes a senior tahsildar is put under a man who is getting a lower rate of pay than he is himself?—He will draw Rs. 250, but his permanent rank is only Rs. 225 or Rs. 200.

5113. Have you anything to say about District Boards?—The District Boards perform a useful function and they ought to be retained together with the taluk Boards and the present union panchayats.

5114. Have you anything to say about the formation of Advisory Councils?—I think that the time has not yet come for the formation of such Advisory Councils, much less for the formation of Administrative Councils, because we cannot get sufficient material in outside places to help the Divisional Officer or District Collector on such matters.

5115. The difficulty of finding suitable persons would be a serious drawback to the formation of such bodies?—Yes.

5116. You lay great stress on the advisability of forming village panchayats?—Yes.

5118. You say that the village panchayats could clear up all the civil and criminal petty cases?—Yes.

5119. That they could deal with the village school?—Yes.

5120. And village sanitation?—Yes, with the fund for village purposes which I propose to institute.

5121. A very small cess on land?—Yes; 12 pies is now levied in the rupee; my proposal is that one pie out of the 12 should be earmarked for local needs, to be spent in the village.

5122. Do you think that the returns of vital statistics and other returns that you submit are accurately compiled?—Every endeavour is made to compile them as accurately as possible. As to the vital statistics return, in the case of Government villages you might almost say that it is absolutely correct, but in the case of mitta villages it is only an estimate; we are asked to say to the best of our ability.

5123. And very often people take different views of what should or should not go into a return?—Yes, so that you cannot place much reliance on it.

5124. (Sir Frederic Lely.) As Deputy Collector you represent the Government officially before your own people?—Yes.

5125. Are you a native of the part of the country in which your charge is situated?—I am a native of Tinnevely, the southernmost district of the Presidency.

5126. The language of the district is your own household language?—Yes, Tamil; but I have also passed in Telugu.

5127. Do you consider it your duty to explain the views of Government to the people and ascertain their feelings?—Yes, personally I do. I talk to all the people.

5128. Do you go on tour?—I go on tour for two and a half months out of every six months.

5129. How long do you stay in each village?—Not less than a day; sometimes, where the work demands it, two or three days.

5130. Where do you put up?—In most of the important places we have got travellers' bungalows. From one camp we can visit villages lying within a radius of 5 or 6 miles; then when we have exhausted that neighbourhood we move off to another camp.

5131. Do you always live in travellers' bungalows?—Yes, where available.

5132. If a bungalow is not available, what do you do?—Then we live in tents; I have not yet provided myself with tents, but I am expected to do so, and I shall do so.

5133. You propose to establish these village panchayats with a certain amount of extra taxation?—Not extra taxation; only the existing taxation to be earmarked for a particular purpose.

5134. You are in charge of two taluks?—Yes.

5135. Do they form a division of the district?—Yes, one of the four divisions of the district.

5136. So you are a Divisional Officer?—Yes.

5137. What do you mean when you speak of Government villages?—That is where the revenue is collected direct from the raiyats.

5138. The others are zamindari villages?—Yes. Those are mitta villages. At the time of the first introduction of British Government the villages were leased out, and those people who took leases have now become landlords.

5139. (Mr. Dutt.) Are there not half a dozen men in a district capable of advising the Collector in matters concerning the welfare of the villagers themselves?—In a Presidency town there are.

5140. I am speaking of the districts?—So far as my division is concerned, I could not fix upon six people to advise me on matters of this sort.

5141. And in the villages?—No, certainly not.

5142. (Mr. Hichens.) Have the District Boards and the Boards under them sufficient powers?—I think they have.

5143. Have you personal experience of the work of those Boards?—Yes, I was Vice-President of a District Board and am now President of a taluk Board.

5144. Is it not laid down in the provincial law what the cess on the land shall be?—Yes, one anna in the rupee.

5145. And they have to collect that whether they like it or not?—The Revenue Department collects it and hands it over to the District Board.

5146. But the District Board has no say in the amount; the District Board cannot say "We think that times are bad, we would rather economise and reduce the cess to one pie"?—No, they could not do that; the law as it stands does not give them the power; in fact whatever amount is collected by the Revenue Department is handed over to them, and the Revenue Department is bound to follow the law, which is that on every rupee of assessment they shall collect one anna; and at the time when remissions are granted they will not even grant remissions of land cess.

5147. Then even with regard to the spending of that money they have no free hand?—The District Boards are subject mostly to the control of Government.

5148. Is that control fairly frequently exercised or not?—Yes, it is pretty freely exercised I think.

5149. Bearing those points in mind, do you think that they have a sufficient amount of independence?—In that way I should say they have not got sufficient independence.

5150. I suppose you have seen in the papers a statement to the effect that these District Boards and local authorities ought to have more responsibility?—Yes, they ought to have more responsibility.

5151. Would you be prepared to say that these Boards should have power of independent action in any way; for example, would you be prepared to say that the District Board knows its own business better than anybody else, the matters that come up to them are matters of purely local importance, and therefore if they choose to say "We do not want to have such a large tax on the land this year" they should be entitled to say so; would you advocate that?—On a question of principle I should say yes, but I do not know whether the present members who form the District Board could be trusted to exercise their discretion in that way.

5152. You would say perhaps that the time is not ripe?—The time is not yet ripe.

5153. How do you propose, so to speak, to ripen the time?—The people must educate themselves first.

5154. But how is that to be done; can you educate a man to take responsibility unless you give him some?—Already the Government has given some with certain restrictions, and when they acquit themselves properly the Government will be prepared to give them more. Let me cite a particular instance, the provision for plague. Government, having to provide for plague in a certain district and to go to considerable expense, might make a general call for money; one district might say "Plague is not in our district, why should we contribute," and any amount of representation on the part of the Government would fall flat on the members of the District Board; in consequence Government is obliged to say "You shall contribute so much."

5155. Your position is that you think further experience is necessary on the part of the District Boards before they get additional powers?—Yes.

5156. Have you any experience of district municipalities?—Not much. I have revised the assessment of one municipality.

5157. Can you tell me if municipalities have further powers with regard to revenue; can they collect or not, as they like, certain taxes?—There the rate is not fixed; they are asked to fix a valuation on the houses, and on that valuation Government tell them to fix the percentage.

5158. Then they collect whether they want to or not?—They can lower it with the sanction of Government.

5159. That is to say, they can write to the Government and say "We do not want to collect the full rate this year, we recommend that only half should be collected"?—Yes; in that way I think municipalities stand on a better footing than District Boards.

5160. How does that answer in the case of municipalities?—It does not answer well, because Government often has to put pressure on the municipality to raise the tax; for instance when a new water supply scheme is introduced the Government has to insist and say peremptorily "You must raise the rates to such and such a figure."

5161. Is that common?—Yes, Government is often obliged to say so when money is wanted for particular purposes.

5162. (Mr. Meyer.) Is not the land cess the chief item of revenue of the taluk Board and the District Board?—Yes.

5163. Does not the Local Boards Act say that the rate is to be subject to a fixed maximum?—Yes, the fixed maximum is two annas in the rupee.

5164. The one anna in the rupee, that is now generally levied, is not rigidly prescribed by the Act?—The Act says that the land cess shall be collected under notification, and there is a notification which says that the rate shall be one anna in the rupee.

5165. As the Act stands the Local Board with the sanction of Government can levy any rate up to two annas in the rupee?—Yes.

5166. It might levy a quarter-anna if the Government approved, or 1½ annas?—Yes; in fact at Malabar until recently, and even now I think—they levy two annas in the rupee.

5167. Therefore the Act allows a scale, only there is a maximum prescribed, and the sanction of the Government is required for any alteration?—Yes.

5168. Is not the Municipal Act the same; the house tax may be levied up to a fixed rate, 7½ per cent. or something like that?—Yes, but in the case of municipalities that is revised from year to year, if I remember right.

5169. In theory the position of the District Board does not differ from that of the municipality; each can revise its taxation with the consent of Government within a fixed maximum?—Yes.

5170. Are not the raiyats of this country somewhat conservative?—Yes.

5171. Suppose the District Board were allowed to alter its rate of cess from year to year, making it one anna one year, one and a quarter annas the next year, and so on, would the raiyats understand that?—The raiyats do not pay much attention; whatever the village officer demands as the tax they pay.

5172. At present a man pays Rs. 5, say, in the shape of land revenue, and he knows that he has to pay As. 5 more in the shape of land cess?—Yes.

5173. If next year he were told that, while his land revenue remained at Rs. 5, his land cess was As. 10, would he not be a little bewildered?—Yes.

5174. And if next year he were told that the land cess was $2\frac{1}{2}$ annas only, he would be still more bewildered?—Yes.

5175. And it might be possible in such a case that the karnam would not tell him that the land cess was only $2\frac{1}{2}$ annas?—Yes, that is the real danger.

5176. Therefore there is some advantage in a fixity of land cess assessment?—Yes; that is the reason why, in a grant of remission, we always say to the raiyats at jamabandi that the assessment is so and so.

5177. Are not the Madras Boards empowered to levy an additional cess for railway purposes?—Yes, three pies in the rupee.

5178. That can be levied under what conditions?—If the Government and the District Board think that the District stands in need of a railway, then with the approval of the Government they can impose a cess.

5179. Can a bare majority of the District Board do it?—I cannot say.

5180. I put it to you that there must be a two-thirds majority?—Whatever the rule is for the collection of cesses by the majority applies to this also.

5181. Anyhow, the District Board has power under certain conditions with the sanction of the Government to levy this extra cess?—Yes.

5182. Has that been done to any great extent?—Yes, in many districts the railway cess has been introduced.

5183. With beneficial results do you consider?—Judging from the experience of the Tanjore district I should say that the railway cess is beneficial.

5184. The District Board there owns its own railway?—Yes.

5185. You think that that is a form of enterprise that has benefited the district?—Considerably.

5186. And you think that that method of promoting railways might well be encouraged?—Yes.

5187. In the case of the Tanjore District Board, did it construct the line wholly from its railway cess, or did it borrow money?—It borrowed money.

5188. From whom?—From the public; it issued its own debentures.

5189. On the security of this special revenue?—Yes.

5190. Do they still owe money to the public or have the debentures been paid off?—The debentures were issued for 20 years; the time has not yet expired.

5191. The Board then can not only use its cess directly for the construction of railways, but can use it as a security for borrowing?—Yes.

5192. It can borrow in the local market?—It can, but with the permission of Government.

5193. It would have to be with the consent of the Provincial Government?—Yes.

5194. And of the Government of India?—I think so.

5195. Do you think, speaking generally, that the taluk Board could have any larger powers than it has now?—I cannot think of any.

5196. Should the District Board have larger powers—less interference by Government in the matter of reappropriations and so on?—Yes, but the time has not yet come for giving them a freer hand in all these matters; as much as can be given has already been given.

5197. You think that all the restrictions that now exist are for the time being necessary?—For the time being, yes.

5198. You propose to give certain powers to panchayats?—Yes.

5199. Tinnevely is a district in which there have been very unpleasant and even sanguinary caste disputes?—Yes.

5200. If there was a panchayat at Tinnevely managing its own local affairs, would the Shanars get fair play at the hands of the higher castes?—I suggest that the panchayat should consist of five members, of whom four should be selected from different castes and creeds, so that everybody's views would be fairly well represented on the panchayat.

5201. Would a Brahman sit with a Shanar on the panchayat?—I think so.

5202. I understood that a great deal of the trouble that has arisen is due to the fact that the other castes denied the right of the Shanars to have access to Hindu temples?—That was at one particular place, and the feeling was fostered by certain people, and the situation was badly handled by the Magistrates at the time.

5203. Your view is that the feeling against the Shanars on the part of the higher castes is not sufficient to create any serious difficulty in the working of the panchayat?—No; there would be a mutual give and take.

5204. Then what about the Pariahs?—Of course, they are in a great minority. If a village is constituted of Pariahs it would have to have a separate panchayat of its own; I cannot remember any such cases; they would be very rare.

5205. Do you know any villages in which the main population are caste folk, but in which there are one or more Pariah hamlets?—I have not come across any.

5206. Would the smooth working of the panchayats be imperilled by the presence of factions?—If the factions were represented in the panchayat there would be no real difficulty I think.

5207. They would work harmoniously?—I should think so.

5208. Would not each party be trying to obstruct the other?—Of course the majority will prevail, and the opinion of the majority will be given effect to.

5209. And you think the minority would bow loyally; they would not go at once and petition the tahsildar and so on?—At the earlier stages you must be prepared for all those things, but with careful management on the part of the superior officers, who would have a careful eye to promote the thing, it should be possible to bring the different people to work together.

5210. You desire to raise the pay of the lowest grade of deputy tahsildar to Rs. 150, and to keep the pay of the highest grade of tahsildar at Rs. 150?—Yes, as it is at present.

5211. Therefore you might have a deputy tahsildar at Rs. 150 serving under a tahsildar of the same pay?—Yes, but you do not find much difficulty between your tahsildar and your sub-magistrate.

5212. Would there not be exactly the same inconvenience, so far as it exists, that you complain of as regards having the tahsildar at Rs. 250 and the Deputy Collector at the same pay?—These Rs. 150 people will always be needed at important places. Take the position of stationary sub-magistrates, as sub-magistrates they do not come much under the tahsildar, so they are practically independent of the tahsildar.

5213. You mention, as an instance of the evil of centralisation, that the Government of India required the Madras Government to raise their rate of interest on agricultural loans from 5 per cent. to $6\frac{1}{4}$ per cent.?—Yes.

5214. Did the Government of India issue an order to that effect to the Madras Government, or did they merely suggest it?—They merely suggested it. They said $6\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. is the rate of interest prevailing in all the provinces of India except Madras, Bombay, and Burma, and the opinion of the other Governments is that there is no reason why the provincial Governments should not all charge $6\frac{1}{4}$ per cent.

5215. The point is, was the Madras Government ordered to raise it to $6\frac{1}{4}$ per cent., or was it left to them to act or not as they thought fit?—It was not worded as a mandate; it was put in the form of a suggestion.

5216. Therefore the Government of Madras, if they did not think it a wise measure, could have said "We would rather adhere to our old rate of interest"?—Yes.

5217. Do you call that an instance of centralization?—That is how I viewed it.

W. L. HICHENS, Esq.

The Hon. Sir V. C. DESIKA CHARRY, Kt., was called and examined.

The Hon. Sir
V. C. Desika
Charry.
28 Nov., 1907.

5218. (Chairman.) You are a member of the Legislative Council of Madras?—Yes, I have been one of the additional non-official members for a little over three years, representing the Corporation of Madras.

5219. You live in Madras?—Yes, I have been 46 years in Madras. I am a High Court vakil practising in Madras.

5221. You suggest that at present the provincial Government has no power to appropriate from one sub-head to another?—From one head to another; I think they have the power so far as sub-heads are concerned.

5222. Have they not power to transfer from major head to major head as well as from sub-head to sub-head, provided that such transfers do not cause the total amount named in the budget to be exceeded?—My belief is that they have not got the power of transfer from one general head to another general head; if that is so then I have no complaint.

5223. You desire to tell us something about appeals?—I think it would be very unwise and inexpedient to do away with the existing number of appeals.

5224. Do you mean appeals in administrative cases—the punishment of one officer by another officer?—Yes.

5225. Why would it be inadvisable to do away with them?—Because it should not be forgotten that the person who passes the original order, when he knows that there is an appeal, pays attention to details much more than if he knew that his order would be final and would not be likely to be questioned in appeal. If any existing right of appeal was abolished it would create a feeling of insecurity in the minds of the public.

5226. You say that, were appeals to be altogether done away with, the person who has to consider the evidence would be likely perhaps not to give it such careful consideration as he would if he knew that his judgment might subsequently be overruled?—That applies equally to the first appellate officers too, if there is a further appeal.

5227. Then the same argument will apply to the highest authority from whom there is no appeal?—There must be a line drawn somewhere.

5228. And the argument which would apply to the lowest officer, as to there being no appeal against the judgment, and the absence of appeal causing carelessness in considering the judgment, would apply to the highest officer?—In a much smaller degree.

5229. Are Counsel heard in any of these appeals in administrative matters?—Very seldom I think.

5230. Therefore the abolition of appeal does not affect one way or the other the employment, or the non-employment, of Counsel in administrative matters?—Well, one does not like to be one's own lawyer; generally the man appealing goes to somebody else to draft his petition of appeal for him, but Counsel is not engaged to argue the appeal.

5231. When a man is punished by his superior and appeals against the punishment he goes to Counsel to draft his appeal?—Not always to licensed Counsel; he goes, perhaps, to private vakils in the mufassal—generally poor people—but in the Presidency towns, and in the bigger towns generally, I believe they go to Counsel.

5232. And therefore the abolition of appeals would affect to that extent the employment of Counsel?—To a very inappreciable extent.

5233. But it would affect it?—Yes.

5234. Do you desire to see no restriction upon appeals in revenue cases?—I would not curtail any existing appeals.

5235. Where does the appeal at present lie?—I take it that if a tahsildar does something wrong it goes to the Divisional Officer; from the Divisional Officer it goes to the District Collector:

from the District Collector it goes to the Board of Revenue; from the Board of Revenue it goes to the provincial Government.

5236. And from the provincial Government?—I take it, to the Government of India.

5237. What is the smallest sum that can be involved in such a course of appeals?—It is very difficult to say; in most cases they will be questions of land disputes, or of an office.

5238. In your knowledge, as a legal practitioner, what is the smallest sum paid by the occupier of the land to the Government on which these appeals would lie?—In my whole experience of 21 years I have not come across more than 50 or 60 appeals involving very low sums.

5239. What is the smallest amount?—It would be in cases of over Rs. 100 that a man would come to me.

5240. In a matter of Rs. 100 there might be therefore a series of appeals extending over six different appellate courts?—There is a possibility of it, but every one does not go through all of them.

5241. Do you think that that course of appeals is to the advantage of the original appellant?—I have known cases in which the first 3 or 4 appeals have failed, and eventually the man has been successful.

5242. Will you please answer my question?—I should think it would be an advantage in individual cases. My opinion is that the generality of appeals fail, and fail rightly too.

5243. Does that lead to the welfare and contentment of the people?—Quite so.

5244. Rather than curtailment of appeal to one person above the original deciding authority?—Yes, I think so.

5245. Do you make any criticism of the provincial Government in connection with revenue matters?—I consider that the provincial Government are too impersonal and too much dominated by considerations of revenue.

5246. What is your experience which will enable you to tell us something about this? Have you been in any Government employment?—No.

5247. Are you a land holder?—No.

5248. Do you cultivate land?—No.

5249. Now, will you tell us your views?—Among all grades of District Officers there is an opinion prevailing that the largest amount of revenue should be collected; that is the tendency.

5250. How do you know that; are you acquainted with Revenue Officers?—Yes.

5251. And do they tell you that their orders are to collect as much revenue as possible?—As a professional man I very often have to go about into the districts; I talk with both landlords and raiyats; I have appeared in revenue cases both for landlords and raiyats, and from having come into contact with all these people I am able to say this.

5252. You think that the demands of the provincial Government, both upon the landlords and upon the raiyats, are too great?—It is not that; I say that there is a general belief that the efficiency of the Revenue Officer consists in the largest amount he collects and collects promptly.

5253. In the course of your practice as a vakil you find that your clients believe this?—Not only the clients even, but most other people, including Revenue Officers.

5254. The Revenue Officers tell you that the Government insist upon the collection of so much revenue?—No; that is their belief, I put it only as a belief. Upon what they see around them, and what they see in their own cases, I suppose they found this belief. The feeling is not common only to the subordinate officials; even the District Officers know that. Any man who recommends large remissions in his district is put down as a weak man, and generally he is never appointed to the Board of Revenue.

5255. Have you known any cases of that?—If you want particular cases I can mention them.

5256. I do not want names, but have you known such cases?—I have known people who have been Collectors, and very sympathetic Collectors too, and who so far as the people were concerned were very popular, who have been relegated to the Judicial Department; that is the only punishment in the case of District Collectors; they are posted as District Judges, and we know what chances District Judges have of promotion. I am only talking of this Presidency to which my knowledge is confined.

5257. You yourself would hardly incline to the theory that it is any particularly hard punishment to put a man into the Judicial Department; you belong to the legal profession yourself?—I think it is a most honourable profession, but one's personal experience has nothing to do with the matter. It is a question of the further chances of promotion.

5258. Do you know this as a fact from Collectors, or is it merely hearsay?—I think from the cases I have in my mind I am entitled to draw that conclusion.

5259. You have heard it from other people?—I draw the conclusion from certain concrete cases in which I know persons who were Collectors of districts, and who were very popular as Collectors, and who have been posted as District Judges with no further chances of promotion.

5260. That you look upon as a disgrace?—Well, I cannot call it a disgrace, but it is not treating him as he would have been treated had he been an efficient Collector of revenue. This feeling pervades the ranks all through, going down to the Divisional Officers and Deputy Collectors; if a man is lenient or is very sympathetic, he is made a Treasury Deputy Collector permanently for the rest of his life, and is very seldom looked upon as a smart officer.

5261. Has a Treasury Deputy Collector any power of dealing with the people directly?—No; he sits in his office; he is in charge of the treasury and has nothing else to do; occasionally you find him as the Vice-President of the District Board or something like that—an honorary appointment.

5262. That also you look upon as being relegated to the back benches?—I look upon it as an expression of displeasure. You find it more in the lower ranks, among the tahsildars and Deputy Collectors; a man may commit many blunders as a magistrate, but all that is condoned if he is very clever in collecting the revenue and if he can show an increased collection of income tax; he soon rises from deputy tahsildar to tahsildar and then to Deputy Collector.

5263. You have known such cases yourself?—Yes.

5264. You have never been yourself in Government Service?—No; except in so far as I was a lecturer for some years in the local Law College in addition to following my profession.

5265. Is there anything else on this head that you would like to tell us?—I should like to see better recruitment of these officers, tahsildars and deputy tahsildars.

5266. From the point of view of corruption you mean?—Inefficiency and corruption.

5267. Up to what rank does this corruption extend?—Really up to the tahsildar I should think.

5268. Up to and including tahsildars?—The percentage may not be so high now as it was some 10 or 15 years back, but still I cannot say that they are as pure as the corresponding judicial officers we have in this Presidency, viz., the district munsiffs.

5269. Have Executive Officers sufficient opportunities for personal contact with the people?—They have sufficient opportunities for personal contact, but very few of them take advantage of those opportunities or make use of them.

5270. For what reason?—Want of sympathy on the side of the officers, want of education on the side of the people, and their dread of approaching Revenue Officers who are almost always Magistrates; the officers' inability to converse with the people in their vernaculars, and the inability of the people to speak in English.

5271. As a rule in an ordinary village will there not be somebody who can speak some English, or enough English?—In many villages you will not find anybody who can speak English.

5272. And in most of the rural villages there will not be anybody who will speak any English at all?—I should not be far wrong in saying that in 50 per cent. of the villages you will not find anybody knowing English. (When I say villagers I do not mean the people who are imported as postmasters sometimes; you may in some big villages also find other officials; I do not include them among the villagers.

5273. That clearly must be a drawback to the intercourse between the District Officers and Divisional Officers and the people of the country?—Certainly.

5274. And it is very desirable therefore that the District and Divisional Officers should have greater knowledge of the vernaculars?—I think so. Then some of the officers have too much to do to find time or feel inclination for intercourse with the people. Other reasons are, too frequent transfers from district to district, too much correspondence and writing of reports.

5275. Your strong opinion is that there is not in the rural districts a sufficiency of intercourse between the District Officers and the Divisional Officers and the people?—There is not.

5276. Do you think the social relations between the District and Divisional Officers and the people amongst whom they live might be improved—that they might meet oftener, both in official, and in private life?—One may wish to have it, but in this country I think for a long time to come such a thing can only be hoped for.

5277. Is there any permanent obstacle in the way?—The manners and customs of the people are I think a great impediment to free intercourse, at any rate with European officers.

5278. Might there be, not a complete freedom of intercourse, but a greater freedom of intercourse?—Certainly.

5279. Would that be desirable?—Certainly.

5280. How would that best be procured?—In the first instance I should like the officers to act sympathetically to the raiyats whenever they meet them, and not depend on their subordinates so much for their information. Most of these Revenue Officers are officers who tour about the district; if they would only make it a point of talking freely with those they officially come into contact with, and occasionally going about the villages and putting questions and asking after their general welfare, more cordiality might result.

5281. You think that is not done sufficiently now?—Oh, no, it could not be expected.

5282. Is that because the District Officer is unwilling to do it, or because he has other duties which prevent him from doing it?—The language impediment is a great difficulty—that is the greatest difficulty; I do not think many are unwilling if they only had the opportunity; most of them would be very glad. But I think they are indifferent.

5283. You have something to tell us in connection with municipalities?—I think that the Government should not unduly interfere with mere details of municipal government, just as the Government of India should not interfere with the details of provincial Government.

5284. What you would desire is that within the budget the municipality should have the power to transfer from head to head?—I am not so particular about that.

5285. Then is it that you desire to have an unrestrained hand in preparing your budget?—In preparing the budget and submitting it.

5286. In rating and taxing the district confined within the municipality?—A municipal budget contains many items. If the Corporation of Madras recommended that one rupee increase should be given to a certain peon the provincial Government could interfere with that.

5287. Do you desire that the Madras Municipality should have a completely free hand in preparing the budget and in rating and in taxing the Municipality?—The rating and taxing is done under the Act.

5288. But do you desire it?—I would say, subject to the sanction of the Government, so far as rating and taxing is concerned.

5289. Then you think that the Government ought to have a restraining hand as to the amount of money to be levied by, and from, the Municipality?—Yes; Government must have a voice.

5290. You think the budget ought to be submitted to the Government and sanctioned by the Government?—Certainly.

5291. Within the sum sanctioned in the budget by the Government, has the Municipality a sufficiently free hand?—The Municipal Executive draws up a budget; 8 out of the 36 members sit together as a Standing Committee, and every item is scrutinised and passed by them; eventually the budget is passed by the Corporation at a special meeting, and it then goes up to Government. The Government may take exception on principle to any item in the budget, but they should not go too much into details. The Government ought not to interfere about such a petty detail as the raising of a peon's pay by one rupee. Everything involving a principle I think the Government should have a hand in deciding.

5292. How many peons are employed by the Municipality?—About 250.

5293. The raising of one peon's pay by one rupee might affect the whole 250?—Not necessarily.

5294. But it might?—Mathematically it might; in practice it does not. We have every year to show Rs. 20,000 as balance in our budget, so that the raising of a peon's pay by one rupee would not count.

5295. Is there anything else you want to bring to our notice with regard to the relations between the Municipality and the Government?—I think the Government ought to show a little more consideration for the resolutions sent up to Government by the Corporation.

5296. In what sort of matters?—In matters municipal.

5297. It depends what the resolutions are—upon what sort of points?—We have two big schemes now before us, the waterworks scheme and the drainage scheme. The waterworks scheme was prepared by a special officer of Government lent to the Municipality; in consideration of that we said that that officer should be put in charge of it. When the drainage scheme went up, the Government recommended that a gentleman should be employed for both schemes together, whose salary would be between Rs. 2,000 and 3,000 per month. The Corporation agreed to that, but subsequently the Government of its own accord sent a memorandum saying that one of our Corporation officers, the engineer, was quite good enough to look after both these schemes, provided we were prepared to pay him Rs. 2,000 a month. We said "We are quite willing that that gentleman should be in charge of the drainage scheme, and your own man who designed the waterworks scheme should be put on the waterworks scheme instead of a new man being brought out from home." Now the Government go back and say, "No, since you do not accept our terms we would rather get out a man from home." What is the good of the Corporation sitting and discussing and coming to a conclusion if, without giving any reason, the Government say, "As you do not agree that one of your own men should be paid Rs. 2,000 for both works, we will not have that one man to look after one of the works for a less sum"? That sort of interference is very unhealthy and undesirable in my opinion.

5298. How are the funds of the Municipality derived; does the provincial Government give you a block grant-in-aid?—Of late, Government have been giving us considerable sums of money by way of bonus, and also lending to us occasionally.

5299. How much of the expenditure of the Corporation is raised by cess or rates?—By proper taxation we raise about 10 lakhs of rupees a year; by miscellaneous income—for instance, sales and leases of municipal land—we get another 10 lakhs; it is a fluctuating item. We get about 20 lakhs from the town of Madras, and ordinarily we are able to make both ends meet in ordinary years.

5300. What is your total expenditure?—The ordinary expenditure would be about the same; if we collect 20 lakhs we spend about 19 lakhs odd.

5301. So that practically the whole of your expenditure is met out of your own resources?—That is so; occasionally the Government used to help us, but it is only recently, with reference to the big schemes, that they are obliged to help us to any great extent.

5302. Is there any other point which you wish to draw to our notice?—I should like the Government to help us in the matter of taxation. Sources which are legitimately ours, sources which are recognised to belong to the local authorities in other civilised countries, are taken away from us.

5303. What sort of sources?—For instance what are known as town duties, that is license fees for keeping liquor shops in the town. Another thing I can mention is, for instance, the revision of the taxes on arts and professions.

5304. I do not want to go into details; we want to deal with your relations to Government, not your grievances against Government?—In the case of a Corporation like the Madras Corporation, which has got larger responsibilities than it can ever meet successfully, I say you must permit us a freer hand in the way of raising taxes.

5305. Does this entail a great deal of correspondence between the Government and your Corporation?—Of late it has increased very considerably.

5306. What has the proportion of increase been?—I should not like to put it in that way; it might have increased the correspondence, and we have to hold special meetings, and naturally, when a meeting is held, resolutions are passed and the discussions are reported, and everything has to go before the Government. I do not think it has added appreciably to the correspondence.

5307. Is there any other point with regard to your relations with the Government?—I should like the Corporation to be given the liberty of electing its own President. I say nothing personally against any of our Presidents, they have all been estimable men, but I do say there has not been that cordiality and sympathy that there should have been; the President is appointed by the Government, and naturally he looks for promotion and advancement to the Government.

5308. Is the President the only officer of the Corporation appointed by the Government?—No; all the higher executive officers, the President, the Revenue Officer, the Municipal Engineer, and the Health Officer—these four officials are not only appointed by the Government, but in their appointment the Corporation is never consulted.

5309. Does the control by the Government either quicken or retard the execution of works which the Corporation approves of? For instance, if the Corporation wants to lay out a new street or park or build a tank, does it quicken the operation or make it slower; has it any effect upon it?—I do not see that it will have.

5310. What adverse effect beyond that which you have just described to us has the control of the Government upon your Municipality? You tell us that the appointed Chairman does not pay enough attention to the opinion of the members—that he is always looking to Government?—The result is sometimes the Government goes by his own opinion against the collective opinion of the Corporation.

5311. These are the two principal drawbacks in your opinion to the appointment of the Chairman and all these officers by the Government?—Yes; if the President was appointed by the Corporation, and was an elected member of the Corporation, he would have greater respect for the opinion of the Corporation.

5312. (Sir Frederic Lely.) Do you draw a distinction between appeals in personal matters and administrative appeals—that is to say, an appeal from a chuprassie who has been dismissed and an appeal from a cultivator against his land assessment?—I should not like to draw any distinction.

5313. You would give both classes unlimited right of appeal, both as to the amount involved and as to the authority to which they should go?—I would not call it unlimited. In my judgment, they are limited, and I would give them the existing rights whatever they are.

5314. You speak of the fact that an appeal lies making the deciding officer more careful?—It makes him pay more attention to the case.

5315. But would not that also apply to a case where there was only one appeal; so long as there was an appeal at all, would it not be likely to exercise that effect? Does the multiplicity of appellate authorities increase the care exercised?—There is a system known as demi-official correspondence with the direct appellate authority. I do not say it is done in any other way than openly, but naturally the officer who first hears generally writes about the case, when he knows that it has gone on appeal to the officer above him, and says, "Such and such are the facts of the case," and he emphasises his opinion.

5316. That is not quite an answer to my question. You say that a system of appeal is necessary because it makes a deciding officer more careful?—Yes.

5317. That would be equally true if there was only one appeal?—It would be true to this extent; there are officers with whom he could not correspond even demi-officially.

5318. You object to the one appeal on the assumption that the deciding authority in the case of the immediate appellate authority communicates with him demi-officially?—He has opportunities of communicating.

5319. Is that a general practice?—I cannot say that it is general; I know it is done in some cases.

5320. Does that apply to all ranks of officers?—I do not say that it applies to all officers.

5321. Suppose a Sub-Divisional Officer was to dismiss a subordinate and he appealed to the Collector; do you think the Sub-Divisional Officer would try to influence the Collector by writing to him demi-officially?—I do say that. Most honestly, he thinks that the man is a bad man, and he has dismissed him because he thinks so, and in a casual conversation, or in writing to the Collector, he will say "Such and such a man is a bad man," that is all.

5323. How can you know that it is common?—From my experience of people telling me so.

5324. People say a good many things that are not true in this portion of the world?—But even the appellate officers do not conceal it; they say, "I have heard since this case from so and so that you are a bad man"; it is done quite honestly and openly; there is nothing clandestine about it; I do not say it is done secretly in order to injure a man.

5325. You would consider that it is not altogether the right thing to do?—I should think so from the point of view of the petitioner.

5326. You go among the villagers in the course of your work?—Yes.

5327. You say that the general feeling among them is that revenue interests dominate over the minds of Government officers?—Yes.

5328. Are you referring to all classes of Government officers or only to subordinates; do you think with regard to the average Collector, for instance, that his main idea is to get a good sum of revenue out of his district?—That is my feeling.

5329. Deliberately? You say that from your knowledge of Collectors?—Yes and from my knowledge of the districts and from what takes place generally.

5330. Do you think the impression is correct?—Well, it seems to be so; I have always believed it to be correct.

5331. Do you not think very often it is the result of misunderstanding on the part of the people of the motives and intentions of Government officers?—I think it may be misunderstanding by the officials of the intentions of the Government; but I do not think the people are misunderstanding the feelings of the officers.

5332. For instance take forest administration. You admit that the main object of forest administration is the preservation of fuel and building timber and the more economical supply of grazing for the country generally; the main object of the department is the interests of the people?—Quite so.

5333. And yet in the eyes of the people as a rule it is a department run solely for the money that it makes?—No; the heart-burning is created in the working of the rules; it is not so much in the rules themselves.

5334. Enlightened men know what is the object of the Forest Department, but the ordinary villager does not realise that at all?—He has not such a high notion of it, but he does not object to it; it is in the working of the rules that there is a good deal of hardship.

5335. I am speaking of the conceptions of the people of the intentions of the Government?—They would probably not have such high conceptions.

5336. There is a misunderstanding?—Yes.

5337. Do you not think that that would apply to many other branches of Government?—It may.

5338. Then the remedy would appear to be to get the people to understand better the views of Government?—Undoubtedly; in cases where there is misunderstanding I think it ought to be got rid of.

5339. You spoke of the social relations between District Officers and the people, and you said the alienation is partly owing to their want of knowledge of the language. Have you not known in your experience cases where offence has been caused by ignorance of the customs of the people?—Yes, sometimes.

5340. Are such cases frequent?—I cannot say they are frequent; I have noticed occasions in which offence has been given without its being meant. For instance, officials sometimes feel insulted by the particular way a man stands, or the particular words he speaks, without considering that the man himself does not mean anything.

5341. That is a cause of misunderstanding?—Yes, it might be.

5342. Then as to the Municipality of Madras, you say that the Government should only interfere with the budget on fixed principles. Are you prepared to make a precise statement of the principles on which Government should intervene?—Certainly. Suppose the Corporation says that a new road should be made; if the Government says that it should not be made for the present, I do not see that the Corporation has any grievance.

5343. Then your principle would include the desirability or otherwise of new roads?—Yes, or of any new works.

5344. That is a detail, but you are not prepared to lay down a statement of principles?—It would be very difficult to make a catalogue of principles.

5345. Is the President the executive head of the Municipality?—He is.

5346. He runs the whole executive machine?—Yes, occasionally delegating his powers to other important officers—the Revenue Officer at times, the Engineer at other times.

5347. You would admit the principle that, in the Presidency town, which is the centre of Government and which comes more face to face with the outer world than other towns, Government ought to exercise a closer control than in some of the other big towns of the Presidency?—No, it ought to be the other way I think.

5348. Do you not think that Government is more concerned with the good management of the Presidency town?—If that is so, I should expect that the Government would help us more largely than it would help other municipalities. So far as supervision is concerned I should expect that in the case of a city municipality with highly paid officers, almost experts, and fairly intelligent Commissioners elected and nominated, there would be less occasion for closer supervision than in the case of a crude municipality in an out of the way place.

5349. You admit that the capital town of a Presidency stands in many respects on a different footing from the mere capital of a district, however large?—Certainly.

5350. (Mr. Dutt.) Your provincial budget requires the sanction of the Imperial Government?—Yes.

5351. And the Imperial Government sometimes makes what it considers necessary alterations before sending down the budget?—Yes.

5352. There is a certain date fixed for the discussion of the budget by the provincial Council?—Yes.

5353. Is the budget sent up to the Imperial Government before that date or after that date?—Before that date; it comes back cut and dried; nothing can be altered.

5354. It comes down with the sanction of the Imperial Government?—Yes.

5355. So that after that, if it appears desirable to make any alterations in the course of the discussion which takes place in the provincial Council, it is not possible to do so?—No; the provincial Government is powerless.

5356. Would you suggest that there should be some method of making alterations, should alterations be desirable in consequence of the discussion which takes place in your Council here?—I think so.

5357. You said that there may be cases involving only an amount of Rs. 100 which may go up in appeal to four or five or six different appellate tribunals. Are you aware of any such particular case involving an amount of Rs. 100 which has gone up to four or five tribunals?—I only stated my impression.

5358. You say call any particular case to mind just now?—In the case of a karnam some years ago who was dismissed, I had something to do with his appeal to the Government of India; that is one of the instances I have in mind.

5359. That was not a case involving Rs. 100?—In the case of this man it was only a few rupees; I do not know how you would calculate its pecuniary value.

5360. Can you say that a karnam who is dismissed has the right of appeal to the Imperial Government?—It might have been only a memorial; I cannot say what it was without referring to the case.

5361. You do not think that the check created by the knowledge that there is a further appeal is so desirable or necessary in the case of Government as in the case of local officers?—That is a question that will depend on each particular case. If the Collector of a district is dealt with by the Government I think he should have all appeals open to him.

5362. When you say that the interference of the Government with the budget should be confined to matters of principle and not apply to matters of detail, do you consider that the pay of an officer of the municipality is a matter of detail?—In some cases I would. For instance, a question of the pay of a peon, whether it should be Rs. 7 or Rs. 8, is not a matter involving any principle.

5363. But it may be the case of an officer on Rs. 50?—With reference to higher officers there might be a principle involved, but in the case of subordinates I do not think there should be.

5364. Where would you draw the line?—I would draw the line in the case of high executive officers, because there there may be a principle involved.

5365. So that you would allow the provincial Government to interfere with the municipal budget with regard only to the pay of the higher officers?—Yes.

5366. Suppose the municipality wanted to raise the pay of an officer from Rs. 300 to Rs. 500; you would allow the provincial Government to sanction it or not sanction it?—Yes. Suppose we said a peon should be paid Rs. 40 a month, that would be a different matter altogether; the Government might point out that it was utterly foolish; if the recommendation is so foolish as that, I think the Government should have the right to interfere.

5367. You say generally that your expenditure is met from your income?—The Government also makes loans on special occasions. When we are badly in want of funds they come to our assistance.

5368. With reference to big works?—Yes; with reference to the drainage and waterworks scheme now in hand they have promised to give us about 11 lakhs as bonus and 17 lakhs as a loan; I am not quite sure of the actual amount.

5369. As regards the income from liquor shops, you mean that this source of revenue ought to be transferred to the municipality?—Yes. I refer to license fees for the vend of liquor.

5370. You do not mean that the municipality should have the power of levying new taxes or increasing existing taxes without the sanction of the Government?—Under no circumstances should they do it without the sanction of the Government.

5371. Is any of the municipal work done by committees or sub-committees?—There is only one committee, which is called the Standing Committee. The President can sanction contracts and other things up to Rs. 2,000; up to Rs. 10,000 it must come before the Standing Committee, and anything over Rs. 10,000 to the Corporation.

5372. There is a Standing Committee which is a sort of executive committee for the municipality?—You may take it so, yes.

5373. There are no other committees?—No permanent committees; we appoint committees to report on special subjects from time to time.

5374. Do you think that committees would help the work of the municipality?—We have the power under the new Act to create committees.

5375. Are you in favour of the creation of Advisory Boards?—I am not in favour of Administrative Councils but I am in favour of Advisory Councils. I would have two Councils in each district, one for the district and one a taluk Council, to consist of three members resident in the taluk with property qualifications; they should be nominated by the Collector of the district for the present. This Council should advise the tahsildar and deputy tahsildar on such questions as the remission of revenue, questions relating to the repair of tanks, questions affecting village sanitation, questions relating to communal land boundaries and encroachments. In cases where the tahsildar or his deputy is unable to accept the opinion of the majority of his taluk Council he should record in writing his reasons for not accepting the same.

5376. Do you consider that opinions given by the district Advisory Boards should be in writing, or should they be consulted orally by the Collector?

—I should like their opinion to be put forward formally at a meeting of the Board, and be recorded in the usual way.

5377. And you would have the same procedure for the taluk Board?—Yes.

5378. Do you consider that it is desirable and possible to give the village communities greater powers in the disposal of local affairs?—So far as I know, in this Presidency there are no powers exercised by the village communities at all. The only power which a village munsiff exercises is civil and criminal power—he can hear civil cases up to Rs. 20, and he has jurisdiction in cases of simple assault and insult under a very very old Regulation. These powers I think should be taken away from him and vested in a village panchayat.

5379. Are you aware of the existence of some village unions in large villages or groups of villages?—A union as we understand it in this Presidency is something like a small municipality. We have two kinds of unions, major unions and minor unions, which have powers of taxation.

5380. Have you any personal knowledge of village unions?—I know how they are worked; I know many Chairmen of village unions; they are mostly vakils, and when I go to such places I generally stay with them, and I have taken some interest in these things.

5381. What powers do you think should be given to unions of villages?—There is no such union, that is, apart from the unions created by statute; the old panchayats do not exist at all.

5382. As to the unions created by statute, would you recommend giving any powers to those unions?—In the first place they are not in villages; they are what we may call places which have ceased to be villages, viz., rising places which may in a short time become towns. In the places which are of sufficient importance to have a municipality the Government usually appoints one.

5383. Then you recommend the revival of panchayats in the smaller villages?—Yes, I am thinking of those panchayats which have yet to be created.

5384. Can you mention any powers which could be with advantage bestowed on them?—No, I have not drawn up a statement.

5385. Could these panchayats be entrusted with any small public works in their own village?—Certainly, what are known as kudimaramat.

5386. The construction of wells and tanks and so on?—Yes.

5387. Do you think these panchayats could be entrusted with some powers of inspection of village schools?—Certainly.

5388. Could they be entrusted with power to try petty criminal and civil cases?—Certainly; they would be much better fitted for that than the present village munsiffs.

5389. Finally, have you anything to say generally with regard to decentralization?—This gives me an opportunity of expressing my fears about any attempt at too much decentralization. While I have very great respect for the Indian Civil Service as a whole—a Service which has given, and is capable of giving, India such capable and efficient public servants, most of whom are honest and hard working—yet I cannot help pointing out that there is a retrograde tendency of relying too much on the man on the spot.

5390. I wanted to know whether you had any suggestion to make?—I am against too much decentralization; I say, do not carry it out too far.

5391. (Mr. Hichens.) You say that the budget is submitted to the Legislative Council after it has been approved by the Government of India?—That is so.

5392. How long before the actual discussion do you receive it?—That used to be a standing complaint; we used to receive it two or three days before; this year we had a fairly good time given us I think—about ten days

The Hon. Sir

5393. You think you have had ample time to consider it this year?—One would like to have a little more time; but we know the inconvenience, and we do not complain.

5394. You think that 10 days is not enough?—Not quite, we should like to have a little more time.

5395. When the budget comes up to the Council what powers have you; are you able to move a resolution?—Absolutely nothing; we may make suggestions in our speeches, and say what we think about the budget and criticise it—that is all.

5396. But you cannot divide the Council?—No.

5397. If you make a suggestion does it to your knowledge ever go further; suppose you suggested that more money should be spent on a specific scheme, there is nothing to prevent the Government of Madras sending that recommendation up to the Government of India?—The only answer we get would be "This is the Government of India budget; it is cut and dried, and we have to carry it out"; that is all the reply we used to get.

5398. Do you, as a Member of the Council, feel that you have very little say in making any alteration in the budget, and that your opinions if they are expressed possibly do not take the matter very much further?—That is so. That is our grievance.

5400. Are you generally speaking satisfied with that arrangement as being generous towards Madras?—I cannot admit that; I do not think that Madras is treated as generously as other provinces; that is my impression.

5401. Could you amplify that answer at all and give me a specific instance?—We should like to have more money, that is all; I should like the provincial Government to get more money for their wants.

5402. Can you tell me whether it is proposed to revise the settlement?—I think recently there has been some improvement under certain headings; for instance, now the Local Governments are allowed to build up a famine fund within a limit; that is, it does not lapse as it used to do in the old days. They can build up, and there is a promise also by the Government of India that not only we may build up a fund, but that if any more is wanted they will be glad to contribute.

5403. Suppose that you in Madras were as generously treated as the other provinces, would you be content with the settlement?—Yes, I should be.

5404. (Mr. Meyer.) You spoke just now of the Madras provincial settlement with the Government of India as not being in your opinion quite just to Madras; are you aware that the Government of India have of their own accord suggested a revised settlement?—I am not aware of it; the suggestion has probably been made lately.

5405. In the case of appeals, you say that if an officer knows that there is an appeal possible against his order, it will make him more careful to do right than if there is no appeal?—I mean he will take care to put down his reasons if there is an appeal. We know that even in the Judicial Departments when there is an appeal the judge in the court of first instance has to record his reasons; in other cases he need not give reasons.

5406. You desire that the powers of the Municipality as regards Government should be increased—that the Government should dispense with a lot of the control they exercise over the Municipality. From your point of view would not that make the Municipality more careless in their work?—I have said, control in the matter of details; I do not want anything which involves a principle not to be subject to the supervision of the Government.

5407. But even in details would not that make the Municipality more careless?—I should think not; if the question was whether a peon was to get Rs. 7 or Rs. 8, I do not think the Municipality should be hampered by any interference. Of course, you must draw the line somewhere; if we recommended that a peon should be paid Rs. 50 the Government should interfere, but if the resolution was simply to increase a peon's pay from Rs. 7 to, say, Rs. 7-8 a month, that is a mere detail in which the Municipality ought to have a free hand. I fail to see that there is any principle involved in that.

5408. Although you would prefer the Collector to be given large powers in the matter of appeals, you think it would not hurt the Municipality to give them the final decision?—I do not think it follows.

5409. Under the Municipality you have a large number of municipal servants, have you not?—Yes, somewhere between 200 and 300 I think—all menial servants.

5410. Who punishes them?—Each departmental head punishes in the matter of fines in the first instance; any suspension, I suppose, they can recommend to the President; dismissals, I think, are entirely in the hands of the President. I have been a member of the Standing Committee for over five years; a man who is drawing Rs. 50 and over has an appeal to the Standing Committee; in anything below that there is no appeal. The order of the President is final.

5411. Are there appeals to Government?—Yes; anybody drawing over Rs. 50 can appeal to the Standing Committee and I think he can appeal to the Corporation, and eventually can memorialise the Government.

5412. Assuming that there are such appeals to Government, would you allow them to continue?—Yes.

5413. In all personal matters then you would allow an appeal from the Municipality to Government?—Yes.

5414. You say that, although you have never lived in a district, you have a certain amount of experience of district work and of the character of Government officers from your clients in cases?—Not necessarily from clients alone—from my friends in the mufassal. I go about the district not only in connection with professional work. We hold our annual conferences in the various districts; we have provincial conferences and we go there; we mix freely with the people in the district, and those people come to us when they come on their private business to Madras, and in that way we get into contact with people of all grades.

5416. Generally, is a person who has a grievance, real or imaginary, quite an impartial judge of the character of the administration?—Well, there are persons and persons; there may be persons who exaggerate things and there may be others who do not. It may be equally said that people who have no grievance have no business to talk about grievances, because they know nothing—a man who has not been hurt cannot feel the wound.

5417. You tell us that if a Collector shows sympathy with the people he is at once deprived of the promotion he has a right to expect in his own line and made a District Judge?—Not at once; I did not say at once.

5418. But that is the tendency?—That is the tendency.

5419. Do you mean to tell me that Collectors who have sympathy with the people and who are regarded as sympathetic Collectors do not rise high?—Sympathetic Collectors who recommend large remissions do not rise as they otherwise would.

5420. May I take an officer who is now dead—the late Mr. Grose; did you not regard him as a sympathetic Collector?—He was a sympathetic Collector.

5421. How did Mr. Grose end officially?—He became Second Member of Council, having been superseded once.

5422. You mean, a junior officer was put in first?—Yes, and a subsequent Government put Mr. Grose into his right place.

5423. Take Sir Henry Stokes, now retired—would you regard him as a sympathetic Collector?—He was a very capable and conscientious man, but I would not put him down as a sympathetic Collector.

5424. He was a Collector who knew his district?—Certainly, a very capable man.

5425. Do you say that Sir Henry Stokes would have refrained from making remissions if he felt them to be just?—Not if the proper information reached him.

5426. However, Sir Henry Stokes ended as Senior Member of the Council?—Yes. Certainly he was a very capable man; if only his subordinates had given him proper information he would have allowed remissions.

5427. You say that tahsildars generally are corrupt?—Yes.

5428. Are not most of the tahsildars nowadays graduates?—Not most; of course now there is a tendency to improve.

5430. Do you say that the corruption extends to the graduates?—There are black sheep in every fold.

5431. But generally speaking?—Generally, I should take it that it would not be to the same extent as in ill-educated persons.

5432. Then in so far as tahsildars are being recruited from the more educated classes, they are not corrupt?—I should think not.

5433. You spoke of the appointment of the President of the Municipality by the Government; you object to that?—Well, I should prefer him to be an elected member of the Corporation itself.

5434. Do you know the system of the Bombay Municipality; there is a President of the Corporation who is elected by the Corporation, but there is an executive officer, the Commissioner, who is appointed by Government. Do you think that that would be a good thing?—Yes, it may be better.

5435. You admit then that the Government might reasonably have some voice as regards the executive management?—Certainly, a good deal.

5436. On the other hand, you do not think it necessary that the lower officials, the Sanitary Engineer, the Health Officer and the rest, should be appointed by Government; you would leave that entirely to the Municipality?—I think the Municipality should have some voice in their appointment.

5437. Take your municipal Engineer; Government appoints him now; would you allow the Municipality to appoint him?—I do not see any harm in it; I think it would be more advantageous.

5438. You have told us about the budget control; besides that is it the fact that in regard to particular estimates for works you have to get the sanction of Government?—Yes, to anything over Rs. 10,000 I think we must get the sanction of Government.

5439. Do you regard that as a necessary limit?—I do not mind it; I should not like any change in that.

5440. You do not think it is necessary to give you larger powers there?—No, I do not think we want it.

5441. Do you spend much on education in the Madras Municipality?—We make a contribution.

5442. Who manages education?—The Educational Department.

5443. Would you prefer to have the management of your own education?—Yes, but that would involve additional expenditure; with our resources I should think it would be an additional responsibility, though it might be advisable perhaps.

5444. If you had the money you think you could manage it?—Certainly.

5445. Who manages the hospitals here?—We have municipal hospitals.

5446. You desire that that portion of the excise revenue which is derived from fees for the sale of liquors should be given to the Municipality of Madras?—Yes.

5447. Does any other municipality in India obtain such a revenue?—We contend that it ought to be municipal revenue.

5448. Has any other municipality in this country such a revenue?—No.

5449. Are you aware of any other country in which municipalities obtain the revenue from the liquor traffic?—I am told so.

5450. Have you any knowledge of that from your reading?—Not from my reading, but in other countries in Europe I am told such revenue is exclusively the property of the local bodies.

5451. If the Municipality enjoys a large share of the liquor duty, which is a State duty, would not the tendency be, if the Municipality was hard up, to increase the number of liquor shops, so as to get more money?—I should think not. If there was no tendency in the Government to do that, then in the Municipality, which is more a popular institution and in which the elected members are responsible to the public, there would not be that tendency.

5452. Which is better off generally—the Government or the Municipality?—Certainly the Government, but their responsibilities are larger.

5454. Was it subjected to a complete revision in 1904?—Yes, a somewhat complete revision.

5455. Were you on the Legislative Council when that was done?—No.

5456. Roughly I may take it that all this detail that you have given us about the Municipal and Local Boards Acts and so on is summed up into your thinking that the Acts ought to be brought into the melting-pot again and thoroughly reconsidered?—I never said that.

5457. But that is what it comes to; if you are going to alter the powers and so on, you must go through the Acts again?—Without bringing the whole Act into the melting-pot, I think it is open to the Municipal Council to be given these further powers, and if the Government is so inclined I do not think it is necessary to put the Act into the melting-pot.

5458. Has there been any sort of public movement in the town of Madras to get the Act reconsidered? Are the public discontented with it?—Yes, with reference to one point they were discontented, but there was no big demonstration or anything.

The Hon. Sir V. C. Desika Charry.
28 Nov., 1907.

M. R. Ry. C. VIJIARAGHAVACHARIAR was called and examined.

M. R. Ry. C.
Vijiaraghavachariar.

28 Nov., 1907.

5459. (Chairman.) What is your profession?—I am a first grade pleader practising in Salem and occasionally in Coimbatore. I have 25 years' practice. I was a member of the Salem Municipal Council for about six years. I was an elected member of the Madras Legislative Council for six years.

I would not recommend curtailing the existing right of appeal to any extent. Appellate decision would be more satisfactory and more loyally accepted and as a consequence there would be less inclination to carry appeals higher up—

(a) If no material other than the evidence which the appellant had the opportunity of examining and rebutting, is used in the disposal of his appeal.

(b) If the appellate authority is by law or departmental order required to set out the points for determination and the reasons for his decisions thereon. This might necessitate the hearing of the appellant in person or a duly qualified agent on his behalf.

I would give to the Collector and Sub-Divisional Officers power to grant remission and to suspend collection of arrears beyond the current revenue year without previous sanction.

I fear that Executive Officers can hardly be said to be in real touch with the people. The causes are innumerable, and consequently there would be necessarily extreme divergence of views as to the remedies. More leisure and greater knowledge of vernaculars would hardly remove the aloofness.

I venture to submit that a District Assembly or Council to assist the Collector is most desirable and most opportune. I would not call it an "Advisory" body. I make the following suggestions in reference to the constitution and functions of such an assembly or Council:—

- (1) The members should all be elected directly by the taxpayers under a combined property and educational qualification for voting.
- (2) The district should be divided into electoral units for the purpose, according to population, say one for every 100,000 inhabitants.
- (3) Each such unit should be allowed to return two members.
- (4) One member must have his usual residence within the unit and the other within the district. This would greatly diminish the risk of the people of large towns predominating in the Council while securing a sufficient number of educated and enlightened men.
- (5) Membership should be for a term of say three years.
- (6) Attendance should be compulsory and non-attendance without a reasonable excuse should be deemed sufficient cause for removal by the Assembly or Council.
- (7) Members should not be public servants or village officials.

As to the functions, individual members should have power of initiation; and the resolutions of the majority may be divided into two classes (a) those which cannot be set aside and are final, and (b) those which the Collector might set aside with the previous sanction of Government.

I would make a few suggestions by way of example:—

- (1) When the Assembly resolves that no existing pasture and grazing land should be closed and reserved.
- (2) When it resolves that no new land out of communal land or other lands within the village boundaries should be reserved.
- (3) When it resolves that no new liquor shops should be opened.
- (4) When it resolves that particular suggestions should be adopted on the occurrence of plague in reference to preventive and relief measures such as segregation, evacuation, examination of persons, above all, of women.

- (5) Any other resolutions on subjects purely affecting their district and which the Government might declare to be dealt with by them finally.

All subjects relating to the administration of the district might be discussed by the Council excepting those which the Local Government with the concurrence of the Government of India might exclude.

I would make the following suggestions by way of illustration:—

- (1) Suspension and remission of land tax on failures of crops and occurrence of calamities affecting crops.
- (2) Expansion of forests.
- (3) Rules as to permits for forest produce in reference to ploughs, fuel, grass, manure, timber for rebuilding raiyats' houses destroyed by fire and other calamities, and whether and when they should be free.
- (4) Closing of liquor shops.
- (5) Opening new pasture lands and diminishing forest lands.
- (6) Opening and closing of police stations, especially the location of punitive police.
- (7) Income tax appeals.
- (8) Resolutions of municipal and local Boards which the Collector might think should not be carried out.

The existing municipal and local Boards but very faintly carry out the original double object of educating the people in the art of self-government and of relieving the local Government and its subordinates. These bodies are capable of considerable improvement both as to their constitution and functions. The control over these bodies vested in the Collectors and Government by law and by a net-work of rules extends to the minutest details and is embarrassing and annoying. These, coupled with terrorizing provisions enabling the Executive Government to dismiss the members, do not always invite the best men to serve on them; and the anomalous position of the municipal secretary, practically beyond the control of the municipality, and to whom the Chairman is under law bound to delegate several of his powers of these bodies, does not evoke a spirit of self-reliance or enthusiasm to serve the people and the Government on these Boards. The law must be thoroughly recast so as to—

- (a) make the majority if not all the members truly representative of the people by direct election by the tax-payers;
- (b) make the office of the President and Chairman invariably elective;
- (c) enable these bodies to frame their own budgets without being subject to interference by Government only by a resolution in the Legislative Council;
- (d) enable them to appoint their own staff for all purposes;
- (e) enable them to manage all their own schools with the help of an inspecting agency appointed by themselves;
- (f) enable them to manage all their affairs by appointment of administrative committees including participation in measures relating to prevention of the plague when they contribute funds towards the expense.

I do not think circumstances exist, in this province, warranting the control of any municipality by the District Board. In the present state of affairs such control would not be conducive to the development of public spirit in a municipal town.

Village groups may be most advantageously formed. Each group must consist of several villages in view to the selection of competent men to the discharge of the new duties and in view to avoid risk of factious spirit in a single petty village influencing the conduct of the men called upon to discharge public duties and in view also that their decisions and acts may be accepted loyally. I would suggest that each group should furnish from 300 to 500 adult men.

5460. You have heard most of the evidence given by the last witness?—I heard a good deal of it.

5461. I take it that you and he are in substantial agreement as to the curtailment of the right of appeal?—I think so.

5462. You do not wish to see it curtailed?—No.

5463. Where do you live?—In Salem, over 200 miles from this place.

5464. Is that a large town?—Yes, of about 70,000 inhabitants.

5465. Do you live any part of your time in the country?—I frequently go there, but I do not live there.

5466. Are you an owner of property in the country?—No.

5467. You have no first-hand knowledge of affairs in the country?—Although I have no property I may say that some of my relations have. I once had property.

5468. What do you in practice know about the work of Government in the country districts and the relations between the Government officers and the people?—I know it in the course of my practice as a pleader; I also take considerable interest in knowing how things go on.

5469. You say that you would like the power of the Collector and Divisional Officer to remit revenue on wet crops to be extended also to dry crops?—Yes.

5470. What have you to say as to the knowledge of the vernaculars on the part of British officers?—As a rule they do not speak well, but I should say the vast majority of them understand the vernaculars when the people speak; that is my opinion.

5472. Are the Divisional Officers capable of holding a conversation upon subjects outside their immediate work with educated native gentlemen in the vernacular language?—I do not think as a class they are capable of that without the assistance of an interpreter; they may be able to ask a few questions about the welfare of the people, but I do not think they can keep up a conversation. I am speaking of them as a class; there are exceptions.

5473. Do you think the tendency of late years has been towards an increased knowledge of the vernacular?—I should hesitate to say one way or the other.

5474. As it was 20 years ago, so it is now?—I think so, I have not been able to see any appreciable change. I must say there is a greater desire to know more; if there has been any change at all, the officers are anxious to know more.

5475. Do they set a higher standard of work to themselves than their predecessors did 20 years ago?—I do not think there is any perceptible change.

5476. Do you notice any neglect or ignorance of native habits and customs and etiquette?—I cannot notice much, because there is very little social intercourse between Englishmen and natives of India.

5477. Do you think it would be possible to get a greater intercourse?—Between individuals, but not a class; it is not possible now.

5478. But as between the Collector and the leading men in his Collectorate, would it be possible?—Yes; it would be possible simply as Collector—it depends upon the man, but otherwise than as Collector, it is impossible.

5479. For what reason?—I think the reasons are numerous. I do not think it is possible unless Englishmen generally change the opinion which they now hold, I am sorry to say, about Indians.

5480. You think there must be a greater display of affability?—I do not mean that; that would be slightly beneficial, no doubt, but I do think that they must know us more and have a better opinion of our moral character.

5481. That is difficult but not impossible?—I do not say it is impossible; it is very possible if the rulers both here and in England would take what I should consider a more statesmanlike view, than they have displayed of late, of the capabilities and feelings of Indians.

5482. You will agree that it is highly desirable?—Most highly desirable in the lasting interests both of England and of India. Happily I have a number of English friends both in England and in India with whom I am on excellent terms on personal grounds. But I am now talking of English as a class and of Indians as a class—friendship between English and Indians is possible, but I say it exists very rarely. I consider that the English rulers, here as well as in England, ought to take a more statesmanlike view of matters relating to India. If Indians were officially everywhere placed side by side with Englishmen—that is to say, as a beginning, if there were a joint Private Secretary to the Governor, one Member of the Executive Council and one member of the Revenue Board, one or two Chief Secretaries and one or two Under Secretaries, chosen from among Indians, I think a good deal of misunderstanding so far as officers of Government are concerned would be immediately removed.

5483. We are very glad to have your views about that, but you will understand that it is a point which hardly comes within the subject of decentralization?—I put it with diffidence; I thought it was perhaps beyond the scope of the present enquiry, but you asked me what were the causes of the want of intercourse between British officers and the people and what were the obstacles in the way of increasing that intercourse, and I ventured to name what I consider to be the chief remedy.

5484. Do you think that Advisory Councils can be constituted and that they ought to be constituted?—I do.

5485. Would you give us very roughly your ideas as to the constitution of such a body?—I should give one member for, say, each 50,000 inhabitants, or, as I put it, two for 100,000; that is to say, one to be elected from a small selected area and another from within the whole district, or it might be the larger towns.

5486. Would you, as some of the witnesses suggested, recommend the abolition of the District Boards?—No.

5487. And as to the taluk Boards?—The taluk Board and the panchayats and the municipalities should all be retained.

5488. And then in addition to all that you would have the Advisory Council?—Yes.

5489. Would you lay greater stress upon the creation of the panchayat or upon the creation of the Advisory Council?—If I am to choose between them I would rather begin at once, to make the Government more popular, with an Advisory Council for the whole district.

5490. You attach greater importance to the creation of an Advisory Council than you do to the creation of a panchayat?—Yes; it would take some time before we got the panchayat into efficient order.

5491. There would be no difficulty in the villages, as far as you know, in creating panchayats?—No difficulty whatever.

5492. You could get suitable persons?—Very suitable persons provided you do not confine yourself to one revenue village. As a matter of fact they put together small hamlets and call them a revenue village. My idea is, a number of villages capable of giving some 300 to 500 adult men should be put together as one group.

5493. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) One point about these Advisory Councils. You say that members should not be public servants or village officials. Would not village officials make very good members?—From the point of view of efficiency they would.

5494. I do not mean the village accountant, but, say, the head of the village?—Yes, he would.

5495. Then why do you exclude him?—Because we cannot be sure of his voting quite in accordance with the merits of any particular case.

5496. You mean he would be too much under the influence of the Collector?—No; if he was under the influence of the Collector it would not much matter, but the meanest officials of all the departments in the district would influence him.

5497. Is he not strong enough to resist the influence of, say, the local police officer?—According to my experience he is not. He has a lot of appointments at the same time; he is police officer, magistrate and munsiff; as a police officer he is very much guided by the subordinate police.

5498. The Municipalities and District Boards Acts have been in force now for some 20 years odd?—Yes, there was a Municipal Act as far back as 1871 I think.

5499. But what is the age of the present Acts?—A little over 20 years; they were modified some twelve years ago.

5500. They have not been substantially modified for 20 years?—No.

5501. The upshot of your evidence is that these Acts ought to be put on the anvil again and brought up to date?—Yes; but, without changing the law, a good deal could be done. The law, as it stands, is not given full effect to; the law, as it stands, is ignored in several of its vital portions.

5502. (Mr. Meyer.) You spoke of there not being sufficient intercourse between European officials and the gentry of the country; is that partly due to the caste system?—It may have been in the old days: it is not now, the people do not care two pence for caste so far as Europeans are concerned; they no longer wash after touching a European: that is a notion which has died years ago.

5503. The orthodox Brahman never thinks of these things?—There may be here and there old people in a village who would do the same even if they touched me; it is not directed against Europeans; it is a social matter, and a man of those opinions would very often bathe if he had touched his own child.

5504. Still it has to do with the freedom of intercourse with Europeans?—There are such differences among Hindus themselves.

5505. But it all has to do with the freedom of intercourse that would subsist between Englishmen and Brahmans?—This is a thing that I have never been able to follow; I do not think that our declining to dine with Europeans should stand in the way of free intercourse. I do not think that inter-dining has anything to do with it, at all events not to an appreciable extent.

5506. You speak of giving the Collector and the Sub-Divisional Officer power to grant suspensions and remissions of revenue; do you mean absolute power or just the power of recommendation?—So far as remissions are concerned, I should say absolute power.

5507. And with regard to suspensions?—Suspensions too.

5508. Even if it extended to say a quarter of the land revenue of the whole district?—It might be even more in times of distress.

5509. You do not think that that would appreciably embarrass the provincial finances?—It might embarrass the finances and it might be, all the same, just.

5510. You speak of these Advisory Councils as being merely advisory, but would they not be really Administrative Councils?—As I propose it they would not be administrative except, perhaps, in hearing income tax appeals. I do not say that my scheme is faultless.

5511. In respect of certain matters, you say that the decisions of the Council cannot be set aside but are final; therefore so far, they are an administrative body. Can they not supersede the Collector in respect of these matters?—Well, they would content themselves with passing resolutions.

5512. What would happen if the Collector did not agree with the resolution?—All the same, it would have to be carried out.

5513. It must be carried out whether the Collector agrees with it or not?—Yes.

5514. Then the power so far rests not with the Collector but with your assembly?—Well, not quite, unless it had the power of initiative in reference to the subject matter of the resolution.

5515. The power rests with the assembly?—Yes.

5516. Would your assembly generally be constituted of the men of the higher castes?—Not necessarily; for some time to come the higher caste representatives might predominate over the lowest people, such as the Panchamas, but eventually they would come to represent all castes.

5517. There would be no Panchamas on the Council?—For some time to come I fear there would not.

5518. I will take one case by way of illustration; you mentioned as one of the powers in which the Council should have the final authority, the opening of liquor shops?—Yes.

5519. Might not that affect the Panchamas?—Yes, and most beneficially.

5520. Then you would coerce the Panchamas by not providing liquor shops?—In so doing I should do them no harm.

5521. But suppose they said they wanted to have liquor shops; would your Advisory Council be likely to listen to the wishes of the Panchamas in that respect?—Certainly.

5522. Do I understand you to say that you desire the municipalities to have absolute power over their own affairs?—Yes.

5523. Without any restriction by the Government?—Without any restriction whatever, subject to annual criticism. I exclude appeals by any aggrieved member of the staff; that should be subject to appeal.

5524. But in administrative matters?—In administrative matters I want them to be left absolutely alone.

5525. You speak of criticism by Government. Suppose Government say "We consider that you are neglecting education" and the municipality say "We do not care much about education; we prefer to spend our money on roads"?—That municipality would not last long; you must remember that municipalities are confined to the large towns, and there there is public opinion. A municipality that said "We do not care for the opinions of the Government in educational matters" would not last long.

5526. If the Government criticise, is the Government to have the power to enforce its criticism, or is the final power to be left to the municipality?—The final power should be with the municipality.

5527. You say that they should manage their own schools with the help of an inspecting agency?—Yes.

5528. Then, so far as the municipality is concerned, you would abolish the Government Education Department?—I did not say that; I spoke of schools maintained by municipal funds.

5529. Education is one of the functions of a municipality?—Yes.

5530. Within the municipality, the municipality ought to look after education?—Whether their funds are sufficient or not I do not deal with; wherever they do maintain schools, I say they ought to be left alone.

5531. And the Education Department should be ruled out?—I do not say that they should be ruled out but they should not interfere.

5532. Are they to inspect?—They may inspect if they like, simply for the purpose of informing the Government, in order to enable the Government to lay down proper rules, to compare results, and criticise and so forth.

5533. As regards the District Boards, would you apply the same practice?—Yes, the taluk Boards and the District Boards should have the same absolutely free hand in regard to education.

5534. Then I put it to you that the provincial educational authorities, the Director-General of Public Instruction and the Inspector of Schools and all the rest, are to be purely inspecting officers?—Inspecting, and if you like advisory officers.

5535. (Mr. Hichens.) I understand you to make one rather important exception in regard to the independence of municipalities and other local authorities, namely, in the matter of appeals; I understand you to say that appeals should be allowed to go to the Government?—I think in the case of personal matters there ought to be an appeal to Government or to one or two officers whom the Government might choose to appoint for the purpose.

5536. Say the Collector?—Suppose they appoint a Board for the whole Presidency. I have not dealt with this, because my views are not matured, but I should like in the case of an aggrieved staff to have an appeal to the Government.

5537. Why do you make exception in favour of the staff?—Because there is the chance of the municipality and the Chairman going wrong. If there is a powerful Chairman whose influence may carry the municipality with him, there is a chance of doing injustice to the staff.

5538. There would be an equal chance in other directions?—That would be with regard to public affairs.

5539. Surely, those are public affairs?—I do not think the two are exactly synonymous. It is one thing to allow an appeal to a man who is punished. I do not say that there should be an appeal necessarily to the Government, but I should like to have a Board constituted by the Government, say for all the municipalities, a Board of three members to hear appeals from aggrieved officers. My own opinion is that then the municipality and the Chairman would be more careful both in the matter of the recruitment of the staff and in the matter of punishments.

5540. In asking that a municipality should have elective powers, do you mean that you think the functions of a municipality should be carried out for the benefit of the public as a whole?—Yes, for the municipality as a whole.

5541. You mean that the decision should be by the majority?—Yes.

5542. That is a principle that appeals to you in this country?—Well, I think so; it applies everywhere I think.

5543. (Mr. Dutt.) You have proposed a fresh system of election for the creation of Advisory Boards?—Yes.

5544. You do not think that if taluk Boards and municipalities were asked to name members of the Advisory Board that would be sufficient?—Tentatively it might answer, but then I should prefer that the elected members of these Boards should elect the members of the Advisory Councils.

5545. The elected members of the taluk Boards and the municipalities might name the members of the Advisory Board?—No members of the taluk Boards in this province are elected now, although the law says that two-thirds may be elected; but it requires the sanction of the Executive Government, and the Executive Government has not chosen to give that sanction yet.

5546. With regard to municipalities and District Boards, they have practical independence in their work?—I cannot say that they have.

5547. Would you propose that the budget of these bodies should go up to Government for revision and sanction?—The Government should not interfere with the budget; that is the life of these Boards; and as an alternative it might be discussed in the local Legislative Council; after a resolution is passed that resolution might be given effect to.

5548. You propose that the budget should be prepared and then it should be sent up for instruction?—Instruction and criticism, to be made use of afterwards.

5549. But you would not give the Government any power to make any alterations in the budget?—No.

5550. You yourself have been a member of the Legislative Council?—I was.

5551. You are aware that the provincial budgets have to go up to the Imperial Government for their sanction?—Yes.

5552. And the Imperial Government have the power of making any alteration?—Yes.

5553. You would not give the provincial Government the same power with regard to municipalities and District Boards?—I would give that power to the provincial Government, which is now subordinate to the Government of India, if the provincial Governments were made independent, and the Government of India was only the national head of all the provinces with some definite limited powers. At present the Madras Government is subordinate to the Indian Government; in fact, under an old statute the Government of India can suspend the Madras Government altogether; therefore the relationship between the Government of India and the provincial Governments is different from the theoretical relationship between the provincial Government and Local Boards.

5554. Under existing circumstances would you allow the provincial Government power to alter the budgets of the municipalities and District Boards?—I would not.

5555. (Sir Frederic Lely.) You suggested that the attendance at the Advisory Council should be compulsory?—Yes.

5556. You do not propose to compel attendance by any other means than removal from the list for non-attendance?—That is all; but I may say that in the old regulations in Madras under the East India Company relating to panchayats, non-attendance was punished by a fine. There were regulations to that effect in 1816.

5557. The Council is to consider among other things the suspension and remission of land revenue and the failure of crops?—Yes.

5558. Is not that rather like giving the debtors of an estate power to decide whether they shall pay their debts or not?—But that is in conference with the Collector; he can override them if he likes.

5559. You think that it would be useful to the Collector to have placed before him the views of this Council?—Yes; the Collector could consider the advice of the Council and then come to a conclusion; the Collector might take part in the discussion.

5560. You would allow the Collector to be there and to join in the discussion?—Yes; I would allow the Collector, without being a member, to join in the discussion.

5561. Other officials might be present also?—Yes.

5562. Suppose a municipality levied a transit duty; would you give the Government power to interfere?—If it is legal, I would not give the Government power to interfere in any tax.

5563. Not even a duty which would operate as a transit duty and obstruct the trade of the country?—If it did, they could alter the law.

5564. But without altering the law, suppose a municipality imposes a heavy octroi duty; would you give a municipality the power to do that?—Speaking personally for myself, I am very much against octroi duties, but if the law allows them, I would not object to a municipality having the power to impose such duties.

5565. I am asking you whether you think the law should allow it or not?—I think the law should not allow it.

5566. Suppose one of your municipalities passed a rule of taxation imposing an octroi duty upon, say, goods in transit, without providing for a refund on any goods; would you enable Government to interfere to stop that?—Not if it was legal.

M. R. Ry. P. KESAVA PILLAI was called and examined.

5569. (Chairman.) Have you any practical experience of government in India?—Yes, as a District Board member since 1884 and taluk Board member at Gooty.

5570. I think you have heard most of the evidence given to-day?—I heard the last witness.

I am in favour of allowing the delegation of powers to grant dry remissions. They are now very much hampered by the Board and the Government.

The Forest Member of the Board of Revenue is not sufficiently strong. Adequate weight is not given to his views by Government, when the department opposes them. The Department looks to the revenue to justify its own existence and has no sympathy for the people.

District Officers have sufficient opportunities for personal contact with the people. But they do not avail themselves of the opportunities. They seem to labour under the impression that they know much better of the people and their grievances than the people themselves, and they are apparently afraid that by coming in contact with the people their dignity will suffer and that they may fall victims to interested representations. The people themselves feel the aloofness and unapproachableness of the Collector, and would not venture to acquaint him with the trend of public feeling or with the working of public measures.

I do not think the European Executive Officers possess sufficient knowledge of vernaculars, but, though a knowledge of vernaculars is desirable, it is not so essential for kind, sympathetic, and proper administration, as they have interpreters, and as people can choose spokesmen, who know English. It is on their anxiety to understand the people's point of view and their feeling of sympathy that the success of administration would depend.

The Government is not bestowing much anxious thought in the selection of Collectors. It is a standing complaint, that when some Collector is good and sympathetic to the people he is made a District Judge.

A Collector is interested in convictions in forest, abkari, and such other cases, so much so that he sends out circulars about the way in which forest and abkari cases should be dealt with. Magistrates think it expedient to subordinate justice to what they think departmental interest.

The system of Bench Magistrates may be extended and may be given larger powers. They will be of real help to the committing Magistrates in the preliminary enquiry of register cases. Their knowledge and experience of local conditions will be of utmost value to the Magistrates, and will ensure public confidence and public safety. The jury system should be introduced in the trial of at least murder cases by Sessions Judges.

The only effective and wholesome method to interest the people in the administration, and to make them feel for the stability and continuance of the British rule, is to restore the old panchayat system or some sort of village autonomy, with some modifications, if necessary, to suit the present conditions. As it is, the village is almost disorganised. The village taliari or watchman behaves as if he were the master of villagers. The low paid village munsiff, who is magistrate, civil judge, and revenue collector, rolled into one, feels that he is in no way responsible to the elders and the common people of the village. He is a miniature autocrat, working to gain the favour of policemen or revenue officials in a distant station.

Co-operative credit societies are now started by Government, where villagers are elected as 5567. Suppose there was a small colony of brick-makers in a town who had their kilns with hereditary rights in a certain position, and the municipality proposed to eject them; would you give them a right of appeal?—No.

5568. They would simply have to submit?—They have their own representatives and they can make themselves felt; I do not believe in hereditary right to carry on offensive trades and to poison people.

directors. If they can manage banking themselves under sympathetic guidance and instructions, they can be trusted not to have been so thoroughly demoralised as to have lost the co-operative spirit of their ancestors.

It is quite possible, and it is of the most vital importance to the well-being of the people and to the interest of good government, to revive the panchayat system, with powers over educational, sanitation, police, "village forests," and other communal matters, pertaining to the villages concerned. Just as they have a village, or a group of villages and hamlets, under a village officer and village accountant, a panchayat can be formed for the village, or villages, by the appointment of the village munsiff and the village accountant and by the election of a number of villagers to sit on it. The provisions were made in the Local Board's Act of 1884, for members to be elected by taxpayers even to the union panchayats; but this good intention of the Government was never translated into action. This admitted principle should be acted upon to form these popular institutions in the villages. Such a body, periodically elected, will infuse new life into the villagers and make them alive to their duty and responsibility for the detection and suppression of crime, for sanitation, for the preservation of trees and topes near the villages (which have been disappearing, after the Forest Department have laid their hands on them for sale, without replacing them by new plantations), for protecting people from starvation in famine times, and in short for hearty co-operation with the Government in their aims and administration. Panchayats may not come up to expectations for some time, but panchayats, if sympathetically encouraged, will just like in any other country evolve, through struggles and experiences, into self-respecting, useful and loyal institutions.

The Forest Department may protest against the placing of any forest area in the hands of the villagers. It is the working of the Forest Laws and Rules more than any other department that affects the people in the necessities of life, and that creates misery and dissatisfaction even in the most ignorant mind. The department have appropriated village pastures and reserved even barren rocks and useless wastes, in some places to the very confines of the villages, wherever they could find a square mile of waste land. There are no arrangements made "for the special appropriation for the use of villages of parts of forest lands, on which inhabitants can pasture cattle and cut wood free of charge, subject to certain conditions, designed to prevent the forest from being completely extirpated."

Civil and criminal work, if entrusted to the panchayats within a certain limit, will be better administered and the people will be better satisfied, and litigation in courts, and its consequent demoralizing influences, will be less, promoting clean life among the people. When these panchayats are established, it will be easier to establish Local Boards, on a satisfactory basis.

The inefficiency of the Local Boards complained of, is due to their constitution and management. The Local Boards' Act of 1884 provided for establishing union panchayats on a partly elective basis, taluk Boards with two-thirds of their members elected, and District Boards with three-fourths of their members elected; and also it permitted the election of Presidents and Vice-Presidents to both the District and taluk Boards. But the Government ignored the provisions, perhaps for want of sufficient faith in the capacity of the people, and adhered to the nomination system under the Presidentship of Collectors and Deputy Collectors. The nomination of members to the Boards practically rests with tahsildars and Deputy Collectors; and the Collector, with little or no knowledge of the people, appoints them, and sends up the names for formal approval. When members are re-appointed, the Collector does not require even the formal approval of the Government. The Collectors and Deputy Collectors are also ex-officio Presidents of the District and taluk Boards respectively. What power, and what influence, can these nominated members exercise in the presence of the Collector and the Deputy Collector who could make and unmake the members? If the constitutions of these public bodies be changed, and Presidents and Vice-Presidents appointed by election, then they will be free to exercise powers to the public satisfaction, and to give wholesome advice and valuable help to the Executive Officers of the district on many public questions.

The Boards as they now exist may with advantage to the people's reputation be abolished; and the Collectors may then feel more responsible for the proper selection of Local Fund Engineers and other servants of the Board, and to watch with interest the expenditure of the Local Funds.

These bodies should be established upon a popular basis and should have the power of establishing agricultural farms, promoting technical education, dealing with the location of liquor and toddy shops, and advising the executive authorities on the difficulty of any religious feuds, on the famine questions affecting the raiyats, and all general administrative problems. No separate advisory body is then necessary. (When Collectors have to take the advice of the Boards or seek their help, they may be present at the Board's meetings and hear the discussion, guiding them with necessary information. If a separate advisory body, consisting of perhaps nominated members, exists, it will not be of much value, for the discussion will not be free and frank in the presence of the Collector.

5571. Are you in favour of giving the Collector power to grant remissions in case of dry crops?—Yes.

5572. Would you limit that power by any fixed sum, or would you allow him to go up to any sum he likes?—As large as might be necessary.

5573. You are of opinion that the forest administration is not always in touch with the needs of the people?—Not at all.

5574. I gather that that is principally due to the fact that reservations are made of lands which are not really forest?—Yes. Many of the so-called reservations are all barren rocks and unproductive soil near the villages.

5575. Who has the power to declare a particular piece of land a forest reservation?—The forest officer recommends to the Collector, and the Collector makes a recommendation to the Government, and the Government declares.

5576. Is the forest officer as a rule constantly moving about among the villagers in his circle?—He does move as far as the reserve goes, but he has nothing to do with the people.

5577. He moves about?—Yes.

5578. Suppose he declares a piece of land to be reservation, would he have gone and looked at it first of all?—He is supposed to have looked at it.

5579. When he declares a piece of land to be reservation, before he recommends it to the Collector for reservation, does the forest officer see it personally?—He is supposed to have seen it; I cannot say that he does.

5580. Do you know any case in which he has not done it?—No, I cannot say that I do.

5581. Are the forest officers as a rule capable of speaking the vernacular?—Yes, there are only two who came from the north of India, who were not able to speak the vernacular.

5582. Therefore, as a class, you would say they are able to get the opinion of the people who live in the forest areas?—They are able to get it, but they do not.

5583. Having got it, do they disregard it?—I do not think they ask for it at all.

5584. With regard to the District Officers you say that they do not avail themselves of their opportunities of mixing with the people freely?—No, they do not.

5585. Is that partly because of different racial ways of looking at things?—So far as the raiyats are concerned, I do not think that racial feeling exists with the Collectors; Collectors do go to the villages, but they do not seem to think that the people ought to be consulted or be mixed with.

5586. Do they talk as a rule with the local gentry or men of influence?—No; they talk to the officials, especially the Deputy Collectors and tahsildars.

5587. And to the revenue inspectors?—No; they stand at a distance.

5588. The Collector goes nearly every year to every division?—Yes.

5589. Therefore he sees at all events all the officials?—He sees the officials.

5590. And he would have an opportunity of seeing all the native gentlemen?—If he liked.

5591. But he does not like?—He does not.

5592. Can he speak to them in their own language as a rule?—Some of them can talk the vernacular.

5593. And some of them cannot?—Very few cannot.

5594. Have you ever known any who could not?—I have known one, who was not able to speak the language of the district, which was Telugu, but he knew Tamil.

5595. That is a very undesirable state of things?—Certainly, but he was a very sympathetic Collector.

5596. You wish to see the system of village panchayats restored?—Very much.

5597. That will be, you think, a great advantage to the villagers?—It will be a great advantage; I think the people will then begin to be a people.

5598. And there would be no difficulty, in each of the villages, in getting a proper number of persons to serve on the panchayat?—No. They have not found any difficulty in starting co-operative societies where the members are elected for two years.

5599. They manage a sort of co-operative bank, and therefore they ought to be able to look after the village well?—Yes.

5600. Capacity which breaks out in one direction will break out in another?—Yes; and banking is the more important business.

5601. Then with regard to the District Boards; do you think that they should be abolished as one or two witnesses have told us?—No, I do not think so.

5602. You think that that would be a very unwise proceeding?—Yes, because it is a body that unites the whole district.

5603. Do you think, as they are now constituted, that they represent pretty well the opinion of the district?—No.

5604. What class of opinion do you think is wanting?—The nomination itself is at fault.

5605. Is a right class of member nominated?—The majority of them are nominated by the tahsildars.

5606. By whom were you nominated?—I was nominated by the Collector, that was in 1884, and afterwards elected by the taluk Board. I was nominated to the taluk Board by one Collector, and I was put out by another Collector.

5607. And then renominated?—Another Collector came and put me in.

5608. Of course in your case that was a wise choice; I daresay he makes the same wise choice in regard to other people?—He cannot know all the people; there are 24 members to be nominated. I would not be free to talk in the presence of a Collector; I am only a nominated member; we feel sometimes diffidence in speaking out, especially when the Collector himself sits; and besides him, there are members who are officials themselves—the tahsildars and so on.

5609. We had a witness who told us that, as a Divisional Officer, he had been out-voted by the taluk Board, and had followed their advice, as he thought, wisely?—Sometimes you get an officer like that; we have had one or two who were very kind and invited us to give our advice and heard us and met us at garden parties and so on, but that is not common.

5610. In those cases you had no hesitation in expressing your real opinions?—We had no hesitation, because we knew the officers to be very sympathetic and good men; they would not take our advice amiss.

5611. You tendered it freely and it was accepted?—That is so.

5612. But that is not the general practice and you would like a greater freedom?—Certainly.

5613. And you think that that freedom would be of advantage to the people of the locality?—To the people, and even to the Government service.

5614. Would you increase the number of members of the District Board?—Not necessarily; we have 24 members on our District Board; ours is a small district; other districts may require more.

5615. Taking one district with another you would not increase the number of members of existing District Boards?—We might increase the number perhaps in order to give a larger scope for election.

5616. Are the taluk Boards large enough?—We have 12 members; there are some Boards that have more; we might perhaps have more.

5617. If the taluk Boards and the District Boards were improved in the way you suggest, would it be necessary in your opinion to have an Advisory Council?—No, not at all; if they are elected bodies with powers added, that is quite enough; there is no necessity for other Boards.

5618. And if they are not elected Boards?—I do not think it would be of any use.

5619. Therefore an Advisory Board nominated by the Collector or nominated by the Government or by the Divisional Officers, in your judgment would not be of any use?—Not at all.

5620. It would be of no greater use than the existing District Board and taluk Board?—No.

5621. (Mr. Hichens.) How would you propose to provide the funds for the panchayats? You suggest that they should have certain functions; sanitation, I suppose, would be one, and there would be various other things that they could do, which would cost money?—Certain items might be provided for from the Government funds, and if the panchayats were given power they might be asked to levy some small tax for sanitation; but as for education and other purposes the local funds would have to provide them.

5622. You suggest for one thing that they should have a grant from the District Board funds?—Yes.

5623. And then from provincial funds?—Yes.

5624. I suppose you would agree that that should be allotted to you through the District Board?—Yes.

5625. Then, they should have special powers of taxation in the shape of a house tax?—Just like in any other union.

5626. We have been told that the reason why the village unions were unpopular was that this house tax was levied there?—To some extent that is so, but when people are given power and they see the advantage of spending the money themselves they will not mind paying some tax.

5627. Do you not think that village unions see that to-day?—No; they are nominated members; somebody does the work, they do not know who; they are quite in darkness about it; the villagers do not see it at all.

5628. Then if they were not nominated they would be perfectly contented?—No nominated body would be of any use; if they are elected, they would see the benefit of these things.

5629. That is why the house tax is unpopular in the village unions to-day?—To some extent because they do not see the benefit and have no voice in spending the money.

5630. What other reason would you give why the village union is inefficient?—Because they are nominated members.

5631. Nothing else?—No.

5632. But you would maintain the village union—you would not abolish it?—If we had the elected panchayats the unions might be abolished, because they would be performing the same functions.

5633. I was told by some witness that the village union was half-way between a panchayat and a local municipality; that is to say it was a large village?—It is something like that.

5634. What you would say is that you do not want an intermediate authority, but that some should be made into panchayats and some into municipalities?—I have not said anything about municipalities.

5635. I understood you to say that these village unions are large villages?—Yes.

5636. Could you convert them into panchayats?—They could be converted into panchayats, but they need not be called municipalities at all. The present unions are subject to the taluk Boards, and have nothing to do with municipalities. When you abolish the union and have elected panchayats, it will be the same thing.

5637. You would make these village unions panchayats?—Yes.

5638. Could you tell me the size of your district?—About 5,600 square miles.

5639. How often does the District Board meet?—Once in a month as a rule, but sometimes we meet occasionally to decide the budget.

5640. Can you tell me roughly what the average attendance is at each monthly meeting?—About ten.

5641. Do you find that the members living a long way off the place of meeting attend regularly?—They do attend; it is more the officials who do not attend; generally they are absent.

5642. You are also a member of the taluk Board?—Yes.

5643. How many members of your District Board are members of your taluk Board?—Four members are elected to the District Board by the taluk Board.

5644. You do not think that the District Board does the work of the taluk Board over again?—It has got a good deal of control of the finances at budget time.

5645. Is that control beneficial?—I cannot say that it is so always.

5646. Sometimes it is beneficial and sometimes not?—There is a contribution made to our fund; the District Board gives a contribution to make up our deficiency in expenditure; in that way it is beneficial.

5647. How is the cess raised?—It is a local cess raised upon fishing rights and tolls and so forth.

5648. Is the main source of income the land cess?—Yes, that is the main source.

5649. A certain portion of that goes to the taluk Board direct?—Half the land tax goes to the taluk Board.

5650. And the other half?—To the District Board fund.

5651. And they distribute that?—They reserve a fund for themselves for roads, vaccination and some other items; the rest is distributed among the three taluk Boards.

5652. Do you think that their discretion with regard to the use of that money is wise?—Yes.

5653. It is better than giving the whole sum to the taluk Boards?—Well, it might be better for the locality but not for the district; in some taluks they have got very little funds.

5654. (Mr. Dutt.) And you think it fair in those cases that the neighbouring taluk should contribute something?—On the whole I should think it fair, for the benefit of the whole district.

5655. I did not quite understand what you said as regards the distribution of money. The whole land cess realised in a district is allotted to that district?—The whole cess belongs to the district; there are three taluk Boards in the district, and the distribution is made among them.

5656. The members of the taluk Board could be elected, could they not, under the Act?—Yes, that is the provision that was made in 1884; two-thirds of the members may be elected. But that has not been done.

5657. Could you make any suggestions besides your suggestion of election which would improve the work of the taluk Boards or that of the District Board?—I think that the taluk Boards might be given power in regard to plague and excise and other matters; they are not consulted in these matters, although their money is spent.

5658. Do you think it would be a good way to distribute work among members of the District Board by the formation of sub-committees?—Yes; power is given by the Act to do that, but it is not done.

5659. Do you think members would take more interest in the work if they were made to do their work in that way?—Yes, provided they are elected members.

5660. At present who does the work of the District Board?—The President does it.

5661. Who prepares the budget?—The President.

5662. Who appoints all the officers?—The President.

5663. You think that if the District Boards were made more useful, in accordance with your proposal, the District Board would be able to give any advice that the Collector requires without the creation of an Advisory Board?—Certainly; there would be no need of an additional Board.

5664. Could that be done under an executive order or would a fresh Act of legislation be necessary?—There must be an Act.

5665. Why would an Act be necessary?—The people would feel that they had some real power and responsibility.

5666. Under the present Act, would the Collector have the power to convene a meeting of the District Board simply to take advice about administrative matters?—I do not think so, except for the purposes of the Act.

5667. So that if the advice of members was necessary in other matters, and the Collector wanted to get them together, he could not proceed under this Act, and a fresh Act would be necessary?—Certainly.

5668. (Mr. Meyer.) Is it not the case that before a forest is finally reserved a full inquiry is held as to any rights possessed by persons in that area?—That is published in the Gazette.

5669. It is required by law?—Yes, and it is published in the Gazette, but the raiyats do not hear of it; they hear of it when the reservation is made.

5670. Still, the law and the regulations have provided this machinery?—Yes, but in practice it does not work.

5671. You spoke about the Collectors seeing only officials in the course of their tours. Have you known instances of officials refusing to see native gentlemen who desired to interview them?—They do not practically refuse.

5672. Speaking generally I mean?—Well, I do not know, but the treatment is such that no non-official with self-respect would go.

5673. Do you mean that the Collector is discourteous to you if you go to see him?—I should think so; he is so cold that people do not go again; once they have gone they do not go again.

5674. You say he is "cold"; he is not effusive perhaps, but does he treat you with rudeness?—Well, one is treated in such a way that one is not tempted to go again. There are some good Collectors; what I am saying now does not apply to all.

5675. I am speaking of the generality?—With the generality the reception is such that one who has had the experience would not go again.

5676. Would you not have the opportunity of saying anything you wanted to say and representing anything you wanted to represent?—No. With some gentlemen when you go to see them you are emboldened to speak out, but in other cases the reception is such that people would rather shrink from going again.

5677. Have you had anything to do with Indian Collectors?—Yes.

5678. Do you apply that to them too?—No.

5679. They are sympathetic?—They are sympathetic, and I am glad to say that some European gentlemen also are like that, but the generality of Europeans are not.

5680. How many Indian Collectors have you known?—I have known two Indian Collectors who were good; there was one Indian Collector—no Indian would approach him.

5681. Out of three you have found two that were good and one unapproachable?—Yes.

5682. You say that an elected member of a District Board or a taluk Board can express his views freely, but a nominated member cannot; he regards himself as a slave of the Collector?—I will not say slave; he is under an obligation as it were.

5683. You sit in a dual capacity; you are an elected member of the District Board and you are a nominated member of the taluk Board. Are we to take it that you speak your views freely in the District Board and that you are afraid to speak them in the taluk Board?—Well, I am a nominated member by the Collector in the taluk Board; it is the Collector who nominated me on the taluk Board.

5684. On the recommendation of whom?—I was not recommended by anybody.

5685. Therefore you consider yourself under no obligation to the Divisional Officer?—I do not know.

5686. You can speak your mind freely?—I think I can speak my mind freely, because I am the nominee of the Collector.

5687. Is not any member of the District Board who is nominated appointed by the Government?—The Government knows nothing about it; the name is sent up and it is gazetted; it does appear in the name of the Government, but it is the Collector who makes the nomination.

5688. The term of office in the taluk Board is three years?—Yes.

5689. Then you have been re-appointed repeatedly?—No, I was not re-appointed, because it was thought that I was a little bit troublesome.

5690. But several times you were re-appointed?—Yes.

5691. By different Collectors?—By different Collectors—by one Collector for nearly ten years.

5692. Although you had spoken your mind freely on the District Board to that same Collector, he did not resent your plain speaking?—No.

5693. He rather liked it?—He liked it, and he encouraged me to take interest in matters.

5694. You say that for a Local Board to be any good whatever, all the members must be elected?—Yes.

5695. By what sort of electorate—by the whole people or a certain class of the people?—I suggest an election from the panchayat; there will be seven or eight of the panchayat class in each village or big group of villages, and they would all elect members to the taluk Board; that would be the electorate I would suggest.

5696. Would the taluk Board elect to the District Board?—Yes.

Mr. P. S. SIVASWAMI AIYER was called and examined.

*Mr. P. S.

5700. (Chairman.) You are Officiating Advocate General for the Presidency of Madras?—Yes.

5701. You have been I understand something like 20 years in practice as a vakil?—Something over 20 years.

5702. And you have been in the Legislative Council since May 1904?—Yes.

5703. Do you think that the right of appeal should be curtailed or not?—I think the right of appeal whether to the Government of India or to the Local Government should not be curtailed, whether in respect of administrative action, or in respect of any orders affecting officers of Government personally. I do not think it desirable to impose the condition, with regard to such appeals, that unless accompanied by a certificate, the appeal should not be entertained. The result of imposing such a restriction would be this, that except in cases in which the officer against whose order the appeal is made feels a doubt, there will be practically no appeal; it is the frailty of many minds, even of official minds, not to entertain doubts as to the correctness of the orders they have passed. It would be very unwise in my opinion to restrict the right of appeal only to cases in which the officer against whom the appeal is made feels a doubt; because although he may not feel any doubt, he may be absolutely wrong, and it would be very unpopular to restrict the right of appeal. Officers aggrieved by orders affecting them, and people aggrieved by administrative actions affecting them, would generally be anxious to secure justice at the hands of the higher authorities, if they could not secure justice at the hands of the local officials.

5704. What do you say as to the opportunities which Executive Officers have for personal contact with the people?—I do not think there is any lack of opportunity; but they do not make sufficient use of their opportunities to obtain personal contact with the people. The chief obstacles seem to me to be, the ignorance of the vernaculars on the part of the officers concerned, and the disinclination on their part to learn the vernaculars and to come in personal contact with the people.

5705. Do you find that there is an increasing disinclination on the part of Divisional Officers and Collectors to become acquainted with the vernacular languages?—In view of the fact that English education is spreading in the country, officers are likely to think that it is unnecessary for them to learn the vernaculars themselves, because there may be people acquainted with English who can act as interpreters.

5706. As a matter of fact is there in every village or even in every group of villages, someone who can talk English?—I do not think it can be said that in every village there are people who know English. Mr. Bradley, the Chief Secretary, made the statement that in every village there were people who knew English, and that it was therefore unnecessary for the officers to learn the vernacular. I do not agree with him. There are several villages where there are no people who possess a knowledge of English, and even if there should be some people who possess a knowledge of English, it is eminently desirable and necessary that the officers themselves should be able to converse directly with the people.

5707. You know the whole Presidency pretty well?—I have gone over several districts; I cannot say that I know the whole Presidency.

5697. Have you any municipal experience?—No.

5698. Does the District Board always sit at the district headquarters?—Sometimes in mufassal stations; it depends on the Collector's pleasure.

5699. (Chairman.) What is your profession?—I am a pleader—a vakil—but I am a villager born, bred up in a village, and my people are all raiyats; I come from a hereditary family of village officers.

(The witness withdrew.)

5708. Where is your present home?—In Madras; I am a native of the Tanjore district.

5709. Have you been living in Madras a long time?—For the last 27 years.

5710. So you would hardly claim to know the country districts well?—I do not lay claim to the same intimate knowledge of the districts that a person resident in the mufassal would be entitled to claim, but I have come into contact with the people in the mufassal; I have often to go to the mufassal, and people in the mufassal come to me.

5711. Would that experience of yours enable you to say whether or not the people in the country villages did or did not know English?—I should think so, as regards the places I have visited.

5712. Do you think that it is a growing tendency, then, on the part of the district officials to consider the study of the vernaculars unnecessary?—I cannot say whether the tendency is growing or not.

5713. It is regrettable at all events?—Yes. Another feeling which I think may be noticed is, that many officials consider it infra dig to talk in the vernacular; they prefer to speak in English.

5714. That is, the subordinate officials, the tahsildars?—No, they would rather speak in the vernacular with the people; I mean the English officials.

5715. The English officials think it infra dig to talk in the vernacular?—I think so.

5716. Have you known such cases in your experience?—They seldom talk in the vernacular.

5717. Not to you?—Nor to other people too, so far as I have seen.

5718. In the mufassal?—Yes. There are some officials who have a good knowledge of the vernaculars.

5719. Is this your own experience or what you have been told?—What I have seen and what I have heard.

5720. But you have been practising chiefly in Madras?—Yes, but I have been visiting the mufassal, and that is what I have seen, and what I have also heard people say.

5721. Have you been in company with any District Officer when he has been visiting and noticed that he has not talked in the vernacular?—I cannot say that I call to mind any instance of a particular official who had to talk to the people and did not speak in the vernacular.

5722. Therefore it is hearsay evidence, rather—people have told you that there is that tendency?—But I have never seen any European officers talking in the vernacular to the people.

5723. Have you been in company with many European officers in the mufassal?—I have sometimes travelled with them in the train, and I have sometimes called on them.

5724. Would it be easy to increase the knowledge of the vernacular on the part of European officers?—I think it would be possible by making the examination in the vernaculars more severe, and by asking officers to keep a diary and to make a note of the persons with whom they had had interviews, and make a report once every quarter or so as may be desirable.

5725. Is there any possibility of greater social intercourse between the Divisional Officers and the people—the local gentry and so on?—I do not see why it should be supposed that there is any insuperable obstacle to any increased social intercourse; all that is wanted is a little more sympathy on the part of the officials.

5726. Is there much such intercourse now?—I do not think there is much social intercourse to speak of now.

5727. Is that less or more than it used to be in former days?—I do not think it can be said to have been growing.

5728. Has it been decreasing?—No, I think not.

5729. It is about the same?—About the same.

5730. Would the grant of larger powers to Commissioners, Collectors, and other local authorities require greater care in their selection?—I do not think it is necessary to grant larger powers; the powers with which they are now entrusted are sufficiently large to require, and ensure, the greatest possible care in their selection.

5731. Suppose larger powers are granted, ought not greater care to be taken in the selection of these officers?—I suppose, in the abstract, yes.

5732. Is greater administrative power for the Collector necessary?—I understood the question to carry with it the implication that if greater care in the selection of officers was likely to be secured more powers might be entrusted. I am opposed to that implication.

5733. Are the present powers sufficient?—Yes, and sufficient care is exercised in the selection of officers.

5734. You have had no connection with the higher ranks of the Government?—Yes; I have had occasion to come in contact with the Members of Council and the Secretaries of Departments.

5735. But you have had no occasion to come across them administratively?—No.

5736. Have you been a member of either a municipality or a District Board?—No.

5737. Speaking generally, you think there should be some increase of powers to municipalities and District Boards and Local Boards?—As regards the matters of which they can take cognizance, I do not think there is any necessity for any extension of powers; the matters which are entrusted to the care of District Boards and district municipalities are comprehensive enough; they include everything connected with the safety, health and welfare of the inhabitants committed to their charge. The complaint is, not with regard to the matters entrusted to their jurisdiction, but with regard to the mode in which the provincial Government interferes with the exercise of their powers by the District Boards and municipalities. It is often complained that the provincial Government interferes with the action of municipalities and Boards in very petty matters, and that their interference is of a vexatious character. I am not in favour of the view that the provincial Government have no rights of interference at all. I believe in most countries, in England and elsewhere, the Central Government has very considerable rights of interference with the actions of local bodies. Whether the interference is such as to produce friction and complaints or not is, and must be, a question of degree. With regard to the municipalities in this Presidency, there have been complaints that the interference has been too frequent and too vexatious.

5738. That being your view with regard to municipalities and Local Boards and so forth, what have you to say about the revival of the panchayat?—I should be disposed to entrust certain matters to the village authorities; for instance, the control of the village police. This was considered by the Indian Police Commission, and I believe the Government of India are in favour of the recommendation that the village police should be placed under the control of the local authorities. I should like to add, with regard to the disposal of petty criminal and civil cases, that village courts might be encouraged to take cognizance of such cases, and parties might be induced to resort to them. In civil cases the jurisdiction is at present limited to Rs. 20; without the consent of the parties, suits can be filed in village courts only up to the limit of Rs. 20; that might be increased to Rs. 50. In criminal cases they might be asked to try such cases as are disposed of by Bench Magistrates in towns, and Benches might be constituted in villages. I would, however, not introduce them in all villages; I would do it tentatively; I would select certain areas first by way of experiment in the most advanced districts.

5739. Is there any right of appeal in these Rs. 20 suits at present?—There is no right of appeal. Under the Madras Act I of 1889 there is no right of appeal from the village munsiff, but the party aggrieved may ask the district munsiff to revise the order. This power of revision is much narrower than the power to entertain appeals; it is only if the village munsiff has been guilty of any gross impartiality or corruption or has passed an order which is manifestly unjust or contrary to law, that the district munsiff is appealed to, to set aside the order; in other cases it is final.

5740. (Mr. Meyer.) You say that you are not in favour of the restriction of appeals. Is it not the fact that under the Civil Procedure Code, second appeals on questions of fact are, generally speaking, barred; a second appeal may not be entertained on a question of fact, though it may be filed on a point of law?—Yes; second appeals are barred on questions of fact.

5741. And under the Criminal Procedure Code, in certain cases there is no appeal against the decisions of Presidency Magistrates and of First Class Magistrates with summary jurisdiction?—That is so.

5742. Then why should you not have some analogous limitation in regard to administrative appeals?—With regard to administrative appeals, I am not aware that the granting of this right of appeal throws any very large burden upon the appellate authorities; I am not in a position to say what amount of burden it throws upon them; and in the next place an officer who has got to decide a matter, not judicially, but in his executive capacity, is not likely to exercise the same amount of care that a judicial officer is likely to exercise.

5743. Are there not laws or rules for the disposal of these matters generally?—There are rules laid down, and I believe the person aggrieved has generally the opportunity of submitting his explanation; but I do not think that the procedure adopted in the disposal of complaints with regard to administrative action is calculated to ensure the same regard for an exhaustive enquiry as the procedure adopted in judicial matters.

5744. You were speaking of the officers not talking to the people in the vernacular. Have you ever accompanied a Divisional Officer or a Collector in his tours in the villages or on jamabandi?—No, I have not accompanied an officer on tour.

5745. You spoke of the lack of social intercourse. Is there complete social intercourse between different classes of the Indian community?—There is very much more social intercourse than there is between English officials and Indians, and though various castes are under restrictions with regard to dining and so on, they have numerous opportunities for social intercourse; they meet each other frequently, and know each other much more intimately than it is possible for English officials to know Indians.

5746. Is it not possible that the failure of European officers to mix more freely with the people is due to pressure of work?—It may be partly due to that, but not wholly.

5747. If their work could be diminished without any damage to the public service, you would be in favour of it?—As your qualification is that there is to be no detriment to the public service, I do not object to any diminution of their work.

5748. To put it in a concrete form, if the amount of reporting work which they have to do on appeals and other matters could expediently be diminished, would not that give officers more opportunity to get into personal contact with the people?—It would provide them with opportunity: you can take a horse to the pond but you cannot make him drink.

5749. You are not sure whether they would use the opportunity?—Exactly.

5750. You spoke of undue interference by Government with municipalities. Have you heard of petitions to Government from a minority say of the Municipal Council asking the Government to interfere with orders passed by the majority?—I believe in some matters there have been differences of opinion in municipalities, but the class of cases I am referring to are cases in which the municipalities have made unanimous recommendations, and still the Government have refused to accept them.

5751. Do you know of any cases where a minority have appealed to Government to deliver them from the decision of the majority?—There may have been such cases.

5752. Have you heard of cases in which a Ratepayers' Association, outside the Council, has addressed Government to over-ride some act of the Council?—I cannot recall to mind any instance at present, but I think there have been such instances.

5753. You spoke about the subordination of the police to the village panchayat; is it not the fact in this province that the village policeman is at present already under the control of the village headman?—I believe he is.

5754. You recommend a certain extension of jurisdiction of the village courts, which you think might be made into Bench Courts, in civil and criminal matters, and you say that there should be no option to the people, but that in such cases they must go to the village court?—Yes. One of two courses might be adopted; either the people should be forced to go to those courts without any option, or a concurrent remedy might be allowed; the party might be allowed to go to the munsiff's court, but should be deprived of his costs if he could have gone to the village court and has not availed himself of that remedy.

5755. You would allow people to go to the village munsiff or the district munsiff as they think fit, but subject to some possible deprivation of costs later on?—Yes, so that they might be induced to resort to the village courts.

5757. Your experience is that they seldom interfere unless there is some substantial error?—Yes; applications for revision are very infrequent. As a matter of fact I think that the village courts are getting more popular. For instance the total number of suits filed in 1904-05 was 330,000 odd, and the number of cases in which people resorted to the village courts was 90,000 odd.

5758. Could you give us an idea of the proportion of those 90,000 cases that came up again before the district munsiff?—Those figures are not to be gathered from the Administration Report, but I believe such cases are extremely rare.

5760. But you have got a concurrent opinion as to facts for instance by an independent officer?—True.

5761. You seem to think that the certificate involves a doubt as to the facts. Suppose there was any administrative darkhast petition or something of that kind, and suppose the facts were absolutely clear, but that they involved a question of principle; if they do not involve a question of principle would it be possible to say "There is no question of principle involved, the facts are clear, and you cannot have an appeal," or you might say "The facts are clear but there is a question of principle, and you can go on." After the first appeal, would you think that a dangerous limitation?—I believe cases have not been infrequent in which the highest authorities have sometimes interfered and rectified a blunder.

5762. There is some certificate of that sort required before an appeal goes to the Privy Council?—I think that is so.

5763. That is the sort of certificate I was thinking of.—A certificate that there is a substantial question of law involved, where the findings of the courts below are concurrent?

5764. When you have the concurrence of two courts, should there not be some restriction, rather than that appeal should go on indefinitely?—I am averse to imposing any restriction, and I think it would not be a very popular measure.

5765. Now you say that as regards Local Boards and municipalities the provincial Government ought to have a right to interfere, but you think it is carried to too great an extent?—Yes.

5766. When you have given an authority a right to interfere, can you suggest any adequate limitation as to how far they shall exercise that right?—You mean, any limitation which can be expressed in the shape of general rules?

5767. Yes.—It may be a matter of difficulty.

5768. Is it not a matter of very great difficulty?—I confess it would be.

5769. For instance, we all know that the Government of India and the Secretary of State have a statutory right of control over the provincial Governments; the great difficulty in all these matters is how it is exercised. Can you suggest any sort of principle upon which the limitation of the right should be based?—Suppose the District Board of a particular district recommends an increase of salary to an official, say from Rs. 200 to Rs. 500; that would be a matter I think in which the provincial Government might be justified in interfering; but suppose a District Board recommended an increase of salary to a peon of one rupee, I do not see why that should be interfered with.

5770. The only principle you can suggest is, a self-denying ordinance on the part of the superior officer?—It comes to that. I am unable to suggest any definite rule.

5771. You said that these panchayats would have to be experimental to start with?—Yes.

5772. There would probably have to be some legislation to give them gradually the powers that you think they might exercise in course of time?—Yes. For instance, with regard to the disposal of criminal cases; under the existing legislation they can dispose of only very trivial cases.

5773. Are you not the Government draftsman: you draft all the Acts for the Local Government at present?—Not necessarily. If I am asked to do it, I have to do it, but very often the Bills introduced by the Government are drawn up in the office in the Secretariat and they are afterwards brought up; I have to assist the Government in any drafting work they may ask me to do.

5774. You revise the Bills?—Yes.

5775. So that you have a certain amount of knowledge of drafting work and legislative structure and so on?—I suppose I have.

5776. Suppose these panchayats were to be invested with authority and the procedure had to be experimental; would you proceed by direct legislation, fixing a scheme before you come into Council, or would you proceed by an Act which gave you wide powers of making rules?—I should have no objection to passing an Act which would empower the Local Government to frame rules and to confer such powers as they may think necessary upon the village panchayats.

5777. That is practically what is sometimes called giving a blank cheque to the Executive?—In this matter I do not mind.

5778. You would get the freedom of experiment, and you think that that freedom of experiment would be worth the cost of giving a little undue power, against general principles, to the Executive?—Yes, in this matter.

5779. Therefore you think that giving a blank cheque, as I call it, to the Executive in any matter is not a question of abstract principle but one of expediency?—Even the highest principles are questions of expediency.

5780. I suppose you could give us, with very little difficulty, illustrations of Acts that do confer very wide powers of rule-making on the Executive?—For instance, under the Madras Land Encroachment Act, which was recently passed, powers were given to the provincial Government to frame rules under the Act; another instance is the Municipalities Practices Act. There are many Acts under which powers are given to the provincial Government to frame rules.

5781. As a matter of expediency too, there is the Epidemic Diseases Act?—Yes.

5782. There are only two or three clauses in the Act; it gives powers to frame rules?—Yes.

5784. Would your principle apply even to cases where the power would be conferred on an authority which is lower in grade than one that has hitherto exercised it?—Yes, because the legislation which would be passed would be passed expressly for the purpose of empowering the Local Government to invest the village panchayats with power, so that the investiture of such local authorities with certain powers would have been discussed by the Legislature, and would be within the contemplation of the enabling Act.

5785. Suppose an Act has been in operation for seven or eight years, and it has got into general knowledge, and a certain amount of case law has grown up about it. Of course, when it first comes in, it is probably kept strictly under the control either of the Government of India or of the provincial Government; but, as the case law grows up, it becomes entirely unnecessary to go to these possibly distant authorities to get the order, and you may want to alter it and to give the powers to a local authority; as, for instance, in a revenue matter you might say, instead of "to the provincial Government," "to the Board of Revenue," or instead of "to the Government of India" you might say "to the Local Government," as the Act becomes known. Would you do that always by specific legislation, or might you have a general Act permitting delegation in such cases? The point involves no alteration of the principles of the Act, but simply the question who shall give a particular order. Could you do that by a general order or do you think it always ought to be done by specific legislation? It might be done by notification in the Gazette. Would you be opposed to a general Act giving them that power or do you think that they ought to specifically legislate?—The question is rather too general for me to answer.

5786. On the one hand you have the blank cheque objection?—I limit it to the case under discussion.

5787. And on the other side you have the possibility of interminable legislation. I wanted to find out whether you thought the expediency on both sides balanced in that particular case?—I do not think I can give any useful general answer.

5788. (Sir Frederic Lely.) It has been suggested that the want of efficient knowledge of the vernaculars may be made up for by the existence in the villages of people who speak English?—I do not think so myself.

5789. Is it the fact that in many villages there are people who can speak English who might act as interpreters?—I do not know that in many villages there are.

5790. But the people themselves would not be satisfied with speaking to the officer through an interpreter?—No.

5791. They would suspect that the interpreter was giving his own colour to what was being said?—And they will be always much more satisfied with the officer if he converses with them directly in their own tongue.

5792. (Mr. Dutt.) In administrative and personal cases are the present rights of appeal absolutely unlimited?—I think so.

5793. Are you sure of the fact?—I looked up the Petition Rules this morning, and I did not find any limitations laid down.

5794. If a peon is fined one rupee, has he a right of appeal to the Viceroy?—I cannot say whether in particular cases he has, but I did not notice anything in the rules to restrict the right of appeal.

5795. You said that the disposal of cases by village courts is becoming of long standing, is it your experience that in cases, where there is no right of appeal, memorials are sent up to the higher authority for revision of orders?—Yes.

5796. You said that the disposal of cases by village courts is becoming more popular now than it used to be. Are these cases disposed of by the village munsiff and the village magistrate?—By the village munsiff. I cannot make that statement with regard to the disposal of criminal cases; I gave the figures only with regard to civil cases.

5797. If panchayats are created, would you recommend that the cases which are now tried by the village munsiff should be tried by these panchayats collectively, or would they continue to be tried by the village munsiff?—I think the system of trial by the panchayat would be more likely to be satisfactory to the people.

5798. As regards social intercourse between the officers and the people, do you not think that in spite of the caste system there might be social meetings, afternoon parties and so on, where all people could meet the officers without any restriction?—Of course, there would be restrictions; the caste restrictions will for instance prevent the people from dining with Government officers.

5799. I am not talking of dining but of garden parties, afternoon parties and the like?—There will be no impediment.

5800. And if the officers had more time at their disposal, that you think could be easily arranged?—I think so.

5801. And in that way the officers would have a chance of meeting the people otherwise than as officers in their courts?—Yes.

5802. Do you think the influence of that would be exceedingly wholesome?—Yes.

Mr. V. G.

28 Nov., 1907.

5803. (Chairman.) You appear here on behalf of the Madras Chamber of Commerce?—I do.

The Madras Chamber of Commerce is of opinion that increased financial powers might be given to provincial Governments generally, and that the policy of financial decentralization initiated in 1870 and subsequently developed might be further extended with advantage. At present the revenue from salt is wholly imperial and the Chamber would suggest that a share in the revenue derived under this heading might be made over with advantage to provincial Governments to be expended on irrigation works, roads, and other public improvements.

The Chamber is not prepared to offer an opinion as to whether a more complete separation than at present exists might be effected between local and imperial finance, but whilst approving generally of the principle adopted in 1904 for giving Local Governments a permanent interest instead of a temporary one in the revenues under their control, it considers that the proportions allocated of shared revenues will require adjustment from time to time.

The Chamber is of opinion that for irrigation and works of an allied nature, Local Governments might be given borrowing powers within prescribed limits. To safeguard the issue of imperial loans the issue of local loans might be delayed until after the issue of the annual imperial loans and their allotment made conditional on the loans being placed at say a $\frac{1}{4}$ or $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. above the minimum rate accepted for the imperial loans.

The Chamber is of opinion that the tendency of both the Imperial and provincial secretariats generally is to regard matters too much from a purely departmental standpoint and that both alike are apt to be dominated by considerations of revenue.

The Chamber values the right of appeal to the provincial Government and the Government of India respectively, and would view with disfavour any attempt to curtail their privilege.

The Chamber adhere to the views expressed in its letter to the Government of Madras dated 9th September, 1901, as to the serious undermanning of the general administrative staff in Madras. The areas of the districts in Madras are so vast, and the duties of Collectors so manifold, that they can now only make themselves personally acquainted with the needs of the people by the sacrifice of personal attention to other and not less important work.

The Chamber does not consider that there is any present need for further enlarging the powers or extending the functions of the Madras Port Trust, the matter recently having been gone into at length and the Act amended more or less in deference to the views and wishes of the Madras Mercantile and Trading Communities.

In the opinion of some members of the Chamber it would be an advantage were a branch office of the Department of Commerce and Industry opened at Madras under a special Secretary deputed for that purpose either by the Imperial or Local Government.

In regard to the Imperial Customs Service, the Chamber appreciates the advantages over the old procedure of a trained Service for customs duties for securing continuity and efficiency of administration, and it is of opinion that so long as tariff appeals are subject to the decision of local authorities, whose rulings are binding only on a single province, uniformity of practice and procedure at all ports will be wanting.

Since the meeting of the Chamber I have been enquiring further into the subject of granting borrowing powers to provincial Governments. District Boards have power to borrow for local railways, and I am of opinion that Local Governments might be given similar powers to raise funds for irrigation works, roads, and the like. District Board railway loans have not been a success, but it does not follow that irrigation loans would not be taken up, as railways do not appeal so strongly to the up-country native as irrigation does. I do not advocate Local Governments having borrowing powers in the general sense of the words, but I consider that Local Governments might be empowered to raise funds for local purposes by supplementary issues of Government paper, within defined limits. My suggestion is that after the annual loan has been floated, Local Governments might be empowered to float supplementary issues for specific purposes in supplement of the amounts available from the budget allotments.

The following figures regarding the amount of Government paper held in this Presidency and amounts tendered during recent years will be of interest:—

1898	...	...	771	Lakhs of rupees.
1899	...	...	753	" "
1900	...	...	772	" "
1901	...	...	732	" "
1902	...	...	700	" "
1903	...	...	720	" "
1904	...	...	713	" "
1905	...	...	735	" "
1906	...	...	750	" "
1907	...	...	764	" "

Of the 764 lakhs held in Madras in 1907, the Bank of Madras and seven others (Native States and Government officials in their official capacity) account for 526 lakhs.

Accepted tenders from Madras for recent loans were as follows:—

	Amount of Loan.	Accepted Tenders.
1902-03	 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ Crores of rupees.	15,000
1905-06	 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ Crores of rupees.	11,400
1906-07	 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ "	5,62,700

Paper in Madras is chiefly purchased throughout the year in the open market as required.

SALES OF GOVERNMENT PAPER BY THE BANK OF MADRAS.

1902	...	...	58	Lakhs of rupees.
1903	...	...	26	" "
1904	...	...	49	" "
1905	...	...	33	" "
1907	...	...	61	" (11 months).

These figures would appear to indicate that in this Presidency the Local Government would have great difficulty in raising loans, and that the amount raised would not compensate it for the trouble, but a beginning might be made in this direction to divert money now being hoarded, to investments of public utility.

5804. Are you a member of the Legislative Council here?—I am.

5805. And therefore you have some acquaintance, perhaps a good deal, with the working of the provincial Government?—I cannot say that I have a large acquaintance with the working of the provincial Government.

5806. Sufficient to enable you to form a sound opinion upon the particular subject?—I hope so.

5808. There are probably other sources of revenue of which Madras as a provincial Government gets a considerable share, but to which she does not contribute in proportion, as she does in the case of salt?—Yes.

5809. As a matter of fact your provincial establishment is now under consideration?—That I cannot say.

5810. Is it not rather a dangerous doctrine that because a source of revenue is excessive in one province therefore the provincial Government should share that source; it might happen with regard to the other revenues that the source might be very short?—The suggestion is broadly that, rather than reduce the revenue on salt any further, unless the Government of India would abolish it altogether, any further reduction should be handed over to the provincial Governments for the benefit of irrigation works, roads, and the like.

5811. You suggest that within certain prescribed limits a power of borrowing in the local markets might be given to Local Governments?—The matter was discussed briefly at a recent meeting of the Chamber, and the opinion of the Chamber was that it might with advantage be given. Since the meeting of the Chamber I have enquired further into the subject. District Boards have power to borrow for local railways, and I am of opinion that Local Governments might be given similar powers to raise money for irrigation works, roads, and the like.

5812. In a town like Madras, are there hoards of money which are probably not tapped by the issues of the Government of India?—I think so. There was a case in point about a year ago. There was a certain amount of financial trouble in Madras, and enquiries were made as to the best sources of investing money. In one notable instance, where a native Collector had asked for information as to the best investment for money, he appeared to be utterly ignorant as to what Government Paper was, how its interest was collected, or anything about it. I have given figures as to the small holdings in this Presidency of Government Paper. These figures are against the likelihood of any local loans being floated successfully, but I think it might be tried experimentally.

5813. Would there be a greater likelihood of interest being taken in a local loan among the class who have a small amount to invest than there would be in a Government of India loan?—I think it might be so. The results in regard to district railways have been disappointing, but I think the native mind as a rule is not so much interested in railways as it would be in irrigation works. That is a matter, however, that would have to be tested by experiment.

5814. You would probably recognise that anything which disturbed the Government of India market for rupee loans would be undesirable?—I think so, and I have suggested as a safeguard that it should be made conditional that the allotment of a local loan should be placed at say, a quarter or half per cent. above the minimum rate accepted for Imperial loans. I presume, however, that the Government of India would require their annual Imperial loan to be raised first.

5815. The amounts required to be raised for such local loans would not in any one year amount to a very large sum?—No; 20 or 30 lakhs at the outside, if as much—probably considerably less.

5816. That amount ought to be forthcoming in a town and district of this size and prosperity?—Yes, I think it would be forthcoming, or a large part of it.

5817. Do you suggest that the size of the districts in Madras is far too large and that the duties of the Collectors are too manifold to enable them to make themselves personally acquainted with the people and their needs?—That is the impression of the members of the Chamber.

5818. Many of whom have lived here for a considerable time?—Yes, and some of them have passed a good deal of their life up-country.

5819. And to a certain extent have been adversely influenced by the absence of touch between the officials and the people?—No, I think as a rule they are fairly in touch with the officials.

5820. To the extent at all events that the size of the district is too big?—Yes, in that sense perhaps.

5821. You say that, as members of the Chamber, you have derived considerable advantage from the personal interviews which have taken place between you and the Head of the Department of Commerce and Industry, the Railway Board, and the Directors-General of the Post Office and Telegraphs?—The last year or two the Head of the Department of Commerce and Industry has had personal interviews with the Chamber, and many matters of interest have been discussed informally. We have also seen the Director-General of the Post Office and also the Director-General of Telegraphs. I think these informal discussions have been of material advantage.

5822. Have these interviews between the Chamber of Commerce and the gentlemen to whom you refer had a stimulating effect upon the local departments?—I think so.

5823. And perhaps they have brought to the notice of the departments matters which had previously escaped their attention?—Yes, probably so.

5824. You would like to see a branch office of the Department of Commerce and Industry opened at Madras?—That was suggested at the meeting of the Chamber. Instances were given in which appeals had been made without effect to the Local Government in connection with the duties levied by the Corporation against the mills, and a suggestion was made that the opening of a local branch of the Department of Commerce and Industry would be beneficial.

5825. That would save a good deal of correspondence going through the provincial Government from you to the Government of India?—Yes, that was the idea.

5826. And to that extent save the time of the provincial Government?—Yes.

5828. (Sir Frederic Lely.) With regard to local loans for local works; you have some knowledge of the mufassal?—Not very much; I have been in Madras the whole of my time.

5829. It is suggested that apart from bringing out possible hoards in the district it might stimulate local sentiment to have in a district its own railway and its own loan; do you think there is anything in that?—I think there is.

5830. Quite apart from the greater accessibility of local capital, there would be a possible stimulation of local feeling?—I think that it would have a beneficial effect.

5831. Then what is your opinion as a resident of Madras as to the relations between the Government and the Corporation? Do you think they are satisfactory—more especially in the matter of control?—My own feeling is that in some respects perhaps Government does exercise rather too petty a controlling influence, but on the whole I think the controlling influence is not excessive.

5832. You would not diminish it?—No, I would not; in certain respects I would increase it.

5833. You would retain the appointment of the higher officers in the hands of the Government?—Yes, most certainly.

5835. Is it your proposal that such loans should be raised wholly in connection with particular works like railways?—Yes, with specific objects in view.

5836. Could the Local Government raise those loans on easier terms than if they borrowed the money through the Indian Government?—It would be necessary, I take it, that the Government of India should impose certain restrictions on the issue. If they had three crores of rupees to allot in any particular year, they could hardly allow the Local Government to advertise the fact that they were bringing out a loan of half a crore, and if it was known that the Local Government would accept any price, in my opinion it might seriously affect the placing of the imperial loan.

5837. The main advantage, in your opinion, of borrowing locally would be to enlist local sympathy and co-operation?—That is my opinion.

5838. (Mr. Hichens.) I understood you to say that if the Madras Chamber of Commerce wanted to correspond with the Department of Commerce and Industry the correspondence would have to go through the provincial Government; is that correct?—No. The Chamber of Commerce has had communications, I cannot say returned to it, but they have been advised that the communications should have been made through the Local Government.

5839. You think the principle should be that you should correspond direct with them?—No, personally I have no objection to correspond through the Government of Madras; in fact I think it is much better to preserve intimate relations with it, and enlist its sympathy if possible. Some members of the Chamber, however, advocate direct correspondence with the Commerce and Industry Department.

5840. You have no objection to raise to the general principle of the present financial settlement, it is only a question of amount?—That is all.

5842. You suggest that a certain portion of the salt revenue should be handed over. You take salt, as I understood, because the salt revenue is more efficiently collected in Madras than it is elsewhere?—The reason I took salt was because during the last two years there has been considerable reduction in the salt tax, and if there is greater prosperity during the next two years it is possible that the Government of India may propose further reduction in the salt tax; in my opinion, rather than reduce the salt tax further, it would be preferable that they should make over the surplus revenue to the provincial Government for local improvements.

5843. To how many provinces would that apply?—Throughout India.

5844. How would you distribute it?—That would be a matter for the Government of India to decide; we should all like as much as we could get, and we should probably urge for Madras that we should have the full proportion of the contributions from Madras.

5845. Has the Government of Madras any power to reduce taxation?—Not that I know of.

5846. (Mr. Meyer.) The salt revenue is derived either from duty on imported salt or from duty on salt manufactured in this country?—Yes.

5847. The duty on imported salt is all realised in the maritime provinces, is it not?—Yes.

5848. And from there the salt travels up inland, to a certain extent, to other provinces?—Yes.

5849. Similarly as regards salt production: there is a very considerable amount of salt produced in Madras that is exported to Bengal and the Central Provinces?—Some portion of it.

5850. While the duty would be realised in Madras, the actual incidence would fall on the consumer in Bengal, say, to a certain extent?—It would.

5851. Then how could you possibly have any distribution of the salt revenue among the provinces?—It might be distributed in proportion to the consumption. I understand that statistics are preserved of the consumption of salt in the several provinces, and this, in my opinion, would be a very good procedure to adopt in dividing any surplus revenue from salt.

5852. Do you consider those statistics reliable?—That I cannot say.

5853. Anyhow you suggest now that it would be unfair to let it go to each province in proportion to the salt revenue brought into account in the books of that province?—Yes, in the way you put it I think that it would be unfair.

5854. That being so, do you still think that the salt revenue is a suitable one to distribute between the provinces?—I do.

5855. You spoke of the provincial Government borrowing for irrigation works. Are you aware that all productive irrigation works of any importance are already constructed mainly from borrowed funds?—I understand that they are.

5856. The Government of India borrows?—It does.

5857. The Government of India can ex-hypothesi borrow more cheaply than a provincial Government could?—In general cases it can.

5858. Then why would you change from a system of cheap borrowing on a large scale to more expensive borrowing on a small scale?—There are cases where it might not suit the Government of India to make the allotments for provincial purposes, where money might be forthcoming provincially.

5859. You think the Government of India might not be able to spare money for a productive work in Madras?—It might be so. The Government of India can borrow more freely perhaps than the Government of Madras, but I cannot say that they are always open to lend money when it is required.

5860. The amount the Government of India can spend on productive irrigation works is of course largely dependent on the amount it can borrow?—I presume that is so.

5861. Is the amount that it is able to borrow in Madras at all large?—From the figures which I have obtained it would appear that the amount that could be borrowed in Madras would be relatively very small.

5862. As matters stand at present, are the Madras contributions to the Government of India loans appreciable?—No, they are inappreciable.

5863. Then if you complain that the Government of India does not give sufficient amounts of borrowed money to Madras irrigation works, to a certain extent it comes to this, that they are to apply money which they have raised in Bengal or Bombay to Madras purposes?—I do not complain that they make too small allotments. The proposal I made was that it might be tried as an experiment, and in order to see whether it was possible to tap money which is at present hoarded.

5864. You do not complain that the Government of India give you an inadequate allotment?—I make no specific complaint: in fact, in recent years I think the Government of India have been particularly liberal. One might instance the case of the Madras Harbour.

5865. That is not an irrigation work?—No, but it is a work of public improvement.

5866. You spoke of a system, if you had these provincial loans, of putting a slightly higher percentage than the minimum rate the Government of India were prepared to allot at. I did not quite understand your meaning. Does the Government of India publish its rate?—The rate is published 24 hours after they have gone to allotment.

5867. The Government of India issues a loan; suppose the tenders were at ludicrously low rates, naturally the Government would not take the money, would it?—No.

5868. It has generally a figure in its mind below which it is not prepared to go, but that figure is confidential and is not divulged; you were not speaking of that figure?—No. I suggested that the allotment should be made at, say, a quarter or a half per cent. above the minimum rate accepted for the imperial loan. Suppose the last loan that was placed was accepted at 97; the Local Government could then only place its loan at Rs. 97½ or

Rs. 97½ according to whichever figure was adopted. This suggestion was made because it was anticipated that, if the powers of borrowing were given to provincial Governments, the operations of the Government of India might be hampered.

5869. You mean that the Local Government should always borrow at a little higher rate than the Government of India borrows?—Yes; it was with a view to prevent people withholding from tendering from the imperial loan on the chance that they would get in for the local loan on more advantageous terms.

5870. Suppose the Local Government could borrow, would not its credit be two or three points below the credit of the Government of India and not half a point higher?—It would.

5871. Therefore the precaution is not needed?—My suggestion was to place the Government of India loan before the provincial Government loan.

5872. On what security would you have the provincial Government borrow?—The security of the Government of India.

5873. The provincial Government is to borrow on the security of the Government of India?—Well, it is the ordinary Government paper; whatever the security is for Government paper, it would be the same security. The proposal I make is that there should be a further placing by the provincial Government of 3½ per cent. paper.

5875. Or would the provincial Government borrow upon its own local revenues, or what?—It might borrow on the security of its local rates or taxes.

5876. That is to say on the amount of revenue which it shares with the Government of India?—Yes. You must remember that the views expressed here are very general views, and may be subject to a good deal of amendment on further consideration.

5877. Still it is quite easy to say the Government of Madras ought to have borrowing powers; the difficulty to my mind is to know how they are to be applied?—That would be for the Government of India to consider.

5878. Would you, as a man of business, invest in Madras Government paper—paper that was placed simply upon the security of Madras revenues and for which the Government of India took no responsibility whatever?—I think money could be placed on that security; the security of the Government of Madras, I think, would compare very favourably with the security of the Government of India as a whole.

5879. Then there would be no question of the Government of India guaranteeing the Local Government of Madras?—I presume the Government of India would guarantee that the Government of Madras was not upset, and as long as the Madras Presidency existed the security of the Government of Madras would be quite sufficient to raise the loan against.

5880. You have spoken of loans by District Boards for railways; have there been many such loans?—No.

5881. I believe there was only one, and that was not a success so far as getting the money from the public was concerned?—Yes.

5882. The public were not sufficiently patriotic to take shares in the Tanjore District Railway?—They were not.

5883. Do you think they would be more patriotic in regard to providing moneys to be used in irrigation works at the other end of the Presidency?—No, I do not think you could raise money at one end of the Presidency for irrigation works at the other end of the Presidency; but I think you might raise a certain portion of the money in the part that would be particularly benefited. It is only a suggestion: it is quite possible that on going into it it would be found to be impossible.

5884. Then it is a mere general proposal that neither you nor the Chamber have gone into at all definitely?—That is so; we had only a limited time at our disposal to deal with this matter.

5885. You spoke of its being necessary occasionally to revise the terms of the provincial settlement. You do not mean by that that it was necessary to reduce the shares of the provincial revenues, but merely to increase them?—It was understood when the present rate of 25 per cent. was made that the Government of India reserved to itself the right of reducing it if necessary.

5886. What do you mean by 25 per cent. ¼—25 per cent. of the shares of revenues.

5887. That was only in one branch?—Yes; the Government of India have reserved to themselves the right of reducing the amount and said that from time to time it should be taken into consideration whether it should not be increased; presumably they will do that.

5888. Do not the Government of India only reserve the right of reduction in the case of some grave imperial emergency?—That is so, I understand.

5889. You would revert to the old quinquennial settlements, under which the Government of India might hereafter give you a bigger share, but might possibly give you a smaller one, than they do?—There were grave defects pointed out at the time, and I am in accord more or less with the representations which led to the permanent settlement.

5890. Then you agree that the present settlement should be permanent, except in the case of a grave imperial emergency, in the sense that the provincial share should not be reduced?—Unless it is absolutely necessary; of course if it is necessary for imperial purposes to reduce it I do not see that any patriotic person can object to it.

5891. I say, except in the case of any grave imperial emergency; otherwise your idea is that the present settlement should be permanent in the sense that the provincial share should not be reduced, but that it might be hereafter possible to somewhat increase the provincial share?—Yes.

5892. You spoke of the Commerce and Industry Department having a branch office with a Secretary in charge in Madras; Madras is not the most important commercial centre in India?—It is not, unfortunately.

5893. Bombay would have a larger claim?—Yes.

5894. And Rangoon perhaps?—Yes.

5895. And Calcutta when the Government of India were at Simla?—When I say that there should be a Secretary, possibly there might be an Under Secretary; the importance of the official here could be determined later.

5896. If you came to branch offices you could not have one in Madras only; you would have to have branches elsewhere?—That would follow, I think.

5897. Would it conduce to consistence in Government policy, and the ready despatch of business, to have a number of branch Secretariats all over the country?—It might facilitate it in certain instances.

5898. You consider that the Government is too impersonal and too revenue-seeking?—That was the opinion expressed at the meeting of the Chamber.

5899. Are you, or the Chamber, prepared to substantiate that by specific instances, or do you make it merely as a general statement?—The statement made is a general one; it might be substantiated by specific instances, but it would be perhaps personal to publish cases that have arisen.

5900. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) It has been suggested that there should be a fairly complete separation between imperial and provincial finances, and it is possibly a further step in that suggestion that, if you had that more complete separation, it might be advisable to allow borrowing by provincial Governments?—That is so.

5901. You spoke of borrowing for irrigation and allied works; you do not confine the suggestion, that provincial Governments might possibly borrow, to irrigation works?—Not entirely; they might borrow for any local improvement.

5902. Suppose the provincial Government had for new works only nine or ten lakhs to spend after providing for everything; you would not mind their borrowing for important bridges if they could get them quicker in that way?—I would not.

5903. It would be very small, but you would agree to their borrowing for things like that as well as for irrigation?—Yes, for irrigation, roads, and other public improvements.

5904. In speaking about the branch of the Commerce and Industry Department in Madras, you gave some reason as to the duties levied upon mills?—A question has arisen in the case of some local mills here which were taxed upon a certain basis, and I believe they appealed to the Local Government. First I think the case was heard in the Police Court and the decision was given against them. The magistrate held—

5905. The details do not matter. Do you not think that if you had a branch office of the Government of India Secretariat in Madras and carried questions of that sort to them you would get into considerable trouble with the Local Government?—It might be, but the Chamber of Commerce would not mind that; if the Local Government did not sympathise with them, they would go to the Government of India.

5906. But I understand that you would go direct to the Government of India and not trouble the Local Government?—Yes, we should. As a matter of courtesy we should send the communication to the Government of Madras, but we should at the same time address the Government of India direct.

5907. In a matter of local administration?—I do not think that the Chamber considers whether it is a matter of local administration or not; they would consider their own members' interests first.

5908. But would it be considering your own future interests particularly if you did that?—I suppose not.

5909. Would it be a wise thing to bring an office here with that object; do you not think it would rather upset the coach?—Yes, I rather think it would. The views expressed in that Resolution, I may say, are not mine.

5910. As you are aware, all the Government Departments and other authorities have to purchase goods of European manufacture through the India Office?—Yes.

5911. A witness has told us that he thought that local officers might have very much more power in that regard and in regard to local purchases, and he suggested that if they had the power the country was ready to respond and would be able to supply most of their wants. Do you think that that is so?—In many instances I think that a large number of stores that are at present purchased at home could be obtained locally.

5912. At increased rates or much the same rates?—Much the same rates, and in many instances more favourable rates.

5913. If that were done would it lead to a considerable development of this country or not?—I cannot say that it would lead to considerable development; but it would tend to develop the local industries.

5914. You think that sea customs is a matter which ought to be entirely in the hands of the Imperial Central Government?—I am entirely of that opinion.

5915. Does it matter very much to the trade of India that there should be uniformity in the practice of Madras, Calcutta, Bombay, Rangoon and Karachi?—I think that there should be uniformity in practice at all ports.

5916. And you would centralize that completely?—I would.

5917. Your Chamber suggested that it would even get rid of the appeal to any local officers?—I would permit an appeal to the central authority alone.

5918. (Chairman.) You think there ought to be uniformity of treatment of customs when the goods are actually landed, but you do not refer in any way to the charges levied at individual ports?—No.

5919. The port dues ought to be settled by the authority at each port?—Yes, but the customs dues and the manner of levying those customs dues in my opinion should be uniform at all ports.

5920. Is there not a good deal of money made in Madras both in the Indian and in the European community?—A fair amount at times.

5921. Where is that principally invested?—Do you mean the money made in trade?

5922. Profits have to be invested in some way?—They are invested in business; I think in many instances in the case of natives they are hoarded, not invested.

5923. There is a considerable accumulation of hoards going on amongst the Indian population?—I cannot say that it is so; it appears to be so.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. WILLIAM FRANCIS GRAHAME was called and examined.

Mr. W. F.
Grahame.
28 Nov., 1907.

5924. (Chairman.) You have been a member of the Indian Civil Service?—I have.

5925. You retired about nine years ago?—On the 4th January, 1899.

5926. Do you think that there is at the present time among British officers here a considerably less power of speaking the vernacular than there was, say, when you first entered the Service?—Yes, that is what I have noted among young men of the present day.

5927. In the earlier days of which you have experience were officers less bound by a mass of correspondence?—Yes, and Assistant Collectors in those days had very much less to do.

5928. So that as young men they could move about and were forced to speak to, and to get into touch with, the people?—They could not move about except by order or permission of the Collector; they were supposed to remain at head-quarter stations unless the Collector ordered them to go out. If they wanted to go out, say, for a shooting party or any purpose like that, the Collector gave them permission to go out.

5929. Whatever may have been the reason, they had a greater knowledge of the vernacular?—Yes, I think so.

5930. From your knowledge of the Presidency, would it be desirable to revive the system of village panchayats?—Yes.

5931. Were they in existence in the early days of which you speak?—No, I do not remember myself having ever seen any instances of village panchayats, but they had only just ceased to exist, if they had ceased, when I went up-country in 1866.

5932. There were cases of them?—There were still cases of them, and the people wished to have them again. I think they should be restored now, in the Northern Circars at least, which I have known better than any other part of the Presidency.

5933. Have they died out to the regret of the people?—I think so.

5934. And such information as you could get of their work leads you to think that their work was good?—Yes; I think the people of this country are inclined to mediate in matters of dispute between them rather than to go to law; they go to law partly for amusement; I think they believe in the system of arbitration.

5935. Did you ever hear of there ever being any difficulty in those former days in getting people to serve upon these panchayats?—No.

5936. What was the reason that they died out?—I think perhaps that the District Officers disapproved of them, but I cannot give any specific reason, because, as I say, I did not see them dying out. I think the probable reason is that the increase in the number of district munsiffs' courts in the different districts gave them the opportunity of going to a real judge and having their disputes settled.

5937. Do you mean that they could not exist side by side with the munsiff?—No, I think they could exist side by side.

5939. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) I suggest that the panchayat has died out to a great extent as the natural result of the progress of society from communism to individualism?—I cannot say that I have considered the matter sufficiently to give a definite answer on that point. If you go into some districts where I have been, you will find people about as backward in the scale of civilisation as you could very well expect to find them, so that, if the spread of civilisation is the reason why panchayats have died out, I can see no reason why they should not have survived there. I found no difficulty as a rule, when I was a Judge, in getting the parties in most cases to submit to arbitration. That is practically the panchayat system. Personally, I would rather take any amount of time and trouble to get people to settle their disputes when they can by arbitration amongst themselves than to have them heard out in court; because having a case heard out and a decision given always leaves a rankling feeling of dislike between the two parties.

5940. (Mr. Meyer.) Was not a great blow struck at the old panchayat system by the introduction of the individual raiyyatwari system?—Yes, I suppose it was, but there are many things in villages—revenue is one thing—that I do not think the village panchayats should deal with. I exempt revenue particularly. I think they might deal with sanitation, although I have no great faith in their belief in sanitation—also education and any civil disputes between themselves.

5941. Then if the panchayat is to be revived for the settlement of disputes, will it not be necessary to make its authority final?—Yes, I would make it final within a certain limited amount; I cannot say now, because it is many years since I read about panchayats, what the superior limit of value in suits that they disposed of actually was.

5942. So long as a man has power to go either to the panchayats or to the munsiff, will not every discontented man go to the munsiff?—Yes.

5943. Therefore to make the panchayat a success you must put it in the same position as any other court?—Yes.

5944. You have had a career of 35 years in Government Service?—Yes.

5945. During that time did you notice any increase in the habit of appealing amongst the people as against local orders, speaking generally?—Yes, I think I have.

5946. A noticeable increase?—Yes.

5947. We have also heard something from various witnesses about corruption of the subordinate agency; in your 35 years' experience has the character of that agency improved or otherwise?—It has improved certainly.

5948. Largely improved?—Largely improved, more especially in the judicial branch.

5949. And among the tahsildars?—Yes, I should say amongst the tahsildars also, but of course I have had no revenue experience since the year 1880.

5950. You have been a Judge since?—Yes.

5951. Still, as a Judge, you saw something of the work of Sub-Magistrates?—Yes, as Sessions Judge. Besides that, one saw a fair amount of the work of Revenue Officers in cases that came up on appeal under the revenue law.

5952. You say that the morale of the Judicial Service has increased enormously and that as regards tahsildars and deputy tahsildars there has also been an improvement, but not so much as in the case of the Judicial Service?—Yes, I think so.

5953. (Mr. Hichens.) The development of local self-government has advanced considerably since you first came to the country?—There have been a great many municipalities and District Boards and taluk Boards created. I cannot say that local self-government has advanced very much.

5954. What experience have you had of municipalities?—I was Vice-President of the Chicacole municipality for nearly nine years, and I was the first Vice-President of the Chicacole Local Fund Board, and presided over it for some seven years.

5955. In your experience have these local bodies a sense of their local responsibility?—None.

5956. Can you say why?—What you find is that if the Vice-President or the Chairman or whoever presides is a strong man, the people wait to hear what he says, and as a rule they will accept it without considering whether they approve or disapprove of it. In my first Local Fund Board the first budget I had to introduce had a fairly good sum allotted for education; there were 12 of us; 11 out of the 12 were opposed to having any educational budget and I tried my hardest to get them to strike it out; I said "If it is your opinion that you do not want education, that it is a wrong thing to have any part of the budget allotted to education; then it is your duty to strike it out." The answer was, "But what would Government say?"

5957. You mean really I suppose that, although on paper they have a certain amount of responsibility, in practice it comes to nothing?—In practice I do not think they ever realise it.

5958. Is it a desirable thing to develop the sense of responsibility in districts?—I think it would be a desirable thing to do, but I do not quite see how it is going to be done. I suppose our theory is that some day or other we are going to leave the Indians to govern themselves, but unless we develop a sense of responsibility in them I do not see how we are ever to leave them to govern themselves.

5959. You have no suggestion to make as to how it could be developed by expanding, say, local self-government—I mean District Boards and so forth?—It may grow in time, but I see no symptoms of it. In this municipality of Madras they all seem to have a pretty fair idea that they have power, but I doubt whether any one of them feels responsibility.

5960. Would you be prepared to recommend that they should be given the power of managing their own budget and of carrying out, let us say, their own public works, their own sanitation, and so forth, by themselves, on their own responsibility?—Do you mean in Madras?

5961. I mean in the districts.—Certainly not.

5962. You would not be prepared to take that risk?—No, because I am perfectly certain that if they had no Government officer to control them in any way the whole thing would become a system of jobbery. As it is now, you continually find members of the Local Fund Boards and of municipalities in the mufassal struggling to put some relation of their own into some place that has either been created under the Act or that they wish to create, without any regard to whether he is fit for the post or not. That is universal in my opinion.

5963. Would you suggest that you must wait until that tendency has been eradicated before you give them further powers?—I think you have to wait; you have no option.

5964. Then from no point of view would it be desirable now to take any step whatever to enlarge their powers?—Certainly not.

5965. Would you say the same with regard to municipalities?—Yes, I think it is worse in the municipalities.

5966. Including the Municipality of Madras?—No, because I think in the Municipality of Madras they are amenable to a certain amount of public opinion; there are newspapers here, and these newspapers publish various things that they do and various things that they say, and if any man were really to try to run a job for a friend in this municipality I think nearly all the newspapers would expose it.

5967. You are in favour of reviving the panchayats?—I am.

5968. And you would give them certain judicial powers?—Yes, they would be very well suited for that.

5969. Would they not be also subject to the same temptations to jobbery?—I think not. I think the influence in a village is much more healthy than it is in a town.

5970. There is more public opinion?—The feelings of the people are in favour of the right thing being said and done, and that would affect the panchayats very largely.

5971. (Mr. Dutt.) In order to make these village panchayats realities, as you said, it would be necessary to give them powers, and final powers, within certain limits, in the disposal of civil and criminal cases?—Yes.

5972. Your proposal is that there would be some legislation necessary in order to do that?—There is no other way of giving it to them, that I can see, except by legislation.

5973. Would you recommend the same uniform plan for all panchayats, or would you give the Government discretion to give different powers to different panchayats?—I think I should give the Government discretion to give power to the panchayats up to a certain point, and I would also give them the power to go slow to begin with—to start with something very much short of the maximum that the panchayat could work up to.

5974. So that, if there was an Act, only the principles would be laid down in the body of the Act, and the rest would be schedules of powers with which the panchayats might be entrusted?—Yes, something like what I understand the new Civil Procedure Code is to be; every detail is practically to be in the rules to be framed under the Code.

5975. You said that there has been a noticeable increase of appeals during the 35 years of your service. Do you find a similar noticeable increase in petitions of all kinds?—Certainly; I can give you an instance. It happened that I had to make an investigation into the comparative amount of work that was done by myself during the first four years and four months that I was Judge at Tinnevely, and the work that my predecessor had done in the four years and four months before he left. I found that in miscellaneous petitions the rise was from something like 2,500 a year to 4,500 or 4,600; that is a very fair rise I think in four years and four months.

5976. So that it is not only in the matter of appeals that there was an increase, but also in the matter of petitions of all kinds?—Yes; the only thing in which there was no rise was in sessions cases. We had in the same space of time almost the same number of cases and of prisoners and witnesses in sessions cases; criminal appeals increased from 180 to 390 or 395.

5977. You remark that there has been a great improvement in the morale of the officers generally, but more especially in the judicial line than in the revenue line. Could you suggest any way in which a similar marked improvement could be effected in the morale of the tahsildars and the lower revenue officers?—No, I do not know that I can. The district munsiffs now are men who have undergone a thorough legal and judicial training. Very few men are made munsiffs now who are not Bachelors of Law, and I think that in the course of their legal and judicial training they have forced upon them a respect for what is true and just and honest; that is what I take to be the raison d'être of the law, and I think that becomes a part of them in a way. Tahsildars have not such a training. I think that increased pay to tahsildars might have a very marked effect in raising their morale.

5978. If the selection were made from the same class of men or men equally well educated and trained, would that help to improve the morale of the tahsildars to some extent?—Yes, but I do not see how a man who is aspiring to be a tahsildar is going to get his training. A tahsildar is almost always chosen from the deputy tahsildars or from clerks in the Collector's office—it was so in my time. I do not know what they do nowadays, but they must rise from a lower position in the Revenue Service.

5980. And you would suggest that as a way of getting more work out of them?—I certainly think something of that kind might be tried at any rate. I see that one of the witnesses suggested that they should have sub-committees of two, and that they should be given power to investigate and make suggestions as to how particular departments should be conducted. I think that would be an admirable discipline for members of municipalities or Local Fund Boards, and that it would really train them into governing themselves.

5981. (Sir Frederic Lely.) Even though the village panchayat has disappeared or is disappearing, is there not still a sense of brotherhood in most of the best villages that might be utilised?—I consider that there was in the days when I was a Revenue Officer; people always backed up their own village.

5982. And so far as you know that feeling still exists?—I think so; I see no reason why it should not exist.

5983. They all have some common interest, say, in the village well and the village school and so on?—The fact that they belong to the same village is a tie between them.

5984. That still exists although the village as a corporate life has disappeared?—The village as a commune has disappeared; that is to say the old communal life has gone.

5985. But there still remains a tradition of associated life?—I think so.

5986. What was the government of a town under native rule; was that not entirely under the kotwal?—I suppose the kotwal was a very important officer in a Native State; in villages that I have seen in the Northern Circars the village naidu was always looked up to as a man of great importance.

5987. I am speaking now of the towns?—I do not know what was the system under native rule.

5988. As a matter of fact, so far as managing their own affairs is concerned, would you not say that a villager of the best sort was quite equal in intelligence to the town man?—In most things I should say he was.

5989. And in some things better?—In some things much better; in honesty, for instance, I think he is a good deal better.

5990. Therefore in our attempts to get the people to govern themselves, in passing over the village and beginning at the towns, have we not made rather a false step?—I suppose we have, but that is a matter that I have never considered very much.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. JOSEPH SATYA NADAR was called and examined.

5991. (Chairman.) You are a member of the Madras Municipal Council?—Yes; for five years.

5992. You desire to represent something to us on behalf of that municipality?—Yes. Under the Code now in existence, the Code of 1904, all chief officers are appointed by Government and Government alone. My submission is that the Corporation should have a voice in these appointments. Government may appoint, but it should be after consulting the Corporation; or in other words the Corporation may recommend a person to be President of the Corporation and the Government may appoint. And not only the President; there are three other chief officers of the Corporation, the Revenue Officer, the Health Officer, and the Engineer of the Corporation.

5993. You want the Corporation to have power to appoint all those three?—Or at all events they must be consulted in the appointment of those officers. Under the present Code even the subordinate officers and servants of the Corporation can be appointed only with the approval of Government. That is curtailing too much the powers of the Corporation.

5994. Ought the Corporation to have an entirely free hand in that matter?—Yes, in the case of subordinate officers and servants.

5995. Then may we turn to your other point?—That was as regards the budget. The Government has power now to reject the budget submitted by the Corporation completely. The wording of the section is that they may "reject or alter or add to" the budget submitted by the Corporation. From my past experience it appeared to me that the Government were interfering too much not only in the matter of the appointments but also in the municipal budget. My submission is that if there were items in the budget to which the Government could take exception, they should draw the attention of the Corporation to the matter, so that the Corporation might itself amend its own budget; in short, that Government should be given power to interfere with the budget only in regard to matters with which they are directly concerned, or with regard to matters which affect the general policy of the Government, or with regard to matters which the Corporation could not do under the Act except with the approval and sanction of the Government.

5996. I understand that no taxes can be levied without the approval of the provincial Government?—Yes.

5997. And the Local Government sanction is required for the construction of water works, the acquisition of land, street improvements, future construction of buildings, closing of public markets, and so on?—Yes.

5998. In all those kinds of things you desire greater freedom?—Yes.

5999. We have had it in evidence that the whole of the expenditure of the Madras Municipality is raised from Madras—practically the whole of it?—Practically, no doubt, but not the expenditure incurred in connection with big schemes.

6000. There the Government comes to your aid?—Yes.

6001. But the ordinary expenditure of the Municipality is raised from the town of Madras?—Yes.

6002. Therefore you feel that, being a large town here and finding your own money, you are entitled to a greater control?—That is my submission.

6003. (Mr. Hitchens.) Is there not a provision in the Code that the Local Government has to fix the date of the submission of the budget and the date on which it shall be considered by the municipality?—Yes.

6004. Why do the Government decide that?—They want to have the budget by a fixed time for their convenience, so they fix a time by which the Corporation shall submit its budget, and the Corporation have to go through the budget by the time appointed to suit the convenience of the provincial Government.

6005. Do you consider it necessary that the budget should be considered by the provincial Government at all?—I think that the budget as a whole must be considered by Government.

6006. Why?—On the ground generally that all municipalities, particularly such a big municipality as that of Madras, must be under Government supervision and some sort of control of the Government.

6007. Do they ever alter your budget?—They do.

6008. Do they add to your expenditure, for example?—I am not aware of any instance where the Government have added to the expenditure that we put down in our budget.

6009. What form does the alteration generally take?—In preparing a budget we propose, for instance, a small increase of salary to a subordinate officer; recently there was an instance of an increase of one or two rupees to the salary of a menial servant. That was a matter in respect of which we had to protest against Government interference.

6010. They do not interfere very much in bigger matters?—No.

6011. They have a reserve power to interfere in bigger matters, but as a matter of fact they leave you very much to yourselves?—Yes, they interfere in minor matters.

6012. (Mr. Dutt.) You have asked for a freer hand in the management of your own resources and a freer hand altogether for the municipality. Do you claim for the municipality the right to impose a new tax without the sanction of the Government?—No.

6013. Nor to alter an existing tax?—No.

6014. Nor to abolish an existing tax?—No.

6015. In those matters you are perfectly content that the Government should have a voice in the matter and should control your actions?—I think they must have.

6016. But in small matters, like those you have mentioned, you consider the Government should not interfere in or alter your budget?—Exactly.

6017. (Mr. Meyer.) Do you say that although the Government interfere repeatedly on small matters such as the payment of a peon and so forth they do not interfere with you in big matters?—I do not mean to say that they do not interfere at all. The Corporation feels aggrieved to see Government interfering in petty matters.

6018. But as to their control in big matters; one of the previous witnesses told us something about a drainage scheme; you wanted a man from outside and Government thought that somebody else could do it; do you call that a little thing or an important thing?—That is a very big thing.

6019. It was a thing towards which Government were contributing?—That was with regard to the appointment of an important officer. There of course my contention was that the Government should not have appointed an officer on their own responsibility without consulting the Corporation.

6020. But as compared with the appointment of a peon or a clerk, that was a fairly large matter. I will put it in another way; does the Government never put pressure on you to raise your house tax?—They did.

6021. Did you raise it?—We protested, and we were compelled to raise it.

6022. Then Government does, whether for your good or otherwise, interfere with you in large matters as well as in small?—Do you mean in the budget?

Mr. J.
Satya Nadar.
28 Nov., 1907.

Mr. J.
Satya Nadar.

28 Nov., 1907.

6023. Throughout the year, in the exercise of the powers given to it by laws, does the Government interfere with you?—As regards the items that the Corporation put down in the budget, the Government interfere very often in many petty matters which the Corporation do not like, but this question did not suggest itself to me. In the question of raising taxes and so on they did compel us.

6024. I do not want to discuss whether the exercise of their power was expedient or not, but although they mostly interfere with you in little matters, they do sometimes interfere with you in big matters as well?—Yes.

6025. You spoke of the municipality having no voice in the appointment of the President. Is there not a section of the Act under which a certain number of you may remove the President?—The Act empowers the Corporation to remove a President, but gives it no voice in the appointment.

6026. (Chairman.) I suppose the reason that the provincial Government fix the date for the consideration of your budget is the fact that it has to be got through before the provincial budget is passed?—That is so.

6027. As a Corporation, you have no dealings at all with the Government of India, have you?—No.

6028. Have you a great deal of correspondence with the provincial Government?—A good deal.

6029. Has that increased or not lately?—I believe it is on the increase, judging as I do from the papers that are in circulation among the members.

6030. Has it increased or decreased since the new Act of 1904?—I think it is on the increase; my experience is only since the last five years, but even during those five years I should say that the correspondence has regularly increased.

Adjourned.

SEVENTH DAY.

MADRAS, Friday, November 29th, 1907.

PRESENT :

C. E. H. HOBHOUSE, Esq., M.P., Under Secretary of State for India, Chairman.

Sir FREDERIC LELY, K.C.I.E., C.S.I.

Sir STEYNING EDGERLEY, K.C.V.O., C.I.E., I.C.S.

R. C. DUTT, Esq., C.I.E.

W. S. MEYER, Esq., C.I.E., I.C.S.

W. L. HICHENS, Esq.

The Hon. Mr. J. N. ATKINSON was called and examined.

The Hon.
Mr. J. N.
Atkinson.

29 Nov., 1907.

6031. (Chairman.) You are a member of the Board of Revenue of Madras?—Yes; I am officiating as First Member. Duties are not assigned according to the position of the member in the Board. I am in charge of the duties of Land Revenue Settlement, Survey, Land Records, and Agriculture. I hand in memoranda regarding the organisation of the Board. The Board as at present constituted consists of three departments, (1) Land Revenue, including Forests, (2) Separate Revenue (Salt, Abkari and Income-tax), and (3) Settlement, Survey, Land Records and Agriculture. The Land Revenue Department is in charge of two members; the other two Departments are in charge of one member each. Though the Board is divided into three departments, and the members have separate portfolios, important subjects in any of the three departments are dealt with by the Full Board of four members. In the case of a collective Board subject, the opinion of the first member, if supported by a single other member, prevails. Any member dissenting from the opinion of the majority may claim that the fact should be placed on record. In the Separate Revenue and Settlement Departments all but the most important subjects are dealt with by the single members in charge of those portfolios. In the Land Revenue Department the various subjects are distributed between the two members. Many subjects are dealt with by a single member—more important ones by both members. In the latter case, should there be a divergence of opinion, the papers will be circulated to a third member—and the opinion of two members prevails.

The name of the member or members of the Board under whose orders a resolution of the Board is issued is entered at the head of the copy of each proceedings. An abstract in print of the Proceedings issued in routine and miscellaneous series is circulated to the members, who may withdraw or cancel an order in which they may not agree.

One of the members is in charge of the Court of Wards portfolio and disposes of all ordinary papers. The more important subjects are dealt with by the full Court, and they are the following:—

- (1) Taking up of estates under superintendence.
- (2) Schemes for the liquidation of the debts of encumbered estates.
- (3) Revision of the Court's office establishment.
- (4) Delegation of general powers to Collectors and their subordinates.
- (5) Appointment of managers of large estates and of estate collectors, agricultural experts, etc.
- (6) Marriages of wards.
- (7) Removal of wards from their estates to the Court's institution at Madras.
- (8) Educational progress of the wards and their tours.
- (9) Grant of loans from one estate to another or to a private person, on the first mortgage of immoveable property.
- (10) Large investments of surplus funds in the purchase of landed property or in municipal or other debentures.
- (11) Questions of disputed succession on the death of wards.

There are 24 Collectorates in the Land Revenue Department which have the following staff:—23 Collectors, besides the Resident in Travancore and Cochin; 15 Sub-Collectors; 21 Head and Special Assistants; Assistant Collectors (of varying numbers); 79 Deputy Collectors.

Each Collectorate is divided into a number of taluks presided over by a tahsildar. One or more taluks are formed into a division which is in charge of a Sub-Collector, Head, or Special Assistant, Collector, or a Deputy Collector. There are 87 divisions and 161 taluks.

In most taluks, the tahsildar is assisted by a deputy tahsildar. Each taluk is divided into a number of revenue inspectors' ranges or firkas, and each firka consists of a number of villages each officered by a headman (monigar) and an accountant (karnam).

Collectors act as local agents of the Court of Wards in their respective districts, and superintend the affairs of the estates in their charge subject to the control of the Court. In the case of an estate in which the execution of decrees is transferred from the Civil Courts to the District Collector, the latter is debarred by law from superintending the management of the estate, and his place is then taken by an officer called the "Estate Collector," specially appointed by Government for the purpose. To each estate is appointed a manager who works under the orders of the Collector. The managers and the more important subordinates under them, especially in the larger estates, are usually Government servants lent to the Court's service.

There are at present 26 estates under management. Of these one has no manager, as the ward has no immoveable property; six small estates are managed by Government Revenue Officers of the rank of deputy tahsildar who have been appointed ex-officio managers of those estates; the remaining nineteen estates have each a manager of its own.

The function of the Court of Wards is to take up estates of disqualified proprietors under its superintendence with the sanction of the Local Government, and to administer their affairs, for which full power is vested in the Court under Madras Act I. of 1902. The actual management of the affairs of the estates devolves on the Collectors subject to the control of the Court. Under the law (Section 8 of Madras Act I. of 1902) the Court is competent to delegate any of its powers to Collectors and their subordinates. The Court had delegated considerable powers to Collectors in the matter of appointment and the control of the establishments, grant of leases, grant of remissions, assignment of lands, conduct of suits, advances to tenants, revision of orders of subordinate officers, etc. In financial matters the Court has given to Collectors as large powers as it could, consistently with its position as trustee on behalf of its wards. The Court's sanction is required for all recurring charges such as salaries of establishment, maintenance allowances, etc., while Collectors have been authorized to incur miscellaneous non-recurring charges of every kind up to Rs. 50 in each case. They have authority also to pay the peshkash, assessment and all other public dues, to incur ordinary law charges and contingencies; and to sanction expenditure on irrigation works, buildings, etc., up to a limit of

Rs. 500 in the case of original works, and Rs. 1,000 in the case of repairs, subject to provision in the budget. The Court sanctions an annual budget for each estate, but the Collector is at liberty to transfer funds from one head to another, or from the reserve, without limit. In miscellaneous matters in which no specific powers have been delegated to the Collector, the practice is for him to take the necessary action himself, except in those matters of importance in which he considers that the Court's orders should be obtained.

The members of the Board, besides disposing of the correspondence on the subjects under their charge, tour through all the districts, meet the Collectors, Conservators, forest officers, and discuss the general affairs of the districts, get to know the character and qualifications of the various District Officers, listen to any complaints which members of the public may have to make personally, study any important problems in dealing with which local investigation is likely to be useful, and give such counsel and advice to the local authorities as circumstances warrant.

The control of the Forest Administration of the Presidency is entrusted to one of the two Land Revenue members of the Board of Revenue. The Forest Member exercises the necessary control in the name of the Board of Revenue. For administrative purposes, the Presidency is divided into three circles, Northern, Central and Southern, which contain 28 forest districts. Each forest district is subdivided into ranges, each in charge of a forest subordinate called the ranger, who is assisted in the discharge of his duties by deputy rangers and foresters. Each range is subdivided into "beats" looked after by forest guards. Each circle is under the control of a Conservator. The Collector is the head of the Forest Department in the district. He controls the general management of the forests therein with the assistance of a forest officer, called the district forest officer.

Collectors and Conservators are subordinate to and receive their orders and instructions from the Forest Member of the Board of Revenue. The relative position of the Collector and the Conservator in the forest administration is as follows:

—In all the external relations of the Forest Department, that is, those matters in which the Department comes into direct contact with the public, such as the provision of grazing, the supply of firewood, the issue of timber for agricultural and domestic purposes, and so on, the control of the Collector is supreme and his orders prevail. In internal matters and those relating to technical and departmental working, such as the framing of working-plans, the propagation and renewal of forests and the appointment and control of the staff, the decision rests with the Conservator. In matters which to some extent relate to both of these two classes of subjects, the Collector's orders prevail. The Collector accordingly controls the felling, extraction, removal and disposal of forest produce and generally all matters affecting the privileges and convenience of the public. The Collector or the Conservator can refer to the Board of Revenue for decision any matter in which either authority thinks that the orders issued by the other are contrary to the public interests.

*The Hon.
Mr. J. N.

29 Nov., 1907.

One member of the Board "is in charge of the duties of" the Commissioner of Revenue Settlement, Survey, Land Records and Agriculture.

The portfolio system observed in the Board's office differs in one important respect from that in vogue in the Government Office. Under a statutory provision a list of the subjects disposed of by members of the Board, individually or collectively, is notified in the Gazette, and a Government order requires the name of the member or members of the Board responsible for each resolution to appear at the head of each copy. In routine cases a copy of the proceedings, or a list of the abstracts of several such proceedings passed in the course of a day, week or fortnight, is submitted to the member as soon as practicable so that he may stop or cancel an order in which he does not concur.

The various Heads of Departments subordinate to the Board in the Department of Revenue Settlement, Survey, Land Records and Agriculture are enumerated below:—

- (a) Special Settlement Officers and Special Assistant Settlement Officers.—The initial settlement of all districts in the Presidency having been completed, the operations of the Settlement Department are now confined to resettlement.
- (b) Director of Survey.—The cadastral survey of the Presidency is practically over and the survey operations now conducted are of the nature of resurvey or revision survey which are an indispensable preliminary to resettlement.
- (c) Director of Land Records.—The Land Records staff is employed in the various detailed operations preliminary or accessory to the maintenance of survey marks and survey records.
- (d) Director of Agriculture.—The members of the Agricultural Department are employed in the management of experimental stations, and the dissemination of agricultural information among the raiyats.
- (e) Superintendent of Civil Veterinary Department.—The Civil Veterinary Department conducts operations calculated to improve the breed of horses, ponies, cattle and stock, the dissemination of veterinary knowledge, and the prevention and treatment of cattle diseases. The Superintendent is also in charge of the Madras Veterinary College.
- (f) Registrar of Co-operative Credit Societies.—The Registrar is entrusted with the organisation of Co-operative Credit Societies and the inculcation among the raiyats of the principles of self-help, co-operation and thrift.

The Hon.
Mr. J. N.
Atkinson.

N.B.—(1) When the Full Board has decided that dry remissions should be granted in any area, all further details are arranged by the Commissioner of Revenue Settlement acting alone.

(2) When a paper which, in the ordinary course, would go before the member in charge of the Department of Revenue Settlement, Survey, Land Records and Agriculture, is an appeal against a decision previously passed by him in any other capacity, such paper is disposed of by any colleague whom he may designate.

(3) When serious famine appears imminent or when extensive relief measures are undertaken, the member of the Board in charge of the Office of the Commissioner of Revenue Settlement, Survey, Land Records and Agriculture exercises the powers and performs the duties of Famine Commissioner, as laid down in the Code, until a Famine Commissioner is appointed.

6032. You set out in your memorandum that there is a statutory provision requiring a list of the subjects disposed of by the members of the Board, and so forth, to be notified; does that not strike you as being somewhat cumbersome?—The reason of that was that originally the Board of Revenue was only looked upon as a collective Board; it was then found that it was extremely inconvenient for the disposal of business that the whole Board should have to see to every subject, and it was found that no individual member or no two members—nothing less than a collective Board—could dispose of any subject unless the law was altered, which it accordingly was.

6034. Then you set out that you have under your control special Settlement Officers, the Directors of Survey, and so forth? Is there any delegation of power to these officers under you which you could suggest to us as desirable and useful?—I made suggestions the other day to the Government; they are very small; we have not had much time to consider the whole subject; I daresay if we were to look into the matter more thoroughly we could find other powers that could be delegated.

6035. Will you put in a schedule of such duties as you think could reasonably be delegated?—Very well.

6036. With regard to the Director of Industrial and Technical Inquiries, does he lay himself out to find out in what direction new industries should be started?—Yes, but the particular industry upon which his efforts are to be centred is of course subject to the orders of Government.

6037. That is to say, to yourself?—Government is over me; I can recommend to Government, but I cannot do more.

6038. Who is your immediate superior?—The Secretary to Government in the Revenue Department.

6039. What service have you?—Twenty-nine years.

6040. You correspond with the Secretary in the Revenue Department; what service has he?—I think it is 26 years.

6041. In the correspondence which takes place between you and all these Directors, and between you and the Secretary in the Revenue Department, is there much waste of time?—No, I do not think so.

6042. Some small amount?—I do not think there is any waste of time; there is a certain consumption of time, but speaking generally the time is usefully consumed.

6043. Could any of that time be saved and devoted to better purposes if the correspondence were either modified or simplified?—Not otherwise than by the delegation of powers which we have recommended. We have made recommendations from time to time for Government to delegate certain powers to us; there are some small matters in which we have to go up to Government now, which, in my opinion, are pure waste of time.

6044. Some of your time therefore, is wasted?—Yes, in those small matters.

6045. And in the same way, in your judgment, some of the correspondence which comes to you from below causes a certain waste of time, and you propose that you should delegate the authority to your subordinates to prevent that?—Yes, to a small extent.

6046. You hand in a list of different heads of subjects with which you have to deal as Commissioner of Revenue Settlement and so forth. That list contains no fewer than 32 heads; out of these 32 heads how many can you settle yourself?—I could not tell you without going through the list. In practically all these cases there is an appeal to Government.

6047. I want to know how much you can practically settle yourself?—Any answer I give you will be misleading, but I should say 14 out of the 32.

6048. About half?—Something of that sort. In any case practically any order I give is open to appeal.

6049. But in practice you find that you can dispose of about 14 out of the 32?—For instance, some of the heads in that list are really only periodical reports; of course there is no appeal against a periodical report.

6050. Now with regard to remissions of revenue, we have had it in evidence here that Collectors can remit wet revenue at their own discretion?—Yes.

6051. They cannot remit dry revenue?—No.

6052. Might not that power of remission to some extent be further extended to Collectors?—No. I do not think there is the slightest necessity for it.

6053. Throughout the Presidency what sort of proportions of revenue respectively are derived from wet and dry crops; would it be one-third to two-thirds?—I daresay it might be, but I should be very unwilling to commit myself to any definite statement. I do not think there is any need to delegate this power to Collectors. To begin with, it is very seldom that it has to be exercised; to go on with, it is not a matter that requires any very detailed enquiry. A dry remission according to our rules is granted over large tracts of country, and not on consideration of the conditions of each particular field, but on the consideration of the general condition of the tract.

6054. I am not asking what the rules are now; I am asking, if there is distress in any particular village, why should not the Collector have power to remit without reference to the Board of Revenue, if the remission would give real relief?—In my own opinion, I should say Collectors would be far too much inclined to grant remissions.

6055. Collectors would forget their obligations from the revenue point of view?—Quite so.

6056. What is the limit in the case of wet crops that they can remit to?—Any amount; that is to say, wet remission is given field by field, and they can remit the full amount of it.

6057. You do not think that some limit might be fixed within which a Collector visiting a village, or even a district, in which there is evidently distress amongst the growers of dry crops, might be empowered to remit revenue? He can as I understand suspend it now, can he not?—He can only grant what we call postponement of kists.

6058. Postponement of kists is putting off the date of collection?—Yes.

6059. It is quite clear that, if a man has got no crop, unless he draws on his previous year's savings, he has no money; that would apply to any crop, wet or dry?—That is so.

6060. If there is real distress, that relief should be given and given quickly?—Quite so.

6061. Therefore, would it not be well that a Collector should have power, within certain limits, which would not endanger the financial stability of the provincial Government, to give the relief which is all-important to the cultivator?—You are assuming that if a dry crop fails the man must be reduced to distress. I do not think that that assumption will bear examination; it requires certainly more than the failure of one dry crop to reduce a man to distress, and I do not know that there is need for any immediate and early relief such as you suggest.

6062. Would the Collector be in the position to know, or would his subordinate in whom he trusts be in a position to know, whether either a particular village or individual raiyats in the village had, or had not, got some hoardings?—He would not be in a position to know about each individual raiyat, but he certainly ought to be in a position to know whether, speaking of a village generally or a tract generally, the people were hard up.

6063. You could not trust his discretion within a limited area, in the case of dry crops, to say whether or not the village deserved relief?—No; I should prefer not to trust his discretion; I do not say that there are no officers whose discretion could not be trusted, but speaking generally, I think not.

6064. You trust Collectors in large matters otherwise?—Yes.

6065. But in the case of revenue you do not feel yourself so free?—I do not say of revenue; I only say of one particular form of revenue.

6066. Who fixes the date of the kist?—That is settled by Government.

6067. On whose advice?—On the advice of the Board of Revenue and the Collectors and all the local officials.

6068. You yourself at your own discretion as a member of the Board of Revenue cannot settle that?—No.

6069. Why is it necessary to carry that beyond you to Government? Is your advice to Government about kists often disregarded or altered?—No; we very seldom do give advice to Government about the kists now. The latest rules about altering the kist are that when a district is re-settled the Settlement Officer is to combine with his settlement report any recommendation he may have to make as regards what we call the kistbandi, and occasionally suggestions are accepted; I think the other day one was accepted in Kurnool; the first kist was formerly timed to fall in December, and on the recommendation of the Settlement Officer it was put forward to January; that of course comes through the Collector and through the Board—through me—to Government.

6070. But who is Government in this case?—Well, the Secretary is only the channel by which it reaches the Government.

6071. Cannot the Secretary settle a matter of that sort?—No.

6072. That would have to go practically to the Government?—Yes.

6073. Who would have the best knowledge of a particular district, the Member of Council who seldom tours, the Board of Revenue who tour more often, or the Collector who lives in the district?—The Collector would have the best knowledge of conditions as they are; I think the member of the Board of Revenue might claim to have almost equal knowledge, provided that he had personal knowledge of the district; in some cases more so.

6074. Might it not be sufficient to stop at the Board of Revenue, so that the local knowledge of the Collector, tempered by the experience of the member of the Board of Revenue, would settle these matters?—As a matter of fact it does not even stop at the Government. There can be no large alteration of the kistbandi without informing the Government of India, for financial reasons; so much of our revenue falls in the months prior to the 1st April, and the rest afterwards, that if there were to be any large alteration in the kistbandi it might upset the whole of the financial arrangements.

6075. It might involve transference of revenue from one year to another?—Yes.

6076. How often is the revenue collected in a year?—It is collected the whole year round.

6077. The alteration of date would only really affect the Government of India and the provincial Government within two or three months. If you altered the date of collection of revenue say from February to April it would upset the revenue of the year?—Yes.

6078. But suppose you altered it from October to December, that would have no effect on the revenue of the year?—I only know what the Government of India tell us. The Madras Government on one occasion did, of its own authority, sanction a certain change in the kistbandi, and the result was some financial dislocation; I do not know the details, but a letter came down from the Government of India requesting that the Madras Government would not effect any large alteration in the kistbandi without either letting them know or consulting them.

6079. Are there many questions of altering the kistbandi?—No, not now—not large questions.

6080. If any powers were delegated on this matter it would be a comparatively small matter?—I think so. At the same time it must be remembered that the important kists are those in March and April, and that every single kist you transfer from March to April would be of importance.

6081. I asked a Collector yesterday whether he thought there could be some further improvements in the methods by which the loans reached the cultivator. Do you think yourself that there could be any means of expediting the matter?—We considered that question quite recently, and we introduced certain improvements. The general effect was so far as I remember—I have not referred to the papers since—that Divisional Officers and revenue inspectors may take the money into camp to pay the people on the spot without their having to come to the taluk cutcherry. Now, there appear to have been orders issued by the Government of India dated the 1st March, 1905, and the 14th May, 1907, under which the accounts of loan transactions have been simplified, and this alteration of taking cash into camp has been adopted.

6082. You have told us that you think the second alteration has been made; do you know whether the first improvement has also been carried out, as to the matter of accounts?—I cannot speak from personal knowledge, but if it has been ordered it must have been carried out. The only person who could tell you that would be a person who has been entrusted with the duty of keeping the accounts.

6083. Do the accounts of these loans not come up to you?—No; they are kept in the taluk; there are other accounts that come to me, but those are only consolidated from the taluk accounts.

6084. Are these taluk accounts simple?—They are as simple as they can be; they are still complicated.

6085. Could they be simplified?—I should hesitate to give an opinion.

6086. You deal with vital statistics?—Nominally, yes.

6087. Are they sent in to you?—I am responsible for looking after births and deaths registration, but as a matter of fact practically nothing ever comes to me.

6088. Are you a post office in the matter?—That is the sort of thing.

6089. Whom do you send them to?—I really do not know.

6090. Why should you be a post office? Why should they not go direct?—I have made a mistake. Statistics of births and deaths do not come to me. The "births and deaths registration" there refers to the compulsory registration of births; it is only in certain areas that the registration of births and deaths is compulsory, and before those areas can be extended reports come up from the districts through me to Government. In regard to that I do perform certain functions more or less.

6091. More or less?—Well, let us say more; I mean, I do really consider those reports; they are genuine reports; it is not a mere statistical matter, but the Collectors send in and give their reasons pro and con about the extension of compulsory registration to certain areas.

6092. Then you have your railway and District Board statistics?—Those are pure statistics; I do not think I ever see them unless I call for them.

6093. Why should they not go direct to the other department to whom you send them?—I do not know; speaking at random I should be delighted if they did; there may be some extremely good reason why they should not. Practically I am responsible for all statistics of any sort.

6094. What is the good of an officer being responsible for statistics which he does not see and for which he is merely a post office; why should not the real man be responsible?—That I cannot answer.

6096. Then with regard to seasonal reports, are these all necessary to your revenue work?—Yes.

6097. Then economic botany, entomology, mycology, and agricultural chemistry?—That is all connected with agriculture; that is one of my most important departments.

6098. Then statistics of industries; must you have those statistics?—I think you might cut out the word statistics; it really means industries. You were mentioning the Director of Industrial Inquiries; he is the head of that Department under me.

6099. Then with regard to fire, flood and other unusual charges?—Those are things that very seldom occur.

6100. Speaking generally, out of all these 32 different subjects, can you give us any suggestions by which your correspondence both outwards and inwards could be diminished; is your work in the Department very heavy?—It varies from time to time; sometimes it is very heavy; there may be a great rush of work that one can hardly get through; then for a time it is perhaps not so heavy; at any rate there is quite enough to fill my whole time.

6101. Has your department increased in size lately?—Yes, owing to such things as co-operative credit societies, the extension of industries, and the extension of the Agricultural Department; all those are growing very fast.

6102. Therefore is it not almost essential when you have to deal with these subjects, that your unnecessary correspondence upon those subjects should be reduced to the very smallest possible degree?—I suppose so.

6103. Can you from your experience make any suggestion to us as to how that unnecessary correspondence could be got rid of?—I could not make any suggestion at random in regard to mere administrative correspondence; I should have to consider it with regard to each of these different departments.

6104. Could you, speaking generally, trust more to the discretion of your chief subordinates, the Collectors and Directors of all these various subjects? You have told us that you would not like to trust the Collector in the matter of dry revenue, but on other subjects which pass between you and him would you like to give him greater discretion?—In some matters, yes.

6105. Could you give us one or two heads of subjects on which you think he might have more discretion?—One matter is that of appeals.

6106. Is there any other subject?—I have not formed any ideas beyond the mere isolated things in which we have recommended delegation.

6107. Then with regard to these other Directors: besides small matters, is there any other important work which is now nominally entrusted to them and really settled by you or some authority superior to you, which you could trust to them?—Again I cannot say on the spur of the moment.

6108. Are the departments growing?—Yes.

6109. As a department grows is it not quite clear that the person at the head of the department must acquire greater experience?—I suppose he ought to.

6110. Is he worth keeping if he does not?—No, I take it he is not.

6111. Then would it not be well that as a department grows, and as the head of it acquires experience, he should be gradually entrusted with larger and larger powers; is that not a sound maxim of Government?—Yes.

6112. Would it not therefore be well in the interests of your own department to search carefully into the subjects in regard to which these gentlemen might have much greater powers?—Yes, I shall be very glad to do it.

6114. You have not consulted them yet?—Not generally on the question. There is one matter of importance that I may refer to. The other day a matter came up in connection with the Director of the Industrial Department; that is a quasi-commercial department in a great measure; he now is developing the manufacture of chrome tanned leather; he explained to me that in connection with that development he had to purchase a great deal of raw hide, and he recommended that he might be allowed a floating advance up to Rs. 5,000. The Account Code at present does not allow any such advance to be made without the sanction of Government. That is a special case; he is running a department in a special way, different from most Government Departments, more like a mercantile firm. His representation is that he has not got enough cash to run his department properly. On another occasion he said, "It seems rather nonsense that, while Government allow me to spend perhaps Rs. 1,000 or Rs. 1,500 in buying hides, I may not sanction Rs. 15 to have another clerk in my office."

6115. (Sir Frederic Lely.) Have you had much experience as a District Officer?—Yes, for the last ten years I have been in Madras; for 19 years I was up country.

6116. You served as a Divisional Officer and as a Collector for some years?—Yes.

6117. Does not the jamabandi consist of an examination by the Divisional Officer of the village accounts and the taluk accounts?—Yes.

6118. Do you remember the number of registers and accounts of all sorts kept in the village?—What we call the village accounts number 24.

6119. Are they not unnecessarily voluminous?—I hardly feel competent to give an opinion; we have cut them down very often; what I should like would be to get the opinion of an expert, that is to say a non-official accountant, a chartered accountant, or something of that sort. We have four or five times tried to shorten them and cut them down, but still there is no doubt they are very large.

6120. You have large irrigation accounts, are those carried to very minute detail?—One I think has 115 columns.

6121. And the revenue is adjusted to the fraction of an anna?—Yes. Perhaps we are talking of different accounts; there are "Irrigation Statistical Accounts" and there are "Irrigation Accounts" intended simply for the assessing of the water rate and so on.

6122. Those are what I am referring to.—They are not so very complicated.

6123. The statistical accounts are?—They are complicated in the sense that they are very minute.

6124. Is not the revenue, the share of water-rate, adjusted down to the fraction of an anna?—It is assessed at so much an acre.

6125. And then worked out to the very last pie?—I think we disregard the pies.

6126. However, might you not fix some margin of say eight annas; it would greatly decrease the intricacy of the account?—I do not know that it would, very greatly. If you only calculate it down to annas, I do not think that that makes it much more complicated.

6127. At the jamabandi the examining officer is supposed to examine the whole of these 27 or 28 books?—Yes.

6128. As a matter of fact does he do it?—To begin with, he does not examine them at the jamabandi; a great number are examined before; and, by way of simplifying the jamabandi, orders have been issued that all the accounts on which the revenue is assessed should be submitted to a Divisional Officer periodically, every month I think it is, and that he should pass orders on them from time to time; that relieves the pressure at the jamabandi.

6129. Still, at the jamabandi, he is supposed to refer to each of these books, is he not?—Yes.

6130. And examine them and consider the condition of each village as it may be inferred from its progress or retrogression, and so on?—Yes.

6131. On the average how many villages would the average Divisional Officer have?—He would have generally speaking two taluks; generally speaking a Divisional Officer has to take the jamabandi of two taluks, and in each taluk there will be an average of, I suppose, 120 villages; it varies from 120 to 150, some more, some less.

6132. About 250 villages?—Yes.

6133. Is it possible for one man to make any proper enquiry into the condition of all those villages?—Yes, I think it is; when you speak of one man, of course he has got his office to help him; you do not expect him to check every figure himself.

6134. It is mostly office work?—The actual orders are passed by the jamabandi officer; there will be some arithmetical work.

6135. I rather gathered that the 250 villages would be too many, but even that is sometimes exceeded?—The Collector very often has to do three taluks, and in some instances the Divisional Officer has to do three taluks.

6136. Then he makes the jamabandi report to the Collector?—Yes.

6137. What does the Collector do with it?—He makes a consolidated jamabandi report for the district, which comes to the Board of Revenue, and then the jamabandi report for the whole Presidency is consolidated there and goes to Government.

6138. I take it that that report is practically the only means by which the higher authorities know of the state of the villages and the general state of the district?—Oh no.

6139. How else do they know?—You use the words "state of the villages and state of the district"; we have our weekly season report.

6140. I ought to have said, that and other reports?—That and other reports, yes. You want to know whether the higher authorities, that is to say the Board, perhaps, and the Government, are dependent solely on these reports for their knowledge of the districts; certainly not; the members of the Board travel through the districts.

6141. Do you inspect the offices?—Yes, sometimes.

6142. Instead of making this separate jama-bandi report to the Collector to be forwarded to the higher authorities, would it not be sufficient if the notes made at the jama-bandi were deposited in the taluk office, and if any superior officer coming round was able to refer to them?—You mean for the purpose of learning the economic condition of the villages?

6143. Yes.—But then the jama-bandi serves another, and perhaps a much more important, purpose. It gives the Government information as to the way in which the revenue for the year has been arrived at.

6144. But that would not require a voluminous report?—The actual report is not very voluminous; it has been cut down. What is voluminous is the statistics.

6145. Do those accompany the report?—Yes.

6146. Is that necessary?—I should imagine so, because the Government must have information as to how the revenue has been arrived at; I am speaking of the pages and pages of figures that you objected to.

6147. You think that is necessary?—Yes, I think so; I do not see how Government could possibly appreciate how the work was done without those statements.

6148. Would not short abstracts be sufficient?—What they get are abstracts of the accounts in the taluks; the actual village and taluk accounts are not published in the reports which go up to Government or in the reports made and published by Government; it is all an abstract.

6149. But the Divisional Officer has to prepare them and send them in, and they are for the purpose not of ascertaining how the man has done his work, but for the purpose of setting out the sources of revenue?—Yes.

6150. Is that all that is aimed at?—You also judge of the way a man has done his work by the way the jama-bandi has been done.

6151. But if the point is to ascertain how the Divisional Officer has done the jama-bandi, whether he has made a complete examination and whether the tahsildars and Deputy Collectors have come out of it well or not, is it worth while putting all that into a report to Government; would it not be sufficient to state all these details, and send it to the tahsildar for information and guidance, and allow it to remain in the tahsildar's office for inspection by any superior officer who goes round; would that not be quite sufficient?—I should hardly say so; I think Government would like to know how the work was being done in the taluk.

6152. But cannot they trust the superior officers to see that the work is well done; why should Government worry itself about the way in which the Divisional Officer does his work?—It seems very important that Government should know.

6153. You do not think it would be sufficient to trust to the superior officers, the Collector and the Board of Revenue, to see that the officer does his detail work properly?—No; I think Government ought to have knowledge on that subject.

6154. It causes a great deal of extra paper work?—Not very much; there is a great deal of extra work in the matter of compiling the statistics.

6155. As to the Court of Wards; is that under your department?—Not now; at least, I am only one out of four; but it was very specially under me for two or three years.

6156. Do you not think it has a very deadening effect on the work of a Collector not to be allowed to spend Rs. 5 without sanction?—It would have if that were true, but it is not—not at all.

6157. Can he raise the pay of a servant?—Yes; we have given him very large powers.

6158. Is that a recent change?—No; the delegation was, I think, in 1904.

6159. He has very large powers then?—Yes. It is perfectly true that he cannot spend a pie without sanction, but that really means that it must be in the budget or somewhere else. For all the ordinary expenditure in these estates we have a schedule drawn up of what is called the "ordinary expenditure" required in the estate. When once that has been sanctioned for an estate, the Collector may incur any expenditure he likes in accordance with that schedule. In addition to that, take the case of irrigation works or anything of that sort; he may spend without any sanction at all Rs. 500 on a new work and Rs. 1,000 on repairs; he may give fees in civil or criminal cases up to any extent he likes. It was said yesterday by a Collector that he spent a large portion of his time in writing reports to the Board to get sanction for the filing of suits or defence of suits. As a matter of fact he requires no sanction at all unless there is some "special or important issue" involved. If any "special or important" issue is involved he has to get the sanction of the Court of Wards; otherwise he has a free hand either to file or defend suits.

6160. Then he has practically a good deal more power than he said he had?—Yes, a good deal more.

6161. One question about income tax; does that come under you?—No.

6162. But as a matter of fact there is a great deal of income tax appellate work?—Yes, there is.

6163. Involving often complicated accounts?—Yes.

6164. It is rather a laborious task to wade through them?—Yes.

6165. Does the higher appellate Court, the Board of Revenue, do that?—Once or twice I have taken over particular appeals that have come to the Board, because the member in charge did not wish to dispose of them, he personally knowing something about the matter. My experience is that accounts are very carefully examined, as carefully as time will permit.

6166. Do you think it is worth while that two highly-placed English officers should laboriously wade through accounts of that sort?—No; that is a matter in which I think there might be delegation of power.

6167. I suppose in income tax cases it is very difficult to arrive at the truth?—Very.

6168. Even if you do arrive at an opinion different from that of the lower court you are as likely to be wrong as right, considering the nature of the evidence you have to go upon?—Yes, I should say quite as likely.

6169. Then is it worth while, when a small sum is at stake, to injure the Collector's authority by revising and altering his decision?—No; as I say, I think that is a matter in which the right of appeal might be cut down.

6170. The supervision of the Board of Revenue is by means of touring?—A great deal of touring.

6171. You have got 24 districts in the Madras Presidency?—Yes.

6172. Does the whole of the Board manage to visit every district once a year?—Every district is visited once a year by either one or more members of the Board, some by all members of the Board, some by two, some by three.

6173. On an average?—I should say something like two or three members.

6174. How long do they generally stop in a district?—Three or four days, or a week, sometimes longer.

6175. Do they make it a point to inquire into all the administration?—It varies with the member; the member in charge of the Separate Revenue Department—Salt and Akbari, Customs and Income-tax—makes investigations into the work of the officers in his own department in the district; the member in charge of Forests makes detailed inquiries into the work of that department in the district. My work being principally land records, that is the item to which I should principally address myself.

6176. Do any of you look into the state of education?—Personally I do not, except as I might take a personal interest in it.

6177. But you are not expected to?—No.

6178. The Collector may take absolutely no notice of the course of education in his district, but it would not come to your notice?—No, except in a general sort of way; when we tour we occasionally hear things that have to do, not with our particular department, but with matters of general administration.

6179. Then practically education attracts no attention from touring officers?—Not from members of the Board of Revenue.

6180. Suppose in the headquarters of his district there is a Training College where discipline is a scandal, and the Collector takes no notice of it, is there anyone to pull him up?—There is the educational authority.

6181. It is left entirely to the educational authorities?—I think so; but suppose I was touring in a district, and I heard that there was a great scandal in a school or something of that sort, I should probably bring it to the notice of the Government demi-officially.

6182. That would be a matter for your own personal discretion?—Exactly.

6183. Then the state of discipline for instance in a Training College is left entirely to the Educational Department?—So I believe; it does not come under me.

6184. That is to say, an educational inspector?—Yes, or the Director.

6185. Is it a consistent system that a Collector, a man of mature experience, should not be allowed to remit, say, Rs. 10 to a ruined cultivator, but that the whole trend of education in a countryside should be entrusted entirely to a young man with possibly no experience at all in the country?—I presume it is not; it is rather a difficult question to answer.

6186. The Collector has no power to make direct remissions of his own authority on dry crop assessments?—No.

6188. I was referring to smaller cases?—As a matter of practice we do not give remission in dry crop cases of small extent. I do not mean to say that we should never do it. Suppose a sudden calamity; suppose in some case a river swept over the country and covered a few fields with sand and rendered them uncultivable; we should come in then.

6189. But those cases must occur?—Yes, but they are so extremely few that there is no need to make a rule to meet them. What would probably happen would be that the Collector would tell his subordinate not to collect, and then report the facts.

6190. If cases are extremely few, it is not obvious how it would be dangerous to give the Collector power to deal with them?—If you limit it to such cases I do not think there would be any objection to it.

6191. Say a limit of Rs. 1,000?—I should say there would be no objection to that.

6192. From your knowledge of Orientals you would admit that a boon given at once is enormously enhanced in value; the delay of a month or two robs it of half its grace?—That is so.

6193. Then, in matters connected with District Boards and municipalities and so forth, there is no intermediary between the Collector and Government?—I believe not.

6194. In the case of a riot or any great disaster such as a flood, would it be anybody's duty to go to a district and give the Collector advice and support?—You are speaking of exceptional circumstances. I do not say that it is anybody's duty, but I may quote an instance. In 1896 when I was Collector in the Kistna district, we had an extraordinary flood such as had never occurred before; they could not get at me; it happened that I was in the corner of that district, and I could not get up there in time, there was a member of the Board there, and he took charge pro tem. and issued all necessary orders.

6195. He happened to be there?—Yes. Suppose he had been anywhere within distance he would have come there no doubt; at any rate personally I should have done so.

6196. The personal contact between the Collector and the higher powers is limited to an occasional visit, perhaps once or twice a year, from members of the Revenue Board?—Yes.

6197. All the rest is a paper chain?—There are the Heads of other Departments.

6198. But they would attend only to their own department?—Yes.

6199. Is the practice of demi-official correspondence much in vogue in the Madras Presidency?—I cannot compare it with other Presidencies, but there is a great deal of demi-official correspondence.

6200. (Mr. Dutt.) Does settlement give a great deal of work?—Yes.

6201. The initial settlements are all over; it is only the revision settlements that are taking place now?—Yes.

6202. And they come up after the lapse of a fixed period of years?—Yes.

6203. Is a general proclamation issued that a particular district is going to be re-settled?—Yes.

6204. Is the Settlement Officer a special officer?—Yes.

6205. Are there a number of Settlement Officers always employed by the Madras Government?—There is a Special Settlement Department, which is now gradually being absorbed, and now Civilian Officers are put on special duty.

6206. Would you tell me approximately how many Settlement Officers there are now?—Four.

6207. Is the re-settlement work very heavy; does it involve the re-classification of soils?—No, only in exceptional cases; I will not say never.

6208. Generally, there is no re-classification of soils?—Government has laid down the principle for its own guidance that, generally speaking, there shall be no re-classification.

6209. Has that been published in the Gazette or proclaimed to the people?—I do not know whether it has been published; but it is perfectly well known.

6210. When the Settlement Officer has made his assessment, is that proclaimed to the people first, or is the sanction of the Board of Revenue first obtained?—Do you mean that such and such rates have been fixed?

6211. Yes?—Of course you cannot proclaim to the people that such and such rates have been fixed until the sanction of the Government has been obtained; but the Settlement Officer consults the people as to the rates to be fixed, and the member of the Board of Revenue generally consults them too.

6212. But his decision is not communicated to the people before the Government sanction has been obtained?—No. As a matter of fact you cannot speak of the Settlement Officer's "decision." It is only the Settlement Officer's recommendation.

6213. What opportunities has the Collector to give his opinion on the proposals?—They all come through the Collector to me.

The Hon
Mr. J. N.

The Hon.
Mr. J. N.
Atkinson.

29 Nov., 1907.

6214. So that the Collector has his opportunity of giving his opinion then, when he passes it on?—Yes, and at many other stages in the course of affairs too; the Settlement Officer is always in close communication with the Collector.

6216. There are two officers recommending and the Government gives its final sanction?—Yes.

6217. And then it is proclaimed to the people?—Then a notification is issued.

6218. Suppose some of the cultivators think that they have been hardly dealt with, what remedy have they got after the final notification?—They have remedy by petition; and there have been cases in which the rates have been lowered in consequence of representations made. At any time during the currency of a settlement, that is to say ordinarily speaking 30 years, the rates may be lowered, and it is open to anyone to make a representation to the effect that the rates are too high.

6220. Would you recommend any larger opportunities to the cultivators to put forward their objections before the final sanction of the Government is given?—No, I do not think there is any necessity.

6221. You do not think it is a grievance that the whole thing is done before the people know anything about it?—I do not know about its being a grievance, but I do not think there ought to be a grievance. The raiyats are perfectly well aware of what is going on; the Settlement Officer consults them all the time; he is moving about in the villages and he mixes with them, and as a matter of fact one knows that he does consult them. In the one settlement in which I took a prominent part, I made a point of consulting the raiyats.

6222. But they do not know what recommendations have been actually made by the Settlement Officer?—They do not see his report.

6223. That is what I mean. Do you not think that a better opportunity should be given to the people to bring forward their objections before the Government after they have known the proposals and before the Government has given its final sanction?—I do not think there is the slightest necessity. As a matter of fact they do know what the proposals are. It may be perfectly true that they do not see the Settlement Officer's report, but they know perfectly well what his proposals are.

6224. In what way?—It is known to everybody; it is not confidential.

6225. It is not published?—It is not published, but it is talked about between the Settlement Officer and the raiyats and all sorts of people; it is not confidential in any way, and they are perfectly well aware of it, and, as a matter of fact, they do send in memorials almost without end.

6226. If they are known to the people, would you have any objection to their being formally made known to them, not in an underhand or confidential way, but formally communicated to the people before final sanction is given; would you have any objection to that?—I do not myself think that there would be any great objection; it has been done in some cases.

6227. You said that the accounts kept for assessing the water rates are not very complicated?—No.

6228. They are generally so much per acre?—Yes.

6230. Are different rates imposed for different kinds of crops grown?—The only distinction as regards the crop is whether it is a crop that takes water for the period during which one crop will remain on the ground, or for a period in which two crops will remain; that is to say whether it is ek-fasl or do-fasl.

6231. Suppose a man grew do-fasl in one year and went in for ek-fasl the next year, the rate would be decreased or varied?—Yes.

6232. So that there must be a great deal of variation in the water rates from time to time?—Yes, if it is according to the crop.

6233. Do you recommend that a uniform system of water rate should be levied, irrespective of the kind of crops that the cultivator raises?—No, I would not recommend it.

6234. You would continue the present system?—I do not know which system you mean; there are different systems in force. What I should like to see would be a system of rates varied according to the crop grown.

6235. That would involve an annual inspection of the nature of the crop?—There must be an annual inspection now.

6236. An inspection of the particular crop that is grown?—The inspection is of the area irrigated, and, when you inspect the area irrigated, you must at the same time inspect the crop.

6237. Are appeals or representations with regard to water rates or with regard to the land assessment made directly to the member of the Board of Revenue when on tour?—Not generally speaking, but I have had representations made to me. I am bound to say that what has been generally told me is that the rates have been very moderate, and that there has been no necessity for reference to the Collector.

6238. But generally speaking the practice would be to refer the complaint to the Collector?—It was not a complaint.

6239. Or representation?—Usually when I have been talking to the raiyats about the state of their crops and their economic position, they have told me things tending to show that they are satisfied. I cannot remember ever having had a complaint made to me—nothing that you might call a complaint; I am speaking about an oral representation.

6240. No petitions or even representations are generally submitted to the member of the Board of Revenue when he goes round on tour?—Very seldom.

6241. (Mr. Hichens.) Does revenue settlement include the remission of taxation or the remission of rents?—The actual remission is given by the Collectors; appeals about fixed remissions of land revenue come to the Board in the Land Revenue Department.

6242. To you?—Not to me; water rates come to me.

6243. I see that a certain number of remissions come to you. Is that not purely a land revenue matter, and would not the Land Revenue Department come in in connection with that point?—The Land Revenue Department would not come in there at all. The Land Revenue members would have nothing to say to the things entered in the particular list you have got, unless I choose to ask their opinion.

6244. Does not land revenue mean the rent which Government takes?—Yes, but there is nothing down here about rent or revenue.

6245. "Remissions" here do not apply to the remissions of revenue?—Yes, seasonal remissions of land revenue come to me.

6246. Is that why there was a cross reference from one department to another?—The division of work between the members of the Board does not proceed on any scientific principle—simply on the principle of trying to equalise the work.

6247. There is no definite classification; there is a Separate Revenue Department which deals with certain clearly defined subjects, but there is no clear line of demarcation between the subjects allotted to the other two branches of the Board?—The division of work between the Land Revenue Members and the Settlement Member is to some extent arbitrary.

6248. Do you think that the work admits of a better classification than at present?—I do not think so; there is no inconvenience caused.

6249. Now with regard to the revision of revenue settlements, what are the relations of the provincial Government with the Government of India; how far, if at all, does the Government of India interfere in the matter of revenue settlements?—This is rather going out of my department, but I think the ultimate decision as regards the assessment of land rests with the Secretary of State.

6250. You deal with the Agricultural Department as a whole, not merely with the agricultural revenue of the department?—No, I deal with the Agricultural Department as a whole.

6251. In what respects are you brought into contact with the Government of India in the Agricultural Department?—Only in respect of the Central Agricultural College or institution at Pusa; there is an Inspector-General of Agriculture of the Government of India; he comes down here, and to a certain extent inspects and gives advice.

6252. The Inspector-General acts in a purely advisory capacity so far as you know?—So far as I know; in my experience I have never known him issue any orders.

6253. It is quite competent of course for the Government of India to interfere by means of legislation or otherwise if they wish?—Yes.

6254. In practice would they do it by legislation, or by instruction?—I think they would do it by instruction if they wished to interfere. It is a purely executive Department; I do not see that there would be any need for legislation.

6255. I take it that they would not do that without consulting the Government of Madras first?—I should imagine not.

6256. Do you consider at all that, in so far as the Government of India undertakes non-advisory work—by which I mean the College at Pusa that you alluded to just now—they are merely duplicating the work that is done in other departments?—I do not think so.

6257. Do you mean by that that they are doing work of a higher order?—Not necessarily. With respect to the College here, we have our own College and we wish to train men for agricultural employment and for employment in the Government Agricultural Department and so forth, and to improve the agriculture of this Presidency. It is quite obvious that the agricultural conditions of the Madras Presidency are very different from the conditions in the Punjab or from those of any other province of India. Therefore, it is necessary that we should have our own College and our own establishment, and have our men trained in a way that will suit local conditions.

6258. Is it necessary, from your point of view, that the Government of India should have their College?—I will not say it is necessary, but I think it is beneficial. They can probably carry on their work, for instance in research, to a much better degree than we could down here; and again they could study general principles perhaps that would be adaptable to the whole country and not merely to one province; we here should concern ourselves with principles only applying in Madras.

6259. There are certain definite subjects which it is desirable to study from a wider point of view than you can study them in Madras?—Yes.

6261. Necessary and desirable from the administrative point of view, not from the financial point of view?—Do you mean the control over the creation of an appointment, or the control over the appointing of an individual to that appointment?

6262. Both?—And you eliminate all questions of finance?

6263. I will eliminate all questions of finance for the moment?—If finance be eliminated, I do not see any reason why the Local Government should not be permitted to create appointments and appoint to them.

6264. You see no objection from the point of view of the good government of Madras to giving them a free hand with regard to the appointments that they make, subject of course to any limitations that may be laid down by law?—That is to say, the law on the subject of finance?

6265. Wherever the law prescribes that certain appointments have to be made "subject to the approval of the Government of India," would it be possible to eliminate that phrase and leave it to the Government of Madras?—Irrespective of all questions of finance—so far as I can see there would be no objection.

6266. I exclude finance, because I assumed that you have a fixed share of revenue at the present time?—Yes, we have.

6267. And therefore you have to make both ends meet so to speak?—Yes.

6268. And I assume that the Government of Madras would feel that obligation. Now do you see any objection, for example, to having an absence of uniformity between, let us say, Madras and Burma in regard to the salaries of different appointments?—I do not see why there should be any comparison between them. I do not know what Burmese conditions are at all. If you want to know whether I think that in every province we ought to have exactly the same appointments and exactly the same salaries; I should say not.

6270. But would you say, for example, if the Madras Government found it desirable to appoint an additional Assistant Collector, that they should be allowed to do that without consulting the Government of India at all, on the ground that they were the best judges as to whether an Assistant Collector was required in a district or not?—If you are still eliminating financial considerations, I see no objection to that.

6271. An objection might be raised that in certain cases the pensions of those officers would fall on the Government of India?—Surely that is financial; if you begin to talk about pensions you bring in financial considerations.

6272. Would you suggest that each province should be responsible for its own finance entirely?—That is a very large question, but as far as my knowledge goes I should say that that cannot be done.

6273. I wanted to get at some general principle with regard to the devolution that you would suggest. A good many details have been put before us in regard to appointments and in regard to other matters. Can you in any way justify those under a general principle?—No, I do not think I can. We arranged them first in one order and then in a second; I do not think there was any general principle acted upon.

6274. Suppose it were suggested as a general principle that administrative matters should be confined to the provincial Government and matters of policy confined to the Government of India; would that be too wide?—I should not like to answer that on the spur of the moment; I have not thought over it as a matter of principle.

6275. Or take this as a principle: that any matters which require legislative sanction should be referred to the Government of India and that any others should not?—No, by itself I do not think that that is a satisfactory suggestion.

*The Hon.
Mr. J. N.
Atkinson.*

*The Hon.
Mr. J. N.
Atkinson.*

29 Nov., 1907.

6276. You have nothing to suggest yourself?—No.

6277. (Mr. Meyer.) In regard to the filling up of appointments, has the provincial Government not full discretion, subject to certain high appointments such as Members of Council and Judges of the High Court, which are reserved for His Majesty the King?—Yes, I think they have, so far as I know.

6278. As regards the personal element in connection with filling up appointments, there is no control by the Government of India over the Local Government is there?—No.

6279. As regards the creation of appointments, apart from financial considerations, there are a certain number of Services common to India—the Indian Civil Service for instance?—Yes.

6280. Suppose the Madras Government, say, within their budget allotments were to double the pay of Civilians in the province of Madras; would that not re-act on other provinces?—That is financial.

6281. But the hypothesis put to you by Mr. Hitchens, which I desire to pursue, is this: would it be desirable that, if the Local Government could find the money, it should be able to do what it liked in the matter of creating new appointments. Suppose Madras had a considerable surplus and proposed very largely to increase the pay of its Civilian Officers; would that not re-act on other provinces which perhaps were not in such a fortunate financial position?—I suppose it might.

6282. It might be inconvenient on that ground?—It might.

6283. And suppose they were largely to increase the number of European Civilians, would that not to a certain extent raise a political question?—Quite so, but may I suggest that you are putting very extreme cases.

6284. That is just what I want to get at. You really think that the Local Government should have an absolutely free hand within the limits of its own budget?—I do not think the objection you raise is one that would be likely to occur; it is difficult for me to imagine the case of a provincial Government wishing to double the number of Civil Servants, or to double their pay, or wishing to do any extreme and outrageous thing of that sort.

6285. Are there not certain limits within which some amount of central control is essential?—Yes, there are limits; I suppose the question is whether it is necessary to lay them down, or whether you could not trust to the good sense of the Local Government.

6286. Would you and the Board give Collectors full power and simply trust to their good sense?—I do not think the Collectors are quite on the same footing as a Local Government; they have not the same experience.

6287. Would you have the Board given full powers?—Again, I do not think that the Board is quite on the same footing as the Government.

6288. Then you make a distinction; you say that the Government ought to be trusted but not the Board?—No, I did not say that. The question was put to me whether I thought there was any objection, and I said that, eliminating the financial question, I did not see why such and such a thing could not be done.

6289. But do you think it ought to be done?—That is another question; I do not know that there is any necessity for it.

6291. Suppose it happens that you thought that a certain subject which had been dealt with hitherto by you could be better dealt with by the Commissioners of Land Revenue, and they agreed, could you re-arrange matters yourselves, or would you have to go to Government?—Strictly speaking we should have to go to Government. Suppose there was any change in the distribution of subjects and a member passed orders on it without the authority of Government, I do not think it would be legal.

6292. Apart from the legal restriction, should the members of the Board have full powers to distribute the work between themselves?—I do not think there is any objection.

6293. And the legal restriction, so far as it exists, is an unnecessary restriction from the point of view of practical politics?—Yes.

6294. As regards the distribution of work between the two Land Revenue Members: you have been a Land Revenue Member?—Yes.

6295. Is there not a large amount of work that is shared between the Land Revenue Members?—Not very much now; there are certain subjects which are called two-member subjects.

6296. As regards the bulk of the work, that is done by single members?—Yes.

6297. Would it be possible to reduce the number of two-member subjects and increase the number of one-member subjects?—I do not think so.

6298. Is it your experience that things go more smoothly and quickly in the Settlement Department or in the Land Revenue Department?—I think there is no difference really. The subjects that sometimes cause trouble are the full-Board subjects; those are the most important and probably give most scope for difference of opinion.

6299. You gave a list of full-Board subjects, but may not the Government tell the Board to treat any important subject as a full-Board subject?—Yes.

6300. In your full-Board subjects you have a number of matters relating to the Court of Wards; is that necessary?—As a matter of fact all the routine work is done by one member.

6302. What do you call important matters?—Those that the member in charge himself chooses to send to more than one member; or any of the other members may ask to see any particular papers or class of papers.

6303. For instance, the marriage of a ward?—That is always done by all four.

6304. And the transfer of a ward from his home to "Newington"?—That is always done by the four.

6305. Are there not things that the whole four do that might be relegated to a single member?—I think all the subjects dealt with by the four members are important. You have mentioned those two. As a matter of fact the question of a ward's marriage, and the question of a ward's education, are very important matters; I do not know anything more important.

6306. Do you find that the Government interferes much in the Court of Wards work?—Very little.

6307. Are there any important matters in which you have to obtain the sanction of Government?—We have to obtain the sanction of Government to taking estates under the superintendence of the Court of Wards.

6308. Is that a legal necessity?—Yes.

6309. Do you really think it necessary?—Yes, I think so.

6310. There are a large number of small estates?—I think in every case the sanction of Government has to be obtained to taking an estate over; but in certain of the smaller estates, if we like, we need not recommend to take over, and then the papers need not go to Government at all.

6311. But the estate could not be taken under management without the formal sanction of the Governor in Council?—No.

6312. Do you consider that necessary in the case of petty estates?—I think it might perhaps be relaxed in the case of some small estates below a certain limit of revenue; a limit might be fixed.

6313. Government should only be addressed in the case of the larger estates?—Or, let us say, in the more important, because some are politically important though they may not be large.

6314. You might schedule those cases, and in the others give the Court of Wards a free hand?—Yes.

6315. Going a little further, might not the Collector have a freer hand in the management of the smaller estates within his district? You have said that he has considerable powers, but there are a certain number of matters in which he still has to come up for sanction, are there not?—You mean a freer hand in regard to the administration of estates after they are taken under superintendence of the Court?

6316. Yes?—I think we have given the Collector as full powers as he can manage; I cannot at the moment think of anything further.

6317. Has he any power with regard to establishment?—Yes, he has very large powers.

6318. Then, speaking generally, do you think the Collector has as much power as he can safely have?—Yes. The great trouble that the Collector has is in regard to the accounts. The treasury accounts are so complicated. That was in consequence of the Ganjam treasury frauds.

6319. There were considerable frauds in the Ganjam district in a Court of Wards case?—Yes.

6320. And the result was that you issued orders increasing the accounts and the complexity of the accounts everywhere?—Yes.

6321. Was that necessary?—We did that in consultation with the Accountant-General, and on consideration of all the facts that were discovered.

6322. The Accountant-General would naturally take a rigid view in accounts matters?—Yes.

6323. Suppose there is a failure in a particular case owing to the neglect or fraud of some officer, is it necessary to impose restrictions on everybody else; would it not be sufficient to make an example of that particular officer as a deterrent?—No, I think you must try to prevent such occurrences in the future.

6324. You do not think that very severe punishment—dismissal and so forth—would act as a sufficient deterrent?—No, certainly not.

6325. You have been Revenue Secretary to Government, as well as a member of the Board, and therefore you can look at matters from both sides. Speaking generally, would you say that a good deal of correspondence comes up from the Board to Government which need not come up?—Yes, I should say a great deal.

6326. And in the same way, correspondence comes up from Collectors to the Board?—Yes.

6327. You have made some general proposals as to the delegation of power from yourselves as a Board to Collectors, and from Government to you as a Board?—Yes.

6328. Does that correspondence which you consider superfluous arise out of a multiplicity of petty references, or is it on large questions?—A great deal of it comes from petty references, I think.

6329. I understood you also to say that your proposed delegations were themselves of a petty character individually?—Yes.

6330. But your point is that although each may seem small in itself, collectively they would reduce correspondence considerably?—Yes.

6331. The power of the Board of Revenue in regard to the suspension of collection of arrears is limited to the fashi in which the failure of crop occurred?—Yes.

6332. Is that a sound restriction?—No; I think we might go further; I think the Board might have further power.

6333. Would you give the Board full power in regard to suspensions?—I see no objection to giving them full power.

6334. Has the Board powers in regard to the remission of revenue on dry crops?—No, it has to get the sanction of Government.

6335. Is that necessary?—I should say not.

6336. Should the Board have full discretion in regard to the remission of dry arrears?—Yes.

6337. You have stated that within some modest limits the Collector should have the power to grant dry remissions?—Yes.

6338. Has the Board any power in the matter of wiping off irrecoverable arrears?—No.

6339. Is that good?—No; the Board might have power in that respect.

6340. Full power?—I think so; the Board might write off anything and everything.

6341. These restrictions are mainly due to antiquated law?—Yes.

6342. As regards the Board's Standing Orders, does the Government interfere with them much?—Any proposal for the amendment of the Standing Orders has to be submitted to Government for approval.

6343. Is that necessary, except in matters involving some important new departure in policy?—I do not think it is necessary, because the Standing Orders do not bind the Government in any way.

6344. But they bind the Collector and the people under him?—But if they do not bind the Government, why is it necessary for Government to approve of them?

6345. Still, a man could appeal to Government, conceivably, against the Board's Standing Orders?—You mean against an order carried out in accordance with the Board's Standing Orders?

6346. Suppose you issued a new Standing Order dealing with inams or trees or anything else; any person aggrieved might appeal to Government?—Yes.

6347. I understand you to say that at present you cannot issue a Standing Order without the approval of Government; but if you could issue your Standing Orders independently there would be an appeal to Government by anybody who considered that your Standing Order was oppressive?—Yes, an appeal would lie.

6348. Do you think that that is sufficient control in the hands of Government?—I think so.

6349. Or would you do away with the appeal?—No; you could not do away with the appeal.

6350. You spoke of appeals coming up to you from Collectors in regard to seasonal remissions; do you deal with those yourself, or are they dealt with as a matter of office routine?—No, they come to me myself.

6351. In regard to the matter of accounts; a number of these accounts, in fact you might say all of them, or nearly all of them, come from districts; the Collector submits the district accounts?—The jamabandi accounts.

6352. And others—statistical accounts and so on?—Yes.

6353. It is necessary that they should be tabulated somewhere?—Yes.

6354. And the Board of Revenue office is a convenient place to tabulate them?—Yes.

The Hon.
Mr. J. N.
Atkinson.

29 Nov., 1907.

The Hon.
Mr. J. N.
Atkinson.

29 Nov., 1907.

6355. Therefore, although you may not scrutinise the accounts yourself, your office is performing a useful and necessary function in tabulating them?—Yes.

6356. It was suggested that you should not go beyond eight annas as a unit in charges of revenue. Are there not particular fields in the Ceded Districts in which the assessment is two annas an acre?—Yes.

6357. Suppose a man has two fields of four acres each; what would happen under the eight annas principle; would you charge him eight annas or nothing?—It was not my proposal.

6358. Is it in your opinion a practical thing?—No, I think I said it was not.

6359. Do you consider that the Collectors might have larger powers in the granting of agricultural loans?—Yes.

6360. Their power is restricted now to Rs. 1,000?—I think it is Rs. 500.

6361. How far would you go?—In the proposals I made, I suggested up to Rs. 2,500.

6362. Would you give a like increase to the Divisional Officers and the tahsildars?—I did not make any proposal with regard to them, but of course that would follow.

6363. As regards the Inspector-General of Agriculture, do you consider that you have received useful advice from him in matters affecting the Presidency?—Personally I have had very little experience, but I believe his advice has been useful.

6364. Then as regards the Pusa College that you were speaking of; is not that a College for what you might call post-graduate study?—It was started for a post-graduate course.

6365. That is to say, it does not affect all your local men, but such of them as desire to do so can go on to that course?—Quite so.

6366. I see that one of your full-Board subjects is the appointment of tahsildars and deputy tahsildars?—Yes.

6367. Those appointments are really made by the Collector?—Yes, all we do is to sanction the inclusion of certain names in an approved list; the moment the names are in the list the Collector may appoint anyone he likes from that list.

6368. Then the list is a full-Board subject?—Yes.

6369. I take it that that is in order to get the maximum district experience possible?—Yes.

6370. Are you in favour of the Collector having full power to appoint his own tahsildars?—No, I think it would not be advisable.

6371. As regard the qualifications of the men whom the Collector sends up; how do you judge?—There are certain qualifications that are necessary—the passing of particular examinations for instance; but we judge (the examinations passed) by the general educational qualifications, by the previous service, by such things for instance as linguistic knowledge, and anything that may be within our own knowledge from previous reports.

6372. And in a certain number of cases one or other of the members of the Board would himself have known the district not so long ago?—Very often.

6373. Are you in favour of the personal grading of tahsildars?—Do you mean having one list for the whole Presidency?

6374. At present am I correct in saying that the pay depends on the taluk and that you cannot promote a tahsildar without moving him from the taluk?—That is the general rule, but there are exemptions granted from that rule; it is not a rigid rule now.

6375. That requires the special sanction of the Board of Revenue?—Yes.

6376. Would you be in favour of making it the general rule?—I think not, because some taluks are undoubtedly more difficult than others, and if you have only personal pay then you will be left with your more difficult taluks in the hands of the less competent and less experienced tahsildars; that is one reason.

6377. Is the senior tahsildar always the best tahsildar?—Not always, by any means.

6378. Are not your Deputy Collectors graded personally?—Yes.

6379. Does the same objection not apply there? Is not one Deputy Collector's division heavier than others?—Then he is transferred.

6380. Do you always have the most highly paid Deputy Collector in the heaviest division?—No; but I think the difference between one Deputy Collector and another is less than the difference between one tahsildar and another—I mean the average difference.

6381. Of course it would not be necessary to appoint them rigidly by seniority; a man could be passed over could he not, even under the personal grade system?—Yes.

6382. Would you be in favour of grading the tahsildars on a general provincial list?—No.

6383. You have had some experience of famine?—Yes.

6384. Is it not the fact that the provincial Famine Code cannot be altered without the sanction of the Government of India?—I think it cannot, as far as I remember.

6385. Is this amount of control necessary?—I should say it is not.

6386. You would still however leave the general principles of famine relief in the hands of the Government of India?—Yes, the general principles, that is, to suggest or to prescribe.

6387. But otherwise the details might well be left in the hands of the provincial Government?—Certainly.

6389. As regards the point raised about the Collector and want of personal guidance, is it not the fact that you occasionally summon Collectors to Madras when it is desirable for you to see them?—Yes.

6390. And might not a Collector write and say that it would be advisable for him to come up and consult such and such a member of the Board?—Yes.

6391. As to the appointment of Collectors, do you think that greater care should be exercised?—No, I do not think that there is any need for any alteration in the present system.

6392. You are satisfied that all the Collectors are efficient. Of course, one man is better than another, but would you say speaking generally that every man you have got as Collector is fit to be a Collector?—Yes.

6393. (Chairman.) Are you sure of that?—Yes. It is very difficult to say what exact standard a man has to fill in order to be fit for a Collector, but I would not say that any of the men at present Collectors are unfit to be Collectors.

6394. Are you aware that a certain number of Collectors, more or less recently, have been held to be not altogether fitted to exercise their duties?—I know that one or two have been.

6395. (Mr. Meyer.) Is it not a general argument as regards delegating larger powers to Collectors, that some of them cannot be trusted?—I do not know that I would put it as baldly as that—that they cannot be trusted.

6396. I do not mean morally, but I mean trusted to exercise the power with discretion and ability, for the good of the State, as one might put it?—There are instances in which one would trust one man's discretion more than that of another, but I do not know that there are any Collectors of whom you could say that you would not trust their discretion at all.

6397. Do you say that there is not a single Collector that you would replace if you had a free hand at the present time?—Yes, no one occurs to me; nothing has come to my notice recently which would lead me to suppose that any particular man ought to be turned out.

6398. Would any good purpose be served, or the reverse, by giving Collectors Advisory Councils?—No, I do not think it would serve any good purpose. I think it would be a disaster.

6399. Are you in favour of trying to revive the village panchayat system?—I think that would be a very good thing.

6400. You would have some such system for local matters generally of a petty description?—Yes.

6401. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) You say that if the senior member of the Board carries one member with him on any full-Board subject, that opinion prevails, and no intimation that the other two members differ is given to the Government?—It may be. There is no particular rule upon it except that a member who differs may, if he wishes to do so, have a minute of his dissent recorded.

6402. You say "any member dissenting from the opinion of the majority may claim that the fact should be placed on record, but has no right to claim that a formal minute of dissent should be appended to the resolution as submitted to the Government unless the latter invite one"?—Then perhaps I am wrong; I am speaking only as to the practice. As a matter of practice, on two or three occasions I have known members to dissent, and they have said that they would like their minute of dissent sent up, and it has been done.

6403. Suppose you and another member agreed, and that, therefore, was the decision of the Board, would you add to your report that Mr. So-and-so dissented?—Yes, that is always done; there is always that indication, even if it be not on the general question, but on a mere matter of detail.

6404. Then you say that it is the common practice in the Board that your Secretary disposes of a certain number of things which apparently he can anticipate, and that you see returns from him of the work he has done in that way, either every day or every week or every fortnight. What is the real practice; is there a daily return?—In my department it is weekly.

6405. How many items does that weekly return usually consist of—the routine items disposed of by the Secretary?—About 15 or 20.

6406. Your Secretary is an Indian gentleman on Rs. 1,000 a month?—Yes.

6407. These reports come from Collectors who may be higher officers on perhaps Rs. 2,000 per month?—Yes.

6408. Might it not be taken as a principle that everything the Secretary can dispose of ought never to come to you at all?—As a matter of fact the routine matters on which the Secretary passes resolutions are generally only intermediate references—calls for reports and so on.

6409. He considers that the case is not ready for your orders, and wants more information?—That is it.

6410. Would he ever dispose of anything?—He would never dispose of a complaint or appeal or any subject that would require the exercise of discretionary power.

6411. Not even some small financial sanction?—My sanction is obtained in all cases involving the expenditure of public money.

6412. Would not these weekly returns give you an excellent guide as to whether they were or were not things that ought to have come to you?—Yes.

6413. Where the execution of decrees is transferred from the Civil Courts to the District Collector under section 45 of the Court of Wards Act, the Collector cannot undertake the management of the estate. Cannot a Collector be trusted to execute a decree because he is in charge of the estate?—He has two distinct powers; as Collector of the estate he has to look after the management of the estate; as "Decree Collector," as he used to be called, he has to exercise a judicial function.

6414. Surely the execution of a decree cannot be called a judicial function?—Well, quasi-judicial. He is simply a functionary of the Court; he is a Decree Collector.

6415. There is nothing judicial about it?—He decides for instance what they call the priorities, the date on which the decree should be satisfied.

6416. You have a section in the Court of Wards Act, Section 8, by which you can delegate to the Collector any function of the Court that you like?—Yes.

6417. Have you used that power a great deal?—Yes.

6418. Do you find that a convenient arrangement?—Yes.

6419. Have you ever had any complaints against that section being used—I mean complaints from outside parties?—No; not that I can recall.

6420. If there had been a serious complaint, you could have recalled it?—Yes; there cannot have been a serious complaint.

6421. Do you not think that a similar section would be extremely useful as between the Government of Madras and the Board?—You mean enabling the Government to delegate powers. As a matter of fact I suppose the Government can delegate powers, except in so far as they are prevented by law.

6422. But this section gets you through the law; you have found it a very useful provision in the case of the Court of Wards; you have used it continually and given many powers under it: do you not think it would be a very good power to give to the Government?—I would not give it unless there is necessity for it; I doubt whether there is necessity; I think Government can delegate.

6423. You have sent in a number of schedules to the Local Government for amendment of powers; some of the delegations recommended in those schedules cannot possibly be given without legislation; my question is whether you do not think it would be well to give by legislation that power to the Government?—That is to say, to enable Government in so far as they have not now got powers by law to delegate to the Board or any other authority they like; yes, it would be most useful.

6424. Are you quite satisfied with the table of distribution of work?—Yes, I think so.

6425. For instance, all four members have to agree in the appointment of a deputy tahsildar; only two members are required to consider Acts and Bills, while one member only can dispose of the whole work of the Abkari Department; is that quite a logical distribution?—I think it is all right.

6426. Then, litigation is a two-member subject; that does not go to Government at all?—The sanction of defence of suits does not go to Government.

6427. Is it possible to state in words the principle of division of functions between the Government of Madras and the Board of Revenue?—No, I do not think I could at the moment state any principle.

6428. At any rate it is not a well-known principle; when a subject comes up you could not say, according to your lists, this is evidently a Government subject and this is evidently a Board subject?—No.

6429. All the members of the Board are promoted to the Board from the rank of Collector?—Yes.

*The Hon.
Mr. J. N.
Atkinson.*
29 Nov., 1907.

The Hon.
Mr. J. N.
Atkinson.

29 Nov., 1907.

6430. So that up to that date you are freshly in touch with things such as local sanitation and medical relief, the police, and so on?—Yes.

6431. When you get on to the Board you all specialise?—Yes.

6432. You yourself came on to the Board at about 20 years' service?—Twenty-one or 22 years' service.

6433. Presumably you may get on to the Council at 31 or 32 years as the chance comes; you would not be likely to be there before?—No.

6434. So that for that rather important 11 years you will not have been in touch with every branch of the administration?—No.

6435. Then you go into Council, and you possibly have to deal with all these miscellaneous subjects and pass orders on them while your experience is about 11 years old?—Yes.

6436. Is that a good system?—I should say it may not be an ideal system, but the difficulty is to see anything better to replace it.

6437. The gentlemen who come on to the Board of Revenue are ex hypothesi the most experienced and most able and the best of the Collectors?—Yes.

6438. They come fresh on to the Board, and really, you would say that their experience is infinitely greater than that, for instance, of the Sanitary Commissioner, or the Surgeon-General, or the Inspector-General of Police?—That is to say, their experience is greater in regard to the general condition of the country—yes; I suppose that is so.

6439. Their touch with the people is greater?—Yes.

6440. Just when they are most useful on all subjects, the system cuts them off from dealing with all these other subjects which touch the life of the people of the district?—Yes.

6441. And when they come to deal with them again they are a little out of date?—Perhaps.

6442. We had a witness who said that possibly we got more efficiency out of the departments by having experts and trusting to them, but he said he thought it was worse for the raiyats. I ask you, do not you consider that your own Board system, cutting off the Collectors from these subjects, is also worse for the raiyats?—Than what?

6443. To withdraw these most experienced Collectors from all touch with such things as local self-government implies, sanitation, medical relief, police and so on, and leaving it to those specialists who are ex hypothesi less in touch with the people. Do you not lose a great deal?—I do not know that I would say so.

6444. Is that your deliberate answer?—You mean that it is bad for the country?

6445. I said, bad for the raiyats?—That they should be handed over to the Inspectors-General, or whatever it may be in the Government?

6446. That these gentlemen should be completely withdrawn from all control of these subjects?—No, I do not think so. I think the Collector of the district should have sufficient knowledge and power and authority to look after the interests of the raiyats.

6447. You said that you were entirely against the introduction of Advisory Councils; would you also be against any extension of the functions of District Boards?—You mean, so as to make them advisory. I think myself it is a wrong principle. If you are going to treat these bodies as advisory bodies, I do not think you can expect to get very much valuable advice; the advice that they would give would, I am afraid, be generally biased and partial, and certainly I do not think they would ever give advice that would be considered unpopular in the press. But the great objection I should have is this: the object I take it is in some measure to fit the people for what we might call self-government, and all our efforts during the last 40 years, as far as I can see, have failed.

6448. I put it to you that they have failed because you have withdrawn your most experienced people from the control of those efforts?—I do not consider that that is necessarily the reason.

6449. May it be a contributing cause?—It might have helped, but for one reason or other our efforts have failed.

6450. At present all your District Board work goes straight to Government; the Secretary of the Government and the Members of the Council do not tour to any great extent?—No.

6451. Therefore they lose that living touch which a high class touring officer might supply?—Yes.

6452. Is that not a cause of the failure?—You mean failure of the District Boards and municipalities?

6453. Yes?—I do not think that that has much to say to it; I think the causes are other than those.

6454. You do not think that the proper end at which to begin to increase the local self-government of the country is with these District Boards and municipalities?—No, I would begin lower, I would begin with the panchayats.

6455. But at the lower end?—At the lowest end. I am strongly in favour of beginning with the panchayats.

6456. Do you not think that you require your best experience and your best brains to help it?—In so far as the panchayats are concerned, that is where I would begin. I think the Government interference should be reduced to an absolute minimum; I mean, Government officers should have the least possible to do with it that they can.

6457. You come into contact with two of the Government of India expert advisers, the Inspector-General of Agriculture and the Inspector-General of the Civil Veterinary Department?—Yes.

6458. You say you think the Inspector-General of Agriculture is helpful?—Yes.

6459. You think at present he confines himself to enquiry and research and the dissemination of information and advice to the Government of India and such help to the Local Government as he can give?—Yes; those are all useful functions.

6460. You do not find that he transgresses those?—No, I have not found that in my experience.

6461. You do not find that you get improvements forced on you through his agency by the Government of India?—No—not in my experience.

6462. And therefore when he comes here you are rather glad to see him?—Yes.

6463. And he helps you locally?—Yes.

6464. But I suppose if he was in a position to give you orders or to fashion your development otherwise than by giving advice, you might think that dangerous?—Yes, I think it would be a risky experiment to allow him to issue orders.

6465. (Sir Frederic Lely.) You say that the Collector is entitled to act on his own authority, subject to budget provision, in matters concerning the Court of Wards. What hand has he in making the budget?—He sends up the budget to the Court, and the budget may be altered to a certain extent.

6466. As a matter of fact is it often altered in detail?—Not very much because there is no great scope for alteration in an estate.

6467. Has he power to reappropriate from one major head to another?—I do not think he has; I cannot tell you without reference.

6468. Has he any discretionary grant provided him for any unforeseen expenditure?—He has a balance.

6469. Can he spend any of that balance of his own authority?—Yes; he would have to report the fact.

The Hon.
Mr. J. N.
Atkinson.

29 Nov., 1907.

6470. Suppose he wanted to make a little crop experiment?—In that case I think we should expect him to report beforehand, because it is not urgent.

6471. As to anything not urgent you expect him to get orders before taking action?—Yes; we delegate to him sufficiently large powers, financial and otherwise.

6472. I understand you to say that he cannot spend money without previous sanction by the Board?—No; that is the general rule.

6473. You admit that it is an important principle of administration to encourage zeal and initiative?—Quite so.

6474. Would it be a sound principle to lay down that the Collector should be allowed a very free hand, subject to periodical visitations by the Board to pull him up if he has gone wrong?—We should be obliged to have control over the budget; we must sanction that; and then, as I say, within the budget limits he can spend anything.

6475. But do you give him no discretionary grant, and allow him to reappropriate?—But the general purposes for which he has to spend money are so few. He has a grant for his agricultural work, for a farm, if there is one, for suits, for the maintenance of all the wards, for the expenses of temples, for repairs of irrigation works, for new works and so on.

6476. That is always supposing that he can get the sanction of the Board?—No; he can do all these things on his own initiative.

6477. That is if they are in the budget?—As I have said for new works he may spend up to Rs. 500; for repairs, up to Rs. 1,000.

6478. Even if it is not in the budget?—Yes; that would come out of the reserve if there is any. The budget would not cover individual work; so much would be allotted for what we call maramat, for repairs of tanks; when he has Rs. 10,000 allotted for maramat he can spend Rs. 1,000 on what he likes.

6479. But you say that he cannot reappropriate?—No.

6480. If he has Rs. 10,000 allotted and can spend Rs. 1,000 as he likes, that involves reappropriating?—No; all works in the estate are covered under the heading of maramat.

6481. And within that he can spend any money he likes?—Up to Rs. 1,000.

6482. Without the previous sanction of the Board?—Just so.

6483. But he cannot spend Rs. 5 on a crop experiment?—I do not think he can.

6484. (Chairman.) What I understand you to say is that each member of the Board of Revenue supervises some part of the Collector's work, but there is no officer of Government in whole charge of the whole of the Collector's work?—Yes.

6485. As there is in other provinces, where there are Commissioners over the Collectors?—No, there are no Commissioners in this province.

6486. And you think that, speaking generally, a system of partial supervision over a man's work, such as obtains by the Board of Revenue, is better than a system of whole supervision, such as obtains under a scheme of Commissioners?—I do not know that I said that, because I have no experience of the other system.

6487. And you are satisfied with your own system?—Yes.

6488. Now, you told us of a case of a flood occurring in your district when you happened to be absent from the place, and a member of the Board of Revenue going down and looking after things. In a province where there is a system of Commissioners, would the Commissioner have gone to that particular place as a matter of course?—I do not know.

6489. Probably if the flood occurred in his division, the Commissioner would have been bound to go there?—Yes.

6490. At all events he would have known that the Collector was not there?—I do not know.

6491. Do the salaries of the Board of Revenue attach to individual places or to members?—To individual places.

6493. Therefore, suppose you are doing particular work as Second Member, you may then become First Member doing the same work?—Yes.

6494. Will you also tell me whether under the system in Madras, with no Commissioners, the powers of Collectors are larger than the powers of Collectors in other provinces?—I believe they are; I am not sure.

6495. At all events you will admit that, if they are not, the system requires that they probably should be?—Yes; I think very strongly that a Collector should have very large powers indeed in his district.

6496. So long as that does not affect questions of remissions of dry revenue; you put in that caveat perhaps?—Yes.

6497. Do you know whether there is any section in the Court of Wards Act, or any Act at all, by which Government could delegate much larger powers than they now delegate to Collectors for general administrative purposes?—No, I do not think so. There is no Act giving the power of general delegation.

6498. You have this power under Section 8 of the Court of Wards Act, but you do not act upon it?—Oh yes, we have delegated our powers as far as we possibly could under legal advice.

6499. Would it surprise you to hear that, subject to an annual report, Collectors and District Judges in Bombay manage minor estates with practically full powers and without any other control at all?—I did not know it.

6500. If that is found, as I believe it is found, to work well in Bombay, would it not work well, mutatis mutandis, in Madras?—Yes, I daresay it would.

6501. And might it not relieve you of a great deal of work and correspondence?—It would relieve us of a great deal of work no doubt.

6502. And to that extent therefore it would be distinctly desirable?—I do not know; I mean the question of how you are going to bring up your landed proprietors, men owning 1,500 or 2,000 square miles of country, is rather an important one, and the question is whether you could give the Collectors absolute power for that reason.

6503. Would a system which worked well in Bombay, a priori, work well in Madras?—I do not know what the Bombay conditions are; I suppose the estates are much the same.

6504. I suppose the officials in Madras are no whit inferior to the officials in Bombay?—I meant to say that I did not know whether the estates were the same; if it works well in Bombay, I see no reason why it should not work well in Madras.

6505. Who is responsible that the first intimation of serious possibility of famine reaches the Government?—It is extremely difficult to say when there is the first intimation, because the intimation has been growing from moment to moment; one can hardly say that there is such a thing as a first intimation of famine, because one is aware of it beforehand.

6506. Is there any possibility under the present system of serious famine?—I do not mean distress, but serious famine—escaping the notice of Government?—Certainly not, absolutely none.

6507. In the preparation of the programme of "useful works" who is the officer actually responsible?—The famine relief programme is prepared by the Collector in consultation with the Public Works Officers and the Local Fund Board

*The Hon.
Mr. J. N.
Atkinson.*

29 Nov., 1907.

Engineers and the municipalities. The programmes prepared by the Collectors are sent up to the Board of Revenue.

6508. Can the Board of Revenue sanction them?—The Board approves the list, and passes on a copy of the resolution to Government, and a copy goes, I think, to the Government of India.

6509. What interval of time elapses between the despatch by the Collector of this programme and its return to him sanctioned?—Perhaps a month, or it might be two months, according to the state of work in the office.

6510. Does the state of work in the office prevent the consideration of measures which from their seriousness must be very urgent?—Certainly not.

6511. The immediate consideration?—No.

6512. You said just now that they might take a month or two months according to the state of work in the office?—Quite so.

6513. If that is so it is clear that the interval of a month before the Collector gets sanction to start his work may be very serious?—No; the famine relief programme has nothing to do with the starting of works.

6514. Nothing at all?—Nothing whatever.

6515. Can the Collector start works on his own responsibility?—Only in cases of great emergency.

6516. Then the famine relief programme has something to do with it?—No; the famine relief programme is what is sent in every year, whether there is famine or not; it is just to be ready prepared. The moment there is famine the Collector starts the works.

6517. Are there not minor and major works?—“Public works” and “village works” I think are the terms.

6518. We may be at cross purposes. My question is this: when famine becomes urgent, who is responsible for starting the works in time?—The Collector.

6519. Has he full sanction to start those works?—Yes. Of course, he ought to have works sanctioned beforehand, and our system is that, unless there has been grave dereliction of duty somewhere, he must have a complete programme ready, so that he would be able to get to work within five miles of any village at any time.

6520. There is a standing programme of famine works?—Yes.

6521. How long would it occupy to get sanction to start those works?—No time at all.

6523. Has the Collector power to start test works on his own account?—No, only in emergency.

6524. He represents to the Government that emergency has arisen; how long is it between the time he represents that emergency has arisen and the time when he gets sanction to start his test works?—It would be practically no time; he would get a reply by telegram.

6525. Then in the case of famine he has a free hand in the suspension of revenue demands and the distribution of loans and so forth?—In the postponement of kists; that is to say, he would postpone all collections, and he would then report the matter; then the Board of Revenue can suspend collection for a whole year; if it is necessary to suspend for more than a year, the sanction of the Government is obtained.

6526. Then from your point of view there is complete freedom in case of emergency?—Yes.

6528. When you have famine do you appoint what are called famine officers, just as when you have plague you appoint plague officers?—Yes.

6529. It is simply the Collector doing double work?—No, the famine officers work under the Collector.

6530. Are there special officers brought into the province for the purpose when famine comes?—Yes.

6531. Where are they got from?—Anywhere they can; it depends on the extent of the famine; in 1877 Civilians and Military Officers and everybody they could indent on were brought in from other provinces.

6532. That is to say, other places were denuded of officers in order to get over the difficulty in a particular province?—Yes.

6533. And the same thing occurs in the case of plague?—Yes; the same thing of course would not occur now, because we have a larger staff and are better prepared.

6534. Who sets the Famine Code in operation?—The Famine Code is always in operation; I mean, there are provisions in the Famine Code which apply to the condition of affairs now, in the very best season.

6535. You have no suggestions of any sort or kind to make as to excessive interference during famine; no unnecessary reports are asked for from you?—No, none whatever.

6536. You have to send a weekly telegraphic report?—Yes.

6537. And a monthly report?—Do you mean during famine?

6538. During famine?—There are many more than that; we send weekly telegraphic reports always and a monthly written report.

6539. Does the monthly report cause you unnecessary correspondence?—No. Of course I am going back to my previous experience; we have had no experience of famine in the last few years; but according to my former experience the reports did not cause unnecessary correspondence.

6540. They could not be summarised in a more lengthy telegraphic report?—I think not; I think that everything that was in the reports was necessary.

6541. Not more than was necessary?—No, I do not think so.

(The witness withdrew.)

The Hon. Mr. C. J. WEIR, I.C.S., was called and examined.

*The Hon. Mr.
C. J. Weir.*

29 Nov., 1907.

6542. (Chairman.) You are a member of the Board of Revenue?—Yes, since about six years. Before that, I was Secretary to the Government in the Local and Municipal Department and in the Educational Department.

6543. With regard to the Court of Wards we heard some evidence from the previous witness, and I believe you heard his evidence. Have you anything to say to supplement it?—I think not.

6544. Upon that matter Mr. Atkinson is more fully informed than yourself?—Yes; he has had more direct charge. I have only been for a short time in charge of what we call the routine work of the Court of Wards; I have seen a great deal of the work on more important subjects.

6545. A Collector told us the other day that he spent an appreciable time, which he put at an hour and a quarter a week, in sending up cases which were under Rs. 5 to the Court of Wards, and Mr. Atkinson told us this morning that it was quite unnecessary that he should have done that, and that the Collector had full power to dispose of those cases?—I think that is so, unless some question of principle was involved.

6546. Would there be nobody in your department to bring to the attention of the Collector cases which he had authority to dispose of himself and which he needlessly referred to the Court of Wards?—Certainly; I should think as a matter of course, as soon as the reference came in, it would be pointed out to him.

6547. Ought that not to be brought to his very serious attention?—Yes.

6548. We were told that the members of the Board of Revenue, including yourself, are constantly on tour?—Frequently—I will not say constantly.

6549. How long do you spend on tour?—I should say about three months in the year on the average probably, or more.

6550. Do you think that the fact that you have been for some time separated from active administrative work would lessen your knowledge of the vernacular?—Well, yes, you get a little rusty as years go on.

6551. You are in charge of the Forest Department?—Yes.

6552. When you are touring in this way are you then able to speak directly yourself to the people in the places through which you pass?—Yes, I find no difficulty in speaking either Tamil or Telugu.

6553. You have not got to employ an interpreter?—No, I can get on pretty well; if there is any complicated difficult question I might want an interpreter.

6554. Particularly with regard to your duties as supervisor of all forest administration, is it not exceedingly important that a gentleman in your position should know the language?—Certainly, he should keep up his knowledge of the language. We have got four or five languages in the Presidency; you can hardly be master of them all.

6555. Might that not point perhaps to the undesirability of putting the forest administration under the Board of Revenue, as opposed to a system which would allocate the supervision of it to a Commissioner living in and acquainted with the language of a given district?—It would enormously increase the expense I am afraid.

6556. I am not referring to the expense?—Unless you divided the Presidency up exceedingly small you would still have different languages spoken in many of the Commissioners' charges.

6557. Is the Presidency of Bombay divided up into exceedingly small places?—No, I do not know that it is; I mean, you would have to divide the charge of the Commissioners into very small charges.

6558. Are they so divided in Bombay?—I believe not.

6559. Therefore, there would not be any necessity to divide them into small charges under a system of Commissioners here?—But you would have the same difficulty about languages because in almost every Commissioner's charge you would have two or perhaps more languages.

6560. You would not have the four languages?—No, you would not have the four.

6561. From this particular aspect probably a system of Commissioners might be more advantageous than the system of the Board of Revenue?—I do not see how you could have Commissioners, or divisions in which the same language was spoken throughout.

6562. There would be less difficulty at all events about the language?—There might not be; you could not have a Commissioner for the Tamil country and a Commissioner for the Telugu country.

6563. You tell us that there is a difficulty in that there are four languages spoken in the Madras Presidency?—There are five really.

6564. Under a system of Commissioners' divisions there would not be the same difficulty of having the five languages in one division?—Under any one individual charge, no; you would have, I admit, fewer languages spoken.

6565. Do many papers come to you from the forest administration under your charge?—Yes, it is nearly half my work, not quite.

6566. Do you find that there is any difficulty existing between the Collectors and the forest officers and Conservators?—No, I do not think so. Recently we have revised the Forest Code and rather altered the relations between the Collectors and the Conservators. I do not think there has been much friction. Heretofore, the Conservator has been more or less an advising officer; the Collector is supposed to be the head of the forest matters in his district.

6567. Are there changes proposed to be made in that matter?—In some things we propose to give the Conservator more direct authority over the Collector, on what I may call the technical part of the subject, and leave the Collector direct responsibility for the rest.

6568. Will those changes tend to lessen correspondence and delay?—Yes, I think so.

6569. Have you delegated any new powers to the Collector under this Code?—The Conservators may delegate some of their powers to the senior Deputy Conservator under the proposals.

6570. Have you yourself, as the member of the Board of Revenue in charge of forest matters, handed over any of your powers either to the Conservator or to the Collector?—The new Code provides for enlarging the powers of Conservators in some respects. I think a Government order has just been passed; there is nothing very important.

6571. When you talk of enlarging powers, do you mean the creation of new powers or the delegation of old powers?—They are powers taken from the Board mostly—powers of sanctioning expenditure and the like.

6572. Do you have to pass many appeals on from yourself up to Government?—Yes, a good many; you mean in forest matters?

6573. In either forest or revenue matters?—Yes.

6574. Does that take up much of your time?—No, I do not think it takes a great deal if the case has been carefully considered when it first came up. It takes up the time of the people in the office; I do not know that it takes the individual member very much time, because he sends on the case with a brief report.

6575. Does he settle many of these cases which come to him?—When it comes originally on appeal you have to go carefully into the matter.

6576. What percentage of the cases which reach you do you settle yourself?—I must settle all appeals.

6577. What proportion of the cases which reach you on appeal are ultimately settled by yourself, and how many ultimately go on to somebody else above you?—It depends altogether on the nature of the appeal. One class of appeal that I get an enormous number of is from village officers.

6578. Administrative cases?—Yes, and there are also suits.

6579. Do many of these people appeal from your decision?—They cannot appeal; no appeal lies to Government in those particular matters; under the Act the Board's decision is final.

6580. Could you delegate some of these powers advantageously to the Collector?—Yes, I think it might be simplified further; it is all laid down by the Act at present; I think some of those appeals from the village officers might be advantageously left to the Collector without appeal to the Board.

The Hon. Mr.
C. J. Weir.

29 Nov., 1907.

6581. Could you give us any idea of what proportion might be left?—Numerically it would be difficult to say.

6583. You say "The Collector accordingly controls the felling, extraction, removal and disposal of forest produce, and generally all matters affecting the privileges and convenience of the public. The Collector or the Conservator can refer to the Board of Revenue for decision any matter in which either authority thinks that the orders issued by the other are contrary to the public interests." Suppose the Collector writes to the Conservator and says "I don't like this, this is not right"; the Conservator can appeal to the Board?—Yes.

6584. Meantime, pending the Board's decision, does he have to carry out the Collector's decision?—Yes; the Collector would prevail in his district. As a matter of fact he would probably wait; I do not think the Collector would insist on his order being carried out if he knew that an appeal had been made to the Board.

6585. In the meanwhile the people have to wait for what the Collector thinks right; that is the effect of it?—Yes.

6586. One of the witnesses told us that the Accountant-General's audit was extremely detailed; he said that on the standard audit form there are 203 items of objection any one of which he might transgress at any moment. Is that detail necessary?—That timber audit is a very technical matter; I do not feel competent to speak upon it with any great authority; I know we tried to simplify it; it is very difficult; you have to take into account tryage and shrinkage and all sorts of things.

6587. Is the Accountant-General an expert in these matters?—No; our Committee sat with the Accountant-General the other day and simplified the accounts as far as possible.

6588. You have done what you could?—Yes.

6589. Is your tour very largely determined by the forest area in the Presidency?—I travel also as Land Revenue Member.

6590. The districts which have forests are 87,054 square miles?—They are more than that, I think; those figures are not of the total area of the district; that is only Government lands.

6591. It is "excluding zemindari and inam lands" ?—Yes, which of course are very large.

6592. That would raise the figure how much—by 20,000 square miles?—More than that; I think in Vizagapatam the "district forest area" is put down as 1,327, but the area of the district is about 20,000 square miles.

6593. There is not forest in every district in the Presidency?—Yes; we reserve forest in every district.

6594. So that your forest duty takes you into every district?—Yes.

6595. Are both the Revenue Members ever away from Madras at the same time?—We are not supposed to be; when one is out the other is supposed to remain at headquarters; occasionally it has happened that we have both been away.

6596. That is the theory, but there are exceptions?—Very seldom; once in my experience we both had to go out at the same time.

6597. When one of you is out what becomes of your two-member cases?—One of us does them.

6598. They automatically become one-member cases?—Yes; it is sent to the other member after disposal for the information of that member if it is urgent.

6599. And if it is not urgent?—It will go in circulation to him.

6600. Can you give us any principle of division of the work between the Government and the Board, or is convenience the chief thing; suppose you were trying to set forth the functions of Government and the functions of the Board; is there any line of division of principle?—No, I do not think so. The Government has delegated certain powers to the Board rather as the result of experience.

6601. It has grown, in fact?—It has grown. The functions of the Board of Revenue are laid down in an old Regulation of 1802.

6602. Have they since remained practically the same?—Some of it has become obsolete.

6603. What is the latest regulation?—There was an Act regulating the work of the Board of Revenue in, I think, 1894, but that merely introduced the portfolio system into the Board, or legalised the portfolio system which under the old Regulations was not legal.

6604. You have something to do apparently with archaeology?—Yes.

6605. Do you ever come into contact with the Director-General of Archaeology?—No.

6606. (Mr. Meyer.) You speak of the functions of the Board having been laid down by a Regulation of 1802; were they laid down then in very general terms?—Yes, very general.

6607. Practically revenue work was to go to the Board of Revenue?—Yes, and we were given the fullest control over Collectors and all their duties, and we are responsible for making proposals for the improvement of revenues and checking waste on the part of Collectors, and things of that sort.

6608. But the actual limitations on your functions now—the matters that you cannot deal with independently, but must send up to Government—have been the result of departmental orders very largely?—I think that is so.

6609. And in some cases of statutory control forbidding you to suspend demands beyond the fashi?—That is according to the Regulations too.

6610. And you cannot write off irrecoverable arrears?—No.

6611. But in the bulk of cases the control is not statutory but executive?—Yes.

6612. Have you made any specific proposals for the delegation of powers to yourself?—Yes, as to minor matters.

6613. Are there any really important matters in which you think the powers of the Board might be increased?—No, I do not think there are any really important; we have made no recommendation of any importance.

6614. Matters like the suspension of revenue are not within your province?—I think dry remissions is a full Board subject.

6615. We got it from Mr. Atkinson that the Board should have full power as to dry remissions; do you hold with that?—I do not think there is any harm in letting it go up to Government.

6616. Is there any good in it?—Well, it is a matter that does not occur often; it is a matter that affects a large area of country, and I think Government ought to have a voice in the matter; it might have a serious effect on the finances, and Government is responsible for these.

6617. We also got it from Mr. Atkinson that in his opinion a Collector might have power with regard to dry remissions within certain modest limits; do you hold with that?—Yes, if it is quite modest; not such as would have a serious effect on the finances of the district or of the Presidency.

6618. The Collector would have some powers, and then it must go to Government; you would give no independent powers to the Board?—I would not mind giving powers to the Board up to a certain amount, a higher amount than in the case of Collectors. We were always told that dry remissions in this Presidency are only to be given in the case of a general widespread failure of crops.

6619. And you think when they occur on a wide scale it ought to go to Government?—Yes.

6620. As regards Government control over the Board's Standing Orders, could that be relaxed?—I think it is a very good thing that Government should control the alteration of the Board's Standing Orders, as they are so very important; the whole of our revenue administration is based upon them, and it is important that Government should have a voice in the matter.

6621. Is the number of full-Board subjects unnecessarily large, and could they be reduced at all?—No.

6622. You have had experience of other departments of the Board, in which you were sole member?—Yes.

6623. Comparing those with the Land Revenue Department, in which there are two members, do you find that there is any delay of work consequent upon two members having to be consulted and possibly differing?—Yes, undoubtedly there is some delay.

6624. Your two members differ every now and then, and then a third member has to be called in to arbitrate?—Yes.

6625. Would it not be desirable therefore, as far as possible, to split up the Land Revenue two-member subjects into single-member subjects?—Yes; but I think two opinions are better than one in some subjects. Take such important things for instance as Acts and Bills; as a matter of practice, that is nearly always made a full-Board subject.

6626. I will not take you through the list; I am content with your general opinion that there are some subjects on the land revenue side that ought to be two-member subjects and a variety of others that might be made single-member subjects?—I think so.

6627. Do you think that members should be allowed to distribute their own work without reference to Government?—Yes; I do not think the reference necessary; the Government accepts, so far as I know, whatever distribution we propose.

6628. Have you any important matters in which you desire to give larger powers to Collectors?—I have handed in a list of those matters in which we wish to delegate powers to Collectors; I do not think that I have any in which important questions of principle are involved.

6629. Collectively will they save a lot of correspondence?—I think they will.

6630. You spoke of the village officer. The village officer is ordinarily dismissed by the Divisional Officer?—Yes.

6631. Then there is a second appeal on to the Board?—In the case of a karnam and village headman, yes.

6632. In the case of any punishment short of dismissal, is there any such appeal?—No.

6633. About ten years ago there was a curtailment of the right of appeal to the Board on other matters such as darkhast?—Yes; there is no second appeal in darkhast now.

6634. Has there been any tendency on the part of the Board of Revenue to revive that right of appeal by calling up cases for revision?—I think there was up to two years ago; since then it has been checked; we thought that in cases where there had been fraud, and so on, we should interfere.

6635. But now you say the Board does not interfere?—Except in what we consider to be clear cases of fraudulent conduct on the part of either the village officers or the parties to the darkhast; we do not interfere except where there is something so fraudulent as would enable us to upset the contract in a court of law.

6636. We were told by the previous witness that, in his opinion, all the Collectors were quite satisfactory; that, though some were more efficient than others, every Collector was fit to be a Collector; is that your opinion?—Well, hardly.

6637. You think there are some Collectors who are not really fit for their posts?—I would rather see better men in the posts.

6638. Are you in favour of any system by which such men should be eliminated—should not be allowed to become Collectors?—Yes, I am.

6639. There are a good many transfers?—Not nearly so many as there used to be some years ago; they are minimised now in the Presidency.

6640. When a Collector goes on leave other than privilege leave, is the man in the district put in, or is some man brought in from outside if he happens to be senior?—The man from outside generally, if it were anything more than privilege leave.

6641. That is to say anything over three months?—Yes.

6642. Would you be in favour of making the acting appointment more largely within the district, provided there was a Divisional Officer in the district who was considered capable of running the district for a few months?—It would be hard to do so without injustice, perhaps, to senior men in other places.

6643. But if such a system prevailed, in the course of a man's service would not things equalise themselves; would he not have gained at one time and lost at another?—He might, but he also might not; he might be always unlucky.

6644. If it were possible to avoid undue injury to the interests of Civilians, it would be better to make the appointments more local?—Yes, assuming that you have competent men.

6645. Are you in favour of the personal grading of tahsildars?—Yes, within the district.

6646. That their grading should be determined by personal seniority, and that they should not be transferred from one taluk to another?—Yes, I am quite in favour of that.

6647. Are you in favour of putting them on a general provincial list?—No, I think that would be a great mistake; I think it would weaken the authority of the Collector.

6648. You have spoken about forest work. Is not the real head of the forest administration in the district, as far as administrative work is concerned, the Collector?—Yes.

6649. You, as the Head of the Department, are rather a supervising and controlling officer?—Yes.

6650. Is unity needed in regard to matters of forest policy for the province?—Yes.

6651. Consequently, even if we had a system of territorial Commissioners, in your opinion would it be desirable to have a central forest authority above them?—I think it would.

6652. The Forest Act contains a section that requires the sanction of the Local Government and of the Government of India to the disafforestation of any forest area, however small?—Yes.

6653. Do you consider that necessary?—I think it is a good thing to make disafforestation as difficult as possible; there are always clamours as to the different forests.

6654. Therefore it is desirable to keep the reference to the Government of India?—Quite so; I think it ought to be retained. We reserve our forests with great deliberation, after years of consideration, and I do not think it ought to be lightly undone.

6655. But in many cases is it not some petty adjustment of boundary, a matter of a few acres?—In matters of that sort the reference to the Government of India might be waived.

6656. You would alter the law as to that?—Yes, we might leave the Local Government to deal with small areas.

6657. The law always requires a double notification by Government; you must have a preliminary notification and then, when all the claims have been examined, a final notification?—Yes.

6658. Do you think the sanction of the Government is required at both stages?—Perhaps it is.

6659. Might it not suffice to let the Board of Revenue issue the preliminary notification, and

The Hon. Mr.
C. J. Weir.

*The Hon. Mr.
C. J. Weir.*

29 Nov., 1907.

then let the matter go to Government after all local claims have been threshed out?—Government might then think it was a mistake altogether—that the original area proposed was wrong.

6660. But nothing could be done until Government had finally sanctioned?—But in the meanwhile all the work of settlement would have been in vain, and the trouble thrown away.

6661. Even as it is now, it might possibly happen that Government had issued a preliminary notice for settlement, and then, on actual settlement it was found that part of the area was not required?—Yes, they have done so within the last few months.

6662. You had some experience as Local and Municipal Secretary?—Yes, I was there for a year and a half.

6663. Is the control the Government exercises over District Boards and municipalities very minute?—Yes, I think it is.

6664. All their budgets have to go up to Government?—Yes.

6665. They have to get the sanction of the Government for a variety of administrative matters?—Yes.

6666. Is all that central control necessary?—I think they might be given larger powers with advantage.

6667. You think that both District Boards and municipalities might be given larger powers?—Yes.

6669. And it would be, you think, of advantage to the administration?—It might; the member tours about more; he would have more chance of seeing the people.

6671. Would no re-adjustment of work as between the present members allow a member of the Board of Revenue to take up District Board work?—I am afraid it would overwhelm him.

6672. If the Board in other matters got larger powers given to it, and in turn delegated larger powers to Collectors, would there not be an appreciable relief in that way?—Yes.

6673. You think that the existing members of the Board could not do it; would you be prepared to make an additional member of the Board for the purpose of dealing with local and municipal work?—If they have to look after municipalities and District Boards, I think you would want an extra member to do it.

6674. Would it be possible to allow Collectors to exercise control over municipalities, or at any rate over the smaller municipalities?—They do so now; they can interfere now.

6675. But in ordinary matters in which the municipality has to get outside sanction, the Collector is simply a channel; he can make his remarks, but the actual decision is that of the Government?—Yes.

6677. It has been suggested by several witnesses that things would go better if the Executive Engineer in each district was placed in the same relation to the Collector as that in which the district forest officer and the District Superintendent of Police stand; that is to say, he should be the Collector's assistant in all matters affecting the people, and independent in purely technical matters; does that commend itself to you?—Yes. I think it is desirable, especially in such matters as irrigation.

6678. (Mr. Hichens.) Are these full-Board matters settled by correspondence or by a meeting?—We sometimes meet, but rarely. Generally these things are circulated from one member to the other; it begins with the junior member and goes up finally to the senior member.

6679. You have no stated times at which you meet?—No, we have not. I do not think we have full-Board meetings more than about two or three times in the year generally.

6680. Then the advantage of the Board of Revenue could hardly be said to be that it is a deliberative assembly?—Not as regards full-Board meetings, but we very often consult each other when one member has local experience of the district concerned. That I think is of great value.

6681. Should the full-Board meetings be increased in number?—No; I have not found them very useful.

6682. The forest revenue consists of fees for cutting timber and for grazing rights and so forth?—Yes.

6683. Is there a schedule of the maximum and minimum fees that can be charged?—Yes; what we call seignorage rates are laid down.

6684. Who sanctions that schedule?—The Government sanctions it for each district.

6685. There is no general maximum and minimum tariff laid down by the Government?—I forget whether there was originally, but we have had seignorage rates for the district all laid down for several years.

6686. It would not be possible for the Collector to cut down the seignorage rates by half without consulting anybody?—He can lower grazing rates in his district; the maximum rates he is not allowed to increase, but he is allowed to go below the minimum.

6687. And it would be equally possible for the Board of Revenue to reduce the schedule without consulting the Government?—Yes.

6688. What roughly is the forest revenue per annum?—The forest revenue was just about 36 lakhs last year; the surplus was 8 lakhs odd.

6689. So that it would be in your power to affect that very materially?—Yes.

6690. Could you tell me whether the Government of India are ever consulted with regard to the schedule of forest rates?—No, they never interfere.

6691. (Mr. Dutt.) Is it necessary to obtain the sanction of the Indian Government to enclosing any land as a reserved forest?—No; sanction is required to disafforest, not to make a reserve.

6692. You would not entrust that power to the provincial Government even for a small area?—I have said that for rectifying a boundary, or things like that, I think power might be entrusted to them.

6693. Would you place any particular limit as regards area, or as regards value, under which the Government of Madras would have the power to disafforest without reference to the Government of India?—Well, I would say for the purpose of rectifying a boundary or rectifying some mistake that had been made.

6694. Would you place any particular limit as regards area, or as regards value?—Yes.

6695. I suppose there are fixed rules, for general guidance, as to which areas should be reserved forests and which not?—Yes. For instance, we always lay it down that a reserved forest shall not be within a certain distance of a village; of course trouble is given to the people by cattle trespassing. We have also general rules laid down to find out how much grazing lands is left outside the reserve, so that a liberal margin may be left. All that is considered before the proposal is sanctioned.

6696. Do the rules require that the forest must be a real forest in order to be reserved; are ordinary waste lands allowed to be included in a reserved forest?—There is nothing to prevent it.

6697. As a matter of fact do the reserved forests generally consist of real forest?—Except for climatic reasons we should not propose to reserve anything unless we knew that it would give a good supply of timber for the people; our aim is to get a good supply of valuable fuel for the people.

6698. I understood you to say that the Board's decision is final in regard to most of the appeals from the village officers?—Yes.

6699. And in other revenue matters also there is a limitation to the right of appeals and appellants can go no higher?—That is in what we call our darkhast cases—applications for waste land; by executive orders there is no second appeal.

6700. Is there a similar rule in regard to most of the revenue matters that come up before the Board, or is there an unlimited right of appeal?—On ordinary revenue subjects, say, disputes about irrigation and things like that, there is no limit.

6701. Would you recommend any limit to be placed on appeals upon those subjects?—I think it might with advantage be laid down that an appeal should not lie beyond the Board if the Board has affirmed the decision of the District Officer.

6702. In regard to certain subjects, or in regard to all subjects that come up to the Board?—I think it might be laid down on all these general subjects.

6703. In the list of subjects assigned to you, under heading 5, you have "Remissions, (a) Season, (b) Fixed." What is the nature of those remissions?—They are very rare indeed.

6704. In those cases would you delegate the power from the Board to the Collector?—They are very rare things indeed; I do not exactly know what they would embrace.

6705. If they are petty matters would it not relieve the Board of a lot of work if the Collectors were empowered to deal with them and order remissions in those cases?—Yes, I have said that I think that might be so.

6706. As regards tahsildars would you require any sort of educational qualification from them?—Yes, I would. Most of our men now are graduates; I do not see why we should not lay that down for the future.

6707. It would improve the service if it were made a general rule that only graduates should be appointed tahsildars?—I would not introduce it at once, because it might prejudice men already in the service, but I think ten years hence there might be a rule like that.

6708. You said that you saw no objection to the District Boards and municipalities being placed under the Board of Revenue except that it would be necessary then to appoint another member on account of the increase of work?—Yes, I am afraid it would, if they were given large powers of control.

6709. In that case would it be necessary to have a Secretary for that department?—Yes, or it might be run by an Under-Secretary.

6710. If you had a highly paid officer in the Board to deal with those matters would not a Secretary be redundant?—Of course the Local and Municipal Secretary has other work to do; he is also Secretary in the Educational Department and in the Legislative Department.

6711. Would it lead to some sort of reduction in the Secretariat if a new member of the Board were appointed?—Yes, it might; you might have an Assistant Secretary.

6712. When you go on tour how long do you stay in a district?—It depends; sometimes my tours are rather lengthy, because I have to go into forests and remote places where I move about with considerable difficulty in a difficult country.

6713. How long would you remain at headquarters?—On a forest tour I should not be at headquarters at all. Generally, when I go to a district I go to headquarters for three or four days and talk to the Collector.

6714. Do you examine the Collector's Office and the Divisional Office?—No, I have never really examined them, I see if there is any need of new buildings or extra accommodation.

6715. But you do not examine the registers and records to get an idea of how the work is done?—No, I have never done that.

6716. Then really your only means of judging of individuals is by what you gain by short personal intercourse, and the rest is paper?—Yes.

6718. Would you make the same limit as for remissions?—Yes, I think anything that seriously affects the finances of the Presidency ought to go to Government.

6719. It has been said that the tendency of the Madras Board of Revenue system is to make the Collector a bigger man than under the system of Commissioners; would you be inclined to agree with that?—I should say so, I have no experience of the other provinces.

6720. Can you indicate any way in which his position and influence are increased under the Madras system?—Well, I am afraid I do not know any of the details of administration in other provinces, so I really cannot say; I should think it is inevitable that he must have more influence.

6721. As to the grading of tahsildars in a district list, is that not a disadvantage when you want to move a tahsildar?—Now their pay depends upon the particular taluk they hold.

6722. They are confined to one district?—Yes.

6723. Is not that a disadvantage if you want to move a tahsildar who has formed local connections which you wish to break?—Sometimes it is, but, if we think a tahsildar ought to be moved, the Board would tell the Collector to arrange for a transfer.

6724. But as a general principle do not the tahsildars gain by a little variation of experience, just as Collectors do; as far as it goes, that is a disadvantage of the district system?—I do not know; I think if you have a general list you will have to have somebody outside the district to promote the tahsildar, a central authority like the Board of Revenue; that would weaken the Collector's authority very much, and that would counterbalance any good that the other would do.

6725. (Chairman.) If you had a provincial list, might you not perhaps get the same disadvantage about knowledge of the vernaculars in the case of the tahsildars that occurs in the case of Divisional Officers moved from district to district?—Yes, you would have to see that they were only posted to districts of which they knew the vernacular.

6726. Therefore the present district system is advantageous from that point of view?—Yes.

6728. There are three in the Bombay Presidency, I think, at present, and one in Sind?—Yes.

6729. Bombay and Madras are roughly about the same size?—Yes; I think Madras is a little larger.

The Hon. Mr.
C. J. Weir.
29 Nov., 1907.

The Hon. Mr. C. J. Weir.
29 Nov., 1907. 6730. In case of the selection of Collectors for promotion, do the Board of Revenue have anything to say; do they report confidentially on them?—Not ordinarily unless they are particularly asked to.

6731. But are they as a matter of fact generally asked?—Not generally, not at all events in writing or officially.

6732. Have you ever as a member of the Board been asked—not for the purpose of rejecting a man, but for selecting an officer for promotion?—No; I have been verbally asked about a man.

6733. That was in the case of an officer you knew well?—Yes.

6734. What as a rule carries weight in your mind; suppose you were consulted as to whether

A.B. ought to be selected for a particular post, what would carry weight with you as a member of the Board of Revenue in recommending him or not for selection?—I do not know. I should arrive at an opinion by seeing his work for a number of years; we see the work of all Collectors that come before us.

6735. Would his ability to write a clear report, or would his knowledge of languages, or would his tact, weigh with you principally?—Tact would be a very valuable thing in this country.

6736. You would not confine yourself merely to his ability to write a clear and able report on a subject; that would not be the only factor?—Certainly not.

(The witness withdrew.)

The Hon. Mr. J. TWIGG, I.C.S., was called and examined.

The Hon. Mr. J. Twigg.
29 Nov., 1907. 6737. (Chairman.) You are Commissioner of Salt and Abkari and Separate Revenue?—Yes.

6739. You hand in this statement showing the organisation of your office?—Yes.

The Salt Department, the Abkari Department, the Opium revenue, the Income-tax revenue, and the Customs Department, are administered by the Commissioner of Salt, Abkari and Separate Revenue. He also compiles the annual report on emigration and immigration and submits it to Government in the Public Department. Besides the control exercised by him in the Board's office he periodically tours throughout the Presidency on inspection duty. The Commissioner is assisted by the Deputy Commissioner of Abkari who advises on matters in connection with distillery and warehouse management and also on salt and abkari matters involving technical details. The Deputy Commissioner of Abkari controls the Board's office laboratory which conducts salt analyses and obscuration tests of imported spirits.

The Presidency is divided into 3 divisions each under the control of a Deputy Commissioner, one of whom is a member of the Indian Civil Service. Subordinate to the Deputy Commissioners are the Assistant Commissioners of subdivisions. Subdivisions are divided into circles in charge of inspectors aided in most cases by assistant inspectors. Circles are comprised of ranges in charge of sub-inspectors. Inspectors of maritime circles have in addition to their usual duties the control of salt factories and customs ports. Salt factories other than those at circle headquarters are in the immediate charge of assistant inspectors. Customs ports are in the charge of assistant inspectors, sub-inspectors, superintendents or assistant superintendents according to the importance of the ports. The land customs stations at the 4 French settlements are supervised by the ordinary staff. There are 2 opium and 2 ganja storehouses each in charge of an assistant inspector. The officer in charge of the ganja storehouse at Duggapad also supervises the cultivation of ganja. For the supervision of cultivation of ganja on the Javadi Hills an assistant inspector is posted temporarily for the season. The distillery and warehouse establishments are under the control of the Deputy Commissioner of Abkari. For purposes of distillery and warehouse control the Presidency is divided into 3 circles in charge of inspectors. Distilleries are in charge of assistant inspectors, who are in the case of the larger distilleries assisted by one or more sub-inspectors, according to the importance of the distillery.

Collectors are responsible for the realisation of the excise revenue and for the general excise administration of their districts, the agency for the collection of the revenue being the ordinary land revenue establishment.

The Customs Administration of the port of Madras is entrusted to the Collector of Customs, Madras, assisted by two Assistant Collectors. The Collector is also the chief referee in all matters of Customs procedure for out-ports.

The Collector is in charge of the income-tax administration of his district, the income-tax being collected by the ordinary land revenue establishments.

The general control and superintendence of the stamp revenue is vested in the Board of Revenue, the management in each district being entrusted to the Collector of land revenue. Stamp work is attended to by the ordinary land revenue establishments except in the Madras and Godavari districts. The general Stamp Office at the Presidency Town is in charge of the Superintendent of Stamps.

6740. Do you find any difficulties or any advantages which have followed on the change of Customs from a provincial service to a purely Imperial Service?—The advantage is scarcely felt yet; we are still re-organising. I think it has distinct advantages.

6741. Has it reduced or has it saved correspondence between the provincial Government and the Government of India?—I am afraid I cannot answer that question.

6742. In all these five departments which come under you, is there a great deal of correspondence with the Government of India?—I am scarcely in a position to say; we refer matters to our own Government, and if it is necessary to pass it on and take orders, they do so.

6743. Whom do you refer it to in the provincial Government?—It goes to Government, and the Member who deals with these questions deals with it first.

6744. What Secretary of Government do you correspond with?—The Revenue Secretary.

6745. Are you as a matter of fact much senior to the Revenue Secretary in service?—He is my junior by three years.

6746. Has he power in his department to settle questions himself?—No, he is merely a Secretary.

6747. Has he no power in the department to settle questions?—Oh no.

6748. He is merely the post office to the Member?—I really do not know what the relations are between the Secretary and the Members.

6749. In these departments do you find that the control of the Government of India, as exercised through the provincial Government, interferes much with your executive functions?—I have not found it so in my experience?

6750. Do you find that the control of the provincial Government is excessive over you?—I do not think so; the department has sent in certain suggestions for the delegation of powers.

6751. But I want your opinion as the Excise Commissioner?—I have not felt it myself.

6752. You have not been unduly restrained or confined in any way or hindered in your work?—I have not found it so; my experience dates from February 1906.

6753. Can you make any suggestions to us in respect of these five heads of duties as to any matters in which you would like a freer hand?—No.

6754. (Mr. Hichens.) The salt revenue goes entirely to the Imperial Government?—Yes.

6755. How far do they leave you a free hand in dealing with the administration?—I think the provincial Government has an entirely free hand.

6756. The amount of the salt tax is laid down by the Imperial Government?—Yes.

6757. But any remissions and so forth that there might be are made by the provincial Government without reference to the Government of India?—I do not understand what you mean by "remissions."

6758. It might be that there was a certain amount of revenue that was irrecoverable for one reason or another; would you have to make reference to the Government of India in a case of that sort?—I do not think so, but I really cannot tell; it does not come before me.

6759. So far as you know all administrative matters are settled by the provincial Government, and no administrative matters practically are submitted to the Government of India?—So far as I know, that is so.

6760. In what relation does the Collector of Customs stand to you?—He is subordinate to the Board.

6761. That is, it is an inferior department?—Yes.

6762. And any question that comes up of administration or otherwise is submitted to you? Take the question of his staff for example; suppose the Collector wanted to increase his staff, would the question be submitted to you?—It would go through the Board to the Government.

6763. And from the Government to the Government of India?—In an Imperial matter, I suppose so.

6764. So that he is not directly under the Government of India?—No.

6765. He is under you for whatever is required, whether for increase of staff or for customs regulations; whatever he does is done with your approval?—Yes.

6766. You think that that is a necessary provision?—I think he should be under local control, because the conditions are so different here; they vary very much from place to place.

6767. In the matter of staff, is that not a matter which the Collector would be quite competent to settle between himself and the Imperial Government; there is no particular point in the provincial Government having a say in that?—It would not be of very much importance in the case of office staff, but by "staff" I suppose you mean the staff at all these small ports. At present the Customs Department is mixed up with the Salt; the subordinates are not Imperial at the small ports. All this is practically under consideration now, but at present the inspecting officers and so on are the Salt Officers.

6768. Your opinion is that it is desirable that this officer, although the Customs are really under the Imperial Government in every way, should correspond through the provincial Government in order that the provincial Government may have an opportunity of expressing their views if they desired to do so?—Certainly.

6769. (Mr. Dutt.) With regard to the Excise Department, that is entirely under provincial management?—Yes.

6770. I suppose country liquor and ganja and opium are the main items of revenue?—Yes.

6771. With regard to country liquor you have the central distillery system here in Madras?—The contract system.

6772. The revenue is derived partly from the still-head duty and partly from the license fees of shops?—Yes.

6773. Who collects the license fees of shops?—The Collectors.

6774. Do they do it through the tahsildars in the first instance?—Yes.

6775. How is the still-head duty collected?—It is paid in before the liquor is issued.

6776. That is the simplest procedure that you could suggest?—I think so.

6777. Is toddy also a large source of revenue in Madras?—Yes.

6778. How is the revenue collected?—That is also collected by the Land Revenue Officers.

6779. So that the Collector has a large amount of supervision over excise matters in his own district?—Certainly.

6780. And your excise officers in the district take their instructions from the Collector?—I cannot quite say that.

6781. Have you got inspecting officers?—We have inspectors, and over them are Assistant Commissioners, then Deputy Commissioners; the Collector is responsible for many things.

6782. Mainly for collection?—For collection, and also for the number of shops and that kind of thing.

6783. You have no suggestions to make for simplifying the work by granting further powers to the Collector in excise administration?—That is a point that is now being considered.

6784. Orders have already been issued by the Indian Government in accordance with the recommendations of the Excise Committee?—They have passed resolutions upon the report of the Committee and sent them down for the consideration of the Government.

6785. (Sir Frederic Lely.) The recommendations of the Excise Committee contemplate giving more power to the Excise Commissioner over the excise arrangements?—I do not know that it is quite a matter of giving him more power.

6786. The Collector cannot at present give orders to your officer on the spot?—The ranges are not continuous at all with district boundaries.

6787. The nearest responsible officer to the Collector would be the Assistant Commissioner?—Yes.

6788. Can he give orders of any kind?—I do not think he usually does.

6789. Is there any friction between the Collector and your subordinates?—Very little indeed.

6790. If the Collector disapproved of any order given by you, what would happen? Suppose he expressed officially disapproval of anything done by your Assistant Commissioner or by your own orders, what would happen?—If it was by the Assistant Commissioner he would correspond either with the Deputy Commissioner or with the Board.

6791. And if the Deputy Commissioner disagreed with him could anything further be done?—He would refer it to the Commissioner.

6792. And you would decide?—Yes.

6793. Practically, the Collector is outside the sphere of abkari administration?—He has nothing to do with the technical part of the work.

6794. Or with the administration of the department strictly as such?—No, there is no strict division of powers.

6795. He would decide on the locality of the shops?—He would make his recommendations.

6796. Would he decide on them?—It is always subject to anything that the Commissioner may have to say in the matter. The Board lays down a maximum and minimum number of shops, and within that number it rests with the Collector to open such shops as may be necessary.

6797. He would fix the locality?—Yes.

*The Hon.
Mr. J. Twigg.*

The Hon.
Mr. J. Twigg.
29 Nov., 1907.

6798. You agree, as a general principle, that the head of the district should have the determining voice in the excise management of his district?—Certainly; I always encourage him doing so.

6799. You have a Deputy Commissioner of Abkari; is he stationed in Madras?—Yes.

6800. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) He conducts all your tests of imported spirit?—Yes.

6801. And he has a chemist under him?—He is our chemist himself; he has a man who is competent to make the tests.

6802. Does he deal with things that come up, say, from Pondicherry?—It would be sent up here to be tested; he does the whole of it; there is nobody else to do it.

6803. You have also got a central store-house?—Yes.

6804. That is also under him?—No, it is under the Secretary.

6805. That deals with books, and forms, and uniforms, and machines for your department only?—Yes.

6806. Have other departments got the same sort of facilities?—As to forms and books, that would be done through the Superintendent of Stationery, I think, and clothing as well.

6807. Could not the Superintendent of Stationery do your work as to forms and books; is it necessary to have a separate officer?—It is much more convenient.

6808. To you, of course. Could you not supply yourself from the Superintendent of Stationery?—Yes, it would be possible to do so.

6809. Does it not rather lead to extravagant duplicating of stores, supplies of forms and so on?—I am not quite sure about the forms; they are, I think, printed at the central press; they are not printed by us.

6810. Your central press for instance does not distribute forms and books for all departments direct; you have depots?—We distribute from the depots.

6811. Then, in three districts you have the Deputy Commissioners of Divisions?—Yes.

6812. They have a certain authority; what actually are they supposed to do?—Inspection is one of their chief duties.

6813. You have got apparently a double district system; you have got these three Deputy Commissioners of Divisions, and under them Assistant Commissioners, then you have got besides that another system of district subordinates who are strictly at the breweries and distilleries and warehouses and I suppose do not go outside those, and they are under your Deputy Commissioner of Abkari at headquarters?—Yes.

6814. So that you have got a double string running over the Presidency; you have got your three Deputy Commissioners and Assistants under them, then you have got your technical men at the distilleries and breweries and warehouses under the Deputy Commissioner of Abkari?—Yes.

6815. What exactly are these outside inspecting officers supposed to do? They do not inspect the technical work, which is under the Deputy Commissioner of Abkari?—Certainly not.

6816. Then what do they inspect?—They inspect the work of the whole establishment, the Preventive and Salt establishments. The Deputy Commissioner and the Assistant Commissioner have to inspect the salt factories and the whole of the Preventive work; the circle officers, the inspectors and the rangers under them.

6817. But what goes on in the ranges: ex hypothesi, you have got another organisation for the breweries and distilleries?—But that is very small; we have half a dozen distilleries here and there.

6818. What have these other men got to inspect; is it the shops?—They will have to inspect the men who inspect the shops.

6819. And salt and opium?—Yes.

6820. Except the men who are at the salt factories and breweries and warehouses, could you not spend the money that you spend on the Commissioners, Deputy Commissioners, rangers and so on, much more profitably by improving the tahsildars, and working entirely with the land revenue establishment?—I think it would be absolutely impossible. After all, it is a very technical subject.

6821. What is technical?—The system of tree tax; there is quite as much as our present inspecting officers can do to inspect the officers and see that the inspectors and subordinates are doing their duty; it would be impossible to throw it on to the Land Revenue Department.

6822. The tree tax, of course, gives a good deal of work, but liquor shops do not give a great deal of work?—They have to be inspected; then there is the preventive work.

6823. You think that anything like the sum which your system of Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners and inspectors costs would be quite insufficient to strengthen the tahsildari establishment sufficiently to do that work?—I think so.

6824. Is there not considerable risk of further corruption and oppression through departmentalism?—There is always the danger of that, but it is decreasing I believe.

6825. You, for instance, have something like 873 sub-inspectors in districts; on what pay are they?—From Rs. 30 to Rs. 70.

6826. Do you think that as a class they are trustworthy?—About as usual, I think, but all this question of improving the establishment is under consideration in connection with the Excise Committee's report.

6827. Is it likely to be considered whether it would be wiser to strengthen the central revenue establishment so as to do that local work for you?—I think the suggestion is to improve the sub-inspectors.

6828. You think it is rather going in favour of further departmentalism?—Yes. I cannot say what the decision will be; it is still under consideration.

6829. You think yourself that that will probably be the solution?—Yes, I think so.

6830. You agree that customs work is really an imperial function?—Yes.

6831. And ought to be with the Central Government, not with the provincial Government?—I think the provincial Government ought to have a say in the matter; what I mean is, I do not think it would be well to have the customs simply worked from the central authority.

6832. You have got a number of out-ports, which obviously must be provincial; they could not possibly go under the Imperial Government?—No.

6833. Is there any foreign trade at those ports or is it all coasting trade?—There is a good deal of foreign trade in some of the ports.

6834. Then suppose the decision to imperialise the Customs Department is maintained, at present I understand all that is imperialised is actually the Collector and his Assistant and so forth; do you think it ought to go a little further and imperialise the establishment of the Collector of Customs?—I think there would be some disadvantage in doing it, because the establishment at present is linked with the salt establishment; for instance, if we want extra men to assist they send down to the nearest factory to get same salt peons.

6835. But now that the Collector is an Imperial Officer, surely the control of the provincial Government over him is very much weakened?—I do not know why it should be.

6836. You do not think it is so, as a matter of fact?—At present matters are still under consideration; they are not strictly defined.

6837. Practically the whole of the office, the statistical branch and everything else, is at present provincial?—Yes.

6838. Do appeals from the Collector come to you—from his decisions as to customs duties?—Yes.

6839. The Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce suggested that they should go to some central imperial office; do you think that that is possible and feasible?—That is already done under instructions from the Government of India. I suppose he was referring to decisions as to the levying of duty on different things, machinery and so on, on which there are often a lot of very complicated questions. The Government of India has directed that in matters of general importance things should be referred to them for decision, and that has been done.

6840. Suppose the Chairman appeals from the decision of the Collector of Customs, who would decide it in the ordinary course?—The Commissioner—the Board.

6841. It has been suggested that that should be transferred to some imperial authority; would you agree to that?—I see no particular objection to it, but all important matters are already referred.

6842. How can you refer an actual specific appeal; the law says that the appeal lies to the Commissioner; how can you transfer it?—There is an appeal against my decision to the Local Government.

6843. I understand you to say that all important matters already go up to the Government of India?—Any question where the practice at various ports is different.

6844. But that is not an appeal on a particular decision passed by the Collector of Customs here. The Collector, ex hypothesi, before the appeal could lie, has given his decision; the Chamber of Commerce represent that the appeal from that decision should go to some central authority; at present it goes to you; in Bombay it goes to the Commissioner of Customs; in Bengal it goes to another officer. What is your view about that recommendation of the Chamber of Commerce?—I think that things had better stay as they are.

6845. Is the Collector of Customs in Madras very heavily worked?—I believe he is—he certainly is at present, because he is working out various re-organisations of establishment.

6846. That is transitory, but is he likely to be heavily worked; he has no other work outside the customs work?—It is contemplated that he shall go round and inspect the out-ports.

6847. When a decision is passed at one of the out-ports which has foreign trade, who hears an appeal from that?—Under the Customs Act it comes up to the Board, with one intermediate authority.

6848. Who is that intermediate authority?—It would be the Assistant Commissioner, I think, as a rule.

6849. Would it not be much better that it should be the Collector of Customs at Madras?—I think it would; I think the out-ports should be brought into more direct touch with the Collector.

6850. Will the Collector of Customs in Madras, when his establishment is settled, have plenty of time for the disposal of such appeals as are likely to come forward?—I think so.

6851. As he is supposed to be a customs expert, you will probably get a better decision?—Perhaps so.

6852. Income tax work is done by the Collectors; what do you do in the matter; do you do anything further than compile statistics?—The Board is a Commissioner of Income-tax, and therefore appeals come from the Collectors.

6853. Are they very numerous?—There is a good deal of work.

6854. The Superintendent of Stamps is under you?—Yes.

6855. You have got some special arrangement for Madras City and the Godaveri district as to the supply of stamps; do you know what that is?—In Godaveri and one or two other districts the Collector is authorised to impress stamps; and in Godaveri, where this work is particularly heavy, a small addition has been made to the ordinary land revenue establishment on this account. In the Presidency town there is a special stamp establishment under the Superintendent of Stamps.

6856. Do you consider that the supply of stamps is an imperial or a provincial function; is it one for the Central Government or for the provincial Government?—I should think for the Imperial Government.

6857. Do you think then that the appointment of Superintendent of Stamps for the distribution and sale of stamps in this Presidency should be an imperial appointment?—I do not think that follows; besides, here he has several other functions; he is the Collector of Madras, the Superintendent of Stamps and Stationery, and Protector of Emigrants.

6858. You say that salt is purely imperial, customs is purely imperial, and excise is divided. As to excise, should the administration be wholly provincial?—I think so.

6859. Do you mean that the local conditions are special, or for what reason?—This Presidency has worked out its scheme, and it should deal with it itself.

6860. Have you seen the recent orders about the Inspector-General of Excise?—I saw that one was to be appointed.

6861. (Mr. Meyer.) As to the Customs Department, the only change that has been made by what has been called the imperialisation of the Customs Service is that the Collector, and eventually (or possibly now) some of the Assistant Collectors of Customs are borne on a general Indian list and are appointed, and are liable to transfer, under the orders of the Imperial Government?—So I understand.

6862. But as regards the actual working of the department no change has been made; the Collector now is as much subordinate to you and to the Madras Government as he was previously?—Yes.

6863. You have said that, in your opinion, he should also deal with out-ports?—Yes.

6864. In the out-ports, you told us the work is done by an amalgamated establishment; in this Presidency you have amalgamated the salt, excise, and customs work?—Yes.

6865. You have found that that has led to considerable economy?—I believe that was the reason, because nothing better could be afforded at the time; it is rather expense that has been avoided.

6866. It was dictated by considerations of economy. The combined establishment is more economical, the work is done at less expense than it could be done by three different establishments?—Yes.

6867. If the suggestions contained in the questions put to you by Sir Steyning Edgerley were adopted, it would mean that you would have to have separate officers at the various out-ports?—I did not understand his suggestion to go so far as that. It was rather that the inspector should inspect the out-ports and give them more efficient and regular inspection than they now get. Our inspectors know very little about customs work.

6868. Does it follow, because the customs revenue is imperial, that the personnel by whom that revenue is collected should be imperial?—I think not.

6869. And suppose the personnel was imperial, would it be the case that the Imperial Government at Simla or Calcutta would have to deal with a number of clerks and petty subordinates in Madras?—I suppose so.

6870. And these persons would have to be Madrassis, to be conversant with the language?—Yes.

6871. Which could manage such an establishment better, the Imperial Government direct, or the provincial Government with its local representatives?—The latter, of course.

The Hon.
Mr. J. Twigg.
29 Nov., 1907.

*The Hon.
Mr. J. Twigg.*
29 Nov., 1907.

6872. As regards the Excise Department, does the Collector deal with the allocation of liquor shops and the disposal of liquor shop sales?—Yes.

6873. And, as a Magistrate, he is concerned with preventive cases that are brought forward?—Yes.

6874. The ordinary establishment under the three ordinary Deputy Commissioners and the Assistant Commissioners is concerned with preventive work mainly, is it not?—Yes.

6875. The preventive work is of considerable importance?—Very.

6876. For instance, the tree tax involves a large amount of preventive work?—Yes.

6877. The salt work is entirely under what you might call the technical agency—the production of salt in the factories and the preventive work so far as it exists there?—Yes.

6878. Are the distilleries entirely under the abkari inspectors, or are they also under the territorial Deputy Commissioner and his men?—No; there are three distillery inspectors who inspect the distilleries, and there are sub-inspectors.

6879. There is a big distillery at Nellikuppam?—Yes.

6880. Who manages that?—An assistant inspector.

6881. Is he in any way under the control of the local inspector or the local Assistant Commissioner?—No.

6882. He is entirely under the control of the inspector of distilleries?—Yes.

6883. And he in turn under the control of the Abkari Deputy Commissioner?—Yes.

6884. Therefore the ordinary Deputy Commissioners and Assistant Commissioners are not concerned with distillery work?—No.

6885. You have studied the report of the Excise Committee?—Yes.

6886. On that Committee there were representatives of all the important provinces, and it was presided over by a Madras officer?—Yes.

6887. Their recommendations were all unanimous?—I believe so.

6888. They found, in the case of Madras, that your prosecutions were too numerous, that your subordinate staff wanted to be improved, and that the Collector had not sufficient control over the preventive arrangements and so forth in his district?—Yes.

6889. On the other hand, did they find that this system of a special preventive force, duly controlled, was much more efficient and less oppressive than the system, which prevailed in some other provinces, of having no special preventive force for abkari purposes and leaving the work to be done by the ordinary establishments?—I had not noticed that particularly.

6890. Do you remember their finding that the Madras methods in regard to distillery matters were suitable for adoption in other provinces?—I believe so.

6891. And that speaking generally a number of provinces had got behindhand in excise matters through the work being done in "water-tight compartments," as the Committee put it?—I do not remember that.

6892. Having read the Committee's report, do you think the work they did was good?—I should say so, yes.

6893. As to this new appointment of Inspector-General of Excise, will not that be of advantage from the same point of view—in bringing to notice in one province what is being done in another?—I think if it was confined to that it would be of great use.

6894. And in regard to salt matters he might also do some good?—Possibly.

6895. Then on the whole you think that the appointment of the Inspector-General of Excise and Salt is a good step?—I have not seen the exact proposals as to what his functions are to be, but if it is purely advisory, I should approve the appointment.

6896. You mentioned that the Government of Madras had a more or less free hand in excise matters. You have rules under the Opium Act which regulate the system of administration?—Yes.

6897. You have to refer those rules to the Government of India every time you want them altered?—Yes; I was not thinking of opium when I spoke just now.

6898. Is it necessary that you should refer your opium rules to the Government of India?—No, I think it is not necessary.

6899. You have said that the Government of Madras have a quite free hand in salt matters; is that quite so; you would except the matters that have to be referred under financial rules, such as the appointment of an additional Assistant Commissioner?—Yes.

6900. But some years ago did not the Madras Government desire to forbid the sale of salt by measure and to make the sale by weight compulsory?—It has been suggested many times by the Board; I rather think it was once recommended by the Madras Government too.

6901. But the proposal was negatived by the Government of India?—It was.

6902. I am only trying to elicit, in the interests of accuracy, that the Madras Government has not a completely free hand in salt matters. In matters of general policy the Government of India does claim the right to intervene, and that particular recommendation of the Government of Madras was negatived, I think, on the recommendation of a representative Salt Committee?—It was.

6903. You say you have no larger powers to ask for from the Local Government about your inspectors. Do you appoint inspectors?—No, the Government appoint the inspectors.

6904. Do you promote inspectors?—No, the Government promote inspectors.

6905. What is their pay?—It ranges from Rs. 250 to Rs. 400.

6906. Might you not have the power at any rate of promoting inspectors?—Yes, but I do not feel that there is any great necessity to ask for it.

6907. If there is no decided advantage in leaving the power with Government, then it saves correspondence and saves time to have it with yourself?—Yes.

6908. Therefore it would be desirable to give you the power of promotion?—Yes, I think it would be desirable on the whole.

6909. And as to the first appointments, could you not be trusted to make the appointments?—Yes.

6910. Who appoints you, the Government of India or the Government of Madras?—The Government of Madras.

6911. (Chairman.) What office had you held before?—I was everything up from Assistant Collector, Head Assistant, Special Assistant, Sub-Collector, Collector, Judge.

6912. What experience had you of excise matters before you became Excise Commissioner?—None.

6913. You said that it might be difficult for an Imperial Service to employ Imperial officers at a great distance from themselves?—I suppose it amounts to that, yes.

6914. Is the Post Office an Imperial Service?—I believe so.

6915. Is that managed at a great distance from headquarters by Imperial officers?—I do not know what the arrangements may be; there is the local Postmaster-General.

6916. Who is not a servant of the Government of Madras?—I am afraid I do not know about the Post Office Department; I believe it is under the Central Government.

6917. Is the same the case in respect of the Telegraph Department?—I suppose so.

6918. Therefore it is not an inherent impossibility for an Imperial department at a great distance from its subordinates to conduct a business satisfactorily?—But this is such a small isolated matter of less than a hundred employés.

6919. But still, it is not impossible inherently?—It is not impossible.

6920. The whole of the customs revenue is imperial?—Yes.

6921. The opium is entirely an imperial revenue?—We have a local rate upon it as well.

6922. Do you think that any of these sources of revenue of which you have charge could be advantageously handed over in bulk to the Imperial Government in exchange for other sources of revenue; would it reduce correspondence, or staff, or anything of that sort, if they were so handed over; for instance half your stamps, half your excise, half your income-tax in the future are to go to the Central Government, and half will remain with yourselves; suppose all those sources of revenue were handed over to the Imperial Government, other financial arrangements being made with the provincial Government; would that relieve you of any correspondence or any duties?—No. The management of these departments rests with the provincial Government; it is only a division of the receipts; I do not see that it would save anything at all.

6923. At all events, if it did, your particular office would not be in the position to know?—No.

6924. Do you know of any country (perhaps you are not familiar with the systems of Government in any other country) where the Customs Service in its entirety is not imperial?—I do not know about other countries.

(The witness withdrew.)

The Hon. Mr. F. J. WILSON was called and examined.

6925. (Chairman.) You are the Secretary to Government in the Public Works Department; also, as Chief Engineer, President of the Sanitary Board?—Yes.

6926. Will you state briefly the organisation of your department and the nature of your duties?—The Secretary to Government, Public Works Department, is, as Chief Engineer, the executive head of his Department and holds also the position of President of the Sanitary Board. He is assisted by an Under Secretary and Deputy Chief Engineer selected from the ranks of Executive Engineers. The Consulting Architect to Government works under the Chief Engineer as a technical Assistant.

All questions relating to establishments of the whole department, consisting of one hundred engineers, permanent, covenanted and temporary, and about 350 upper subordinates, permanent, and temporary, come before the Chief Engineer and the Secretary. In his capacity as Secretary he makes recommendations as to the posting, promotion and grant of leave to Engineers and in the case of locally recruited Engineers also as to their employment. He has thus to make recommendations as to the arrangements necessary to fill leave vacancies and to deal with all matters which come before Government in regard to the general administration of the department and the conduct and work of the Engineers. In his capacity as Chief Engineer he performs similar functions in regard to upper subordinates without reference to Government, and also selects and appoints recruits to the upper subordinate establishment from qualified candidates from the Engineering College. The Chief Engineer also deals with all applications for additions to permanent office establishment and for temporary establishment, obtaining the orders of Government where this is not covered by existing sanctions.

The Chief Engineer has direct charge of all matters relating to roads and buildings, and all plans and estimates for those exceeding Rs. 2,500 (£166) come before him for technical scrutiny. In regard to this branch of work a large number of plans and estimates for road bridges prepared by District Board Engineers come before the Chief Engineer for technical scrutiny. Plans and estimates for sanitary works such as water supply and drainage schemes, hospitals, markets, &c., come before the Chief Engineer twice, first in his capacity as President of the Sanitary Board, when general opinions are expressed for the consideration of Government on the administrative side, and subsequently approved for technical scrutiny in his capacity as Chief Engineer.

The Chief Engineer is thus the general adviser of Government on all matters affecting the general administration of the department and on all engineering matters except in regard to irrigation. For irrigation projects and works there is a Chief Engineer for irrigation who is a Joint Secretary to Government, and thus deals with irrigation works without reference to the Chief Engineer.

6927. Do you get a number of questions referred to you on the Sanitary Board from the various Collectors of districts?—The Sanitary Commissioner and the Sanitary Engineer forward to the Sanitary Board proposals, which are considered first of all by the Sanitary Board, and the Sanitary Board report to Government.

6928. Your fellow members of the Board are the Secretary in the Local and Municipal Department and the Surgeon-General?—Yes; it is a Board of three.

6929. You have not very much power on the Sanitary Board to finally settle schemes?—Not to finally settle schemes, only to make recommendations.

6930. You have, as members of the Sanitary Board, no power at all of deciding on the schemes which are submitted to you?—I do not think so.

6931. You refer them to Government?—We merely express general opinions. We say, "We recommend the scheme," or we can refer it back to the Sanitary Commissioner for a further opinion, or to the Sanitary Engineer, if it happens to be a Sanitary Engineer's question. If the scheme will cost Rs. 10,000 or less we refer it, approved, to the Sanitary Engineer for sanction; if above that limit, then to Government.

6932. When you have made a recommendation you send it to the Local and Municipal Secretary?—Yes; all schemes costing over Rs. 10,000.

6933. He is one of your colleagues on the Board?—Yes.

6934. He in turn, having considered it, sends it on to you again as Chief Engineer in the Public Works Department?—It finally comes to me after the Government has passed an order.

6935. Does it not strike you that a system which requires your consideration of a scheme without any power of disposal on the Sanitary Board, and which is afterwards submitted to you in a totally different capacity, is a cumbrous and unnecessary procedure?—I certainly do think so.

6936. And it must only entail loss of time and waste of money; do you agree to that?—I agree so far that I have already found a difficulty as the engineering member of the Board in passing an opinion on a scheme without going into the engineering question, and if I go into the engineering question I might as well deal with it at once.

6937. Would it be better in your judgment to maintain the Sanitary Board, giving them power to decide, subject to reference to the Financial Department, and subject only to that, and abolish the reference to the Local and Municipal Department and the Public Works Department, or would it be better to abolish the Board and continue the reference to those departments?—I think in one respect two references are necessary. It is unnecessary to go into a lot of engineering details before Government have passed an administrative order that they approve of the expenditure on general lines for the object which is dealt with, and it seems desirable that they should first of all pass an administrative order on the general scheme, with an approximate figure of cost, before any detailed engineering questions are gone into.

6938. Would you not at once find that the administrative department which has to pass the order would say "We cannot pass the order until we know the final detailed cost"?—They must have a figure of cost, which can be determined by a certain amount of engineering scrutiny on general lines.

6939. However, you agree that the dual system which at present exists is unsatisfactory?—I think it could be improved. I would abolish the Board, as at present constituted.

6940. Do you yourself, in your capacity as Secretary, actually pass orders upon all these recommendations as to posting, promotions, granting leave, and so forth, or do you leave it largely to some subordinates?—They all come to me.

6941. Is there anything in point of time which could be advantageously saved by reference to some of your subordinates?—I do not think so with regard to officers, but the powers of Superintending Engineers in regard to the appointment and pay of lowly paid establishments in individual cases are disadvantageously restricted.

6942. You have to refer the filling of vacancies and so forth to the Government, but with regard to what you call your upper subordinates that you can do without reference to Government?—The Superintending Engineers can move a subordinate about and they can move Assistant Engineers about.

6943. Do you think that many of these duties which devolve upon you could be quite as satisfactorily dealt with by your subordinates?—The technical scrutiny of estimates detailing engineering features of design, could be largely delegated to the Superintending Engineers, I think.

6944. Are they in practice dealt with by them now?—All new works exceeding in value Rs. 2,500 are sent up at present to the Chief Engineer.

6945. Are they practically scrutinised by him, or is he content to take the opinion of the District Engineers?—They are scrutinised by him at present, but there are certain matters of detail which are now referred to the Chief Engineer the responsibility for which should, I think, rest with Superintending Engineers.

6946. At all events you think they might perfectly well be delegated?—The work we are engaged on now is to draw up rules of design and standard dimensions and type designs; as soon as they are brought into play I think powers might be largely increased. At present the powers of Superintending Engineers as a whole do not reach the limit that is imposed by the present Code.

6947. Have you anything to tell us about the relations of your Superintending Engineers with the Collectors; are they satisfactory on the whole?—I can only speak for myself, I cannot speak for the Government; suggestions have been made that the engineers should be put under the orders of the Collectors.

6948. Not in technical matters but in administrative matters?—That is the difficulty. I have never seen any practical scheme drawn up showing exactly what it means or does not mean; but I understand that some sort of control is asked for. I think that as the administrative head of his district the fullest co-operation should exist, and advice must be given by Public Works Officers to the Collector. I think the machinery of the department should be at his disposal; but on the other hand I very much doubt whether he should be called upon to interfere with one of its working parts. There is a regular chain of discipline in the Public Works Department from the Chief Engineer downwards; and the proposal seems to me to involve a break in the chain, and I think that in that way it would cause confusion. It seems to me also to throw upon the Collector responsibilities and work which should more properly fall on the Superintending Engineers.

6949. We have had before us some District Superintendents of Police, and I gathered from them that the District Magistrate has no power over the police, but he may give orders to District Superintendents of Police to do this, that, or the other; he has no power of interference with the internal economy and discipline of the force. In the same way I think the suggestion here is that if a Collector saw a particular water channel which wanted repairing, he should be able to give orders on the spot to do that, without referring to the Executive Engineer, who might be a great distance away. Would you have any objection to that?—If you give him power over one thing you give him power over other things.

6950. If the powers of discipline of the District Superintendent of Police over his force were not interfered with, and similar lines were to obtain in the allocation of power to the Collector over the Public Works Department, speaking generally, there ought not to be any difficulty about disciplinary questions in the Public Works Department?—So long as he does not touch upon any technical or engineering questions.

6951. (Mr. Meyer.) You spoke of granting larger powers to Superintending Engineers. Have you not lately received a letter from the Government of India making very specific suggestions on those points? What is being done upon that?—The letter has not been replied to.

6952. The Government of India have called for your opinion?—Yes.

6953. Suppose the result is that there is a considerable amount of decentralization, and larger powers are given to Superintending Engineers, the initiative will have come from the Government of India?—Yes, officially; I have been working in the same direction myself, though not to the extent proposed by the Government of India.

6954. Have you sent in any proposals for larger powers to the provincial Government in respect of public works affairs?—We sent in a list of items in regard to which extended powers might be given by the Government of India to the Local Government.

6955. When was that sent in?—A few days ago.

6956. Assuming that it has funds available, a provincial Government can incur large expenditure on works without reference to the Government of India at all?—They can sanction up to 10 lakhs.

6957. And including establishment charges?—Up to 12½ lakhs.

6958. There is an exception as regards expenditure upon Government houses?—Yes; there is a restriction with regard to the residence of a Governor of Rs. 15,000 on any one house in a year; anything over that sum has to be submitted to the Government of India.

6959. That is to say, in regard to Government House, Madras, if repairs or alterations to the extent of Rs. 20,000 were to be undertaken this year, you would have to get the special sanction of the Government of India?—That is as to new works.

6960. And repairs?—Ordinary repairs are not restricted in that way, I think.

6961. Assuming that to be so, do you think that the existing restriction is necessary?—No.

6962. Would your idea be to give full powers to the provincial Government?—I think full power might be given; it is provincial money.

6963. That is to say, full power up to the extent of 12½ lakhs as for other works?—Yes.

6964. Suppose it was contemplated to enlarge Government House very much—up to a cost of 10 lakhs—the provincial Government might in your opinion be allowed to do it, just as they might enlarge the Secretariat here?—I think so.

6965. There is another restriction in regard to houses occupied by Government officers. You charge rent on them as a rule, do you not?—Yes.

6966. Your rents are fixed upon what one might call quasi-commercial considerations with reference to the initial capital cost of the house and site, and with reference to the recurring maintenance charges?—Yes.

6967. But there is a limit; you cannot charge an officer more than 10 per cent. of his salary in the shape of rent?—No.

6968. And the rent ordinarily should be 8 per cent. of the officer's salary?—Yes.

6969. Is it not the case that if the cost of your house would exceed 8 per cent. of the salary of the officer who would ordinarily occupy it, you have to go to the Government of India for special sanction?—Yes.

6970. Is that necessary?—I think the rules might be taken as a general guide as to what is proper, but the Local Government might have power to deal with special cases and to deviate from the rules if they thought fit.

6971. Absolutely, or within some larger margin?—I think absolutely.

6972. Would you report to the Government of India in such a case?—Yes. I would not propose to abolish the rules; I would propose that the rules should be as they are now, but that the Government should deal with special cases.

6973. The Government should have a dispensing power you mean?—Yes.

6974. What would be the object then of having special reports to the Government of India; do you mean that it would be some sort of a check?—As a check.

6975. You speak of the scrutiny of the plans of works for District Boards; you have had experience of those as a Superintending Engineer, and possibly as an Executive Engineer?—To some extent—for bridges mostly.

6976. Has every work costing over Rs. 2,500 to go to the Executive Engineer for scrutiny?—No. All works of a special and unusual character costing Rs. 2,500 and upwards go to the Superintending Engineer for advice. The Superintending Engineer sends on those above Rs. 5,000 to the Chief Engineer for Government sanction.

6977. They do not go through the Executive Engineer at all?—I do not think so.

6978. Is that a good limit; might not the District Board have some larger discretion?—I find that many of the plans that come up now want some alteration; I am not in a position really to say whether the District Board Engineer should be given greater powers; we have no control over them.

6979. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) Have you many Government houses at the out-stations, Government buildings which are occupied by Collectors and Assistant Collectors, Assistant Police Superintendents and so on; does the Madras Government house its officers in Government buildings much?—Yes, it is increasing.

6980. How do your rents compare with those of a private landlord in the same stations?—I do not know that I can say.

6981. What does a Collector's house in an out-station—a Government bungalow—cost to build?—About Rs. 40,000.

6982. And what is the rent?—About Rs. 180; it may be that.

6983. Do you charge any of your Collectors Rs. 180 a month rent?—We are bound to charge them the rent as it works out.

6984. May we take it that that is very much higher than they could probably get a house for if one were available?—Yes, perhaps it is; but of course they cannot get a house of the description that is built for them.

6985. But they could house themselves for a good deal less probably?—Government only build houses where there are none available—where they have not got houses.

6986. If Government took a long lease of a house would not any private landlord probably be very glad to do it at something less than what you do?—Yes, if a suitable house was available.

6987. When an officer takes a Government house he has to keep it on throughout the twelve months; it is his official residence, and there is an end of it; he has to pay his rent all through the year?—He has to pay for it as long as he occupies it.

6988. All through the year, even when he is on tour?—Yes.

6989. Officers like Assistant Collectors and District Superintendents of Police when they are in a private house very often throw it up when the touring season comes?—I do not know about that. In Madras they tour all the year round.

6990. Do they keep a house all the year round?—I think so, generally.

6991. Do you think that the system of Government rents—it is not your fault, but the system as you are obliged to enforce it—is rather a heavy tax on the officers. Do you get many complaints about it?—I do not think we do; officers sometimes want the houses.

6992. When you examine these District Board estimates and so on, do you do that work for them free?—Some work is done free by order of the Government, and some work a charge is made for.

6993. Do you know the principle of division?—No charge is levied when a provincial grant is made for the work, as in such case the charge would be pro tanto a reduction of the grant. No charge is made in the case of famine works undertaken by the Public Works Department from local funds.

6994. Your correspondence with the Government of India is really limited to very big works and to questions of rent and so on?—There are a number of small things that have to go up to the Government of India.

6995. (Mr. Dutt.) You would not approve of the District Engineer being placed under the Collector for the purposes of the distribution of irrigation water?—A general order to that effect I think would not be desirable.

6996. But would you approve of the District Engineer acting in consultation with the Collector in all matters relating to the distribution of irrigation water?—He is already supposed to act in consultation with the Collector on all this sort of things.

6997. When the Collector sends in an instruction or an opinion on that matter, he will either comply with it or send it on to the Superintending Engineer?—Under the rules that exist, in any cases where a Collector's wishes in regard to the construction of new works or the repair of existing ones are not complied with the Superintending Engineer has to give the reason, and the Collector can refer it to Government.

6998. Are you certain that he has to give his reason to the Collector or to the Superintending Engineer?—That is my impression.

6999. However, if there was no such rule, would you have any objection to having a rule of that kind?—That is rather an irrigation question, but we want to do all we can to get the officers to act together.

7000. Do you see any strong objection to it?—I see this objection, that in regard to a certain project the whole success of the project depends very often upon technical questions regarding the uses of water, and also technical questions in regard to discharges which we have to take account of—rainfall and flood discharges; and if a consultation is to go on before a sluice is shut or a weir is thrown open and so forth, it might not be advantageous; but generally speaking, I think we want the administrative officers of Government to have the opinion and advice of the engineers and the engineers to co-operate with them in every possible way for the advantage of Government.

The Hon. Mr.
F. J. Wilson.
29 Nov., 1907.

The Hon. Mr. F. J. Wilson.
29 Nov., 1907. 7001. When they cannot agree what would you suggest; when the request is sent up to the Superintending Engineer would you object to his saying "For these technical matters it is impossible to comply with the Collector's requisition"?—His reasons should be given I think.

7002. (Mr. Hichens.) What roads are under the charge of the Public Works Department?—Only a few special ones; most of the roads are dealt with by the District Boards.

7003. Does your department inspect the roads of the District Boards at all?—The Superintending Engineers are supposed to report to the Presidents of District Boards anything they notice in which they can help, and generally act as advisers in any case that seems necessary.

7004. Speaking generally, is it your impression as the Head of that Department that the District Boards make their roads pretty well?—I am afraid I cannot say.

7005. Should any of the roads that are now made by the District Boards be transferred to the Government?—Government now and again does take over the roads; it is generally a question of funds; the District Board cannot afford enough to keep them in order; then they apply to the Government, and Government takes them over.

7006. Would it be wise if the Government took a larger share of road construction under their wing?—I see no strong reason at present why they should; it involves an entire change of the present system.

7007. (Chairman.) It has been suggested to me that in your dual capacity as Chief Engineer and Secretary to Government in the Public Works Department, you may have occasion to advise Government as Secretary regarding appeals of departmental subordinates against your orders as Chief Engineer; is that a fact?—It must be a fact; any appeal to Government would naturally go to the Secretary.

7008. Then in that particular instance there might, in one or two exceptional cases, be a reason for extending the right of appeal in regard to your department which would not obtain in other departments; would you agree to that?—Yes.

(The witness withdrew.)

The Rev. A. ANDREW was called and examined.

The Rev. A. Andrew.
29 Nov., 1907. 7009. (Chairman.) You are a missionary?—Yes, of the United Free Church of Scotland. I came out to India in 1879.

7010. What part of India have you been principally resident in?—In South India. For four months I was in Madras City, all the rest of the time I was in Chingleput.

7011. You have a very good acquaintance with the district?—Yes, because I have lived there the whole time with the exception of four months.

7012. (Sir Frederic Lely.) You have been in touch and on intimate terms with various classes of the people?—Yes.

7013. I suppose you speak the language with perfect ease?—Yes.

7014. Does your Mission engage in cultivation at all?—Yes, as a part of our industrial work.

7015. You have been intimately connected then with the cultivating interests?—That is only part of my work.

7016. Still in the course of your work you have been brought into contact with the cultivators as a class?—To a large extent, and especially our own people.

7017. Also, you have had intercourse with others who do not belong to your flock?—Yes.

7018. Have you noticed during the time you have been in India any change in the attitude of the people towards the officers of the Government?—It depends upon what officers you mean; if it is the higher officers, I do not think there is very much change, because if a European Collector is sympathetic and alert the people do respect him still; I do not see very much change; it depends very much on the person, too.

7019. As a matter of fact, do they see much or know much of the higher officers of Government?—Not very much; I do not think they see so much as they used to; I think the higher officers are too much worked.

7021. And the result is?—The result is that they have not time really to mingle with the people and see the people as perhaps they ought to do; I do not think it is their fault to a large extent.

7022. As a matter of fact if a man has a grievance, can he get access to one of these higher officers that you speak of and an opportunity of telling it?—He can, but he must present a petition in the vernacular.

7023. I suppose many of your people have grievances?—Yes.

7024. Real or fancied?—Sometimes—a good many are fancied.

7025. Have they as a matter of fact an opportunity of stating those grievances in person to the higher officers of the district?—I believe they have; they must present a petition, I understand, in the vernacular, and I do not think that these officers have much time to look into matters, that is my opinion.

7026. However, as a matter of fact if a man has a grievance he can generally make sure of being able to represent it in person?—I think so.

7027. For all practical purposes the European officer or higher officer is accessible?—He is, but I do not think that he has time to see the people on account of having so much work to do.

7028. He is not on the familiar terms he formerly was?—No, I do not think so.

7029. Is there any other reason besides what you suggest, namely, overwork?—I think also perhaps their lack of fluency in speaking Tamil; as a rule they have not full command of the language, and they have not had opportunity enough of getting full command.

7030. Have they less command of the language than the officers had when you first came to the country?—I know some officers at present who have a very good command of the language.

7031. And some who have not?—And some who have not, as far as I can see.

7032. Is there any well grounded complaint, among the people, of the different attitude of Government as such—that it is more rigid?—I think it is more rigid; I think it has a greater tendency to go by rule than it had in former times.

7033. In all branches of Government?—Almost all branches of Government; I think the tendency is to have a set of rules and keep to those rules, and the whole system becomes somewhat mechanical; there is not enough discretionary power, I think, granted to the high officers.

7034. Is that the opinion you have formed yourself, or is it the opinion of the people as you have gathered it from talk with them?—I think it is the combined idea.

7035. (Mr. Dutt.) Have you come in contact with any of the village panchayats in the district?—I do not think there are any panchayats at all. There used to be panchayats, but at present it is the village munsiff and the karnam, the village accountant, who are really the heads of the village. I would suggest that a panchayat be formed in every village, or at least in every raiyatwari village, where there is at present a munsiff and a karnam. The whole administration, as it were, rests upon these petty village officers; almost all the information that is got is got through them, and I think that you might have a little village Board with the munsiff at the head and with the karnam and three or four or five of the leading men on the Board.

7036. You would recommend that panchayats be formed, including the village munsiff and the karnam?—Yes. There is a peculiarity about the Indian villagers, that if there is anything to be considered, if any difficult point arises, they naturally call a panchayat, and when the decision is given they follow out that decision and do not demur to it. So it would be if you had a panchayat formed in every village. There are 54,000 villages in the Madras Presidency. Perhaps it would be too much to have a panchayat in each village, but there are 34,000 raiyatwari villages, and if a panchayat was formed in each of those, it would be a great thing. What you want in India is the development of local self-government, and this goes to the very root of the matter. The development of the education of the people so far as self-government is concerned ought to begin at the village panchayat; then after that it could be enlarged.

7037. Do the villagers still form panchayats among themselves for the settlement of local questions which come up among them?—I do not think so. From what I have been able to gather there is a very strained relationship between village officers and revenue collectors and so on.

7038. I mean in regard to matters which have nothing to do with the village officers—little social questions and so on; in those matters do they form little assemblies of their own?—I am not sure.

7039. Did you find this prevailing to any great extent when you first came to India 28 years ago?—I think so.

7040. And you think it would be a good thing to try to revive that?—I think so.

7041. You think they could be entrusted with simple duties?—Such as village sanitation, the making of village roads and communications; and also perhaps, when times of remission came, the revenue officers might ask the panchayat their opinion as to what fields required remission. At present it rests on the village officers; when it is left in the hands of one or two men they will be biassed and prejudiced, but when there is a body of men, their combined opinion must be much better than a single man's opinion. Also with reference perhaps to education, I do not think we have gone down far enough with reference to the development of elementary education in India. Simple village schools might be placed in the hands of these people. At present the matter is managed by taluk Boards and District Boards. I was a member of the taluk Board and District Board for many years and also a Councillor in the municipality of Chingleput, also an official visitor to the Government Reformatory at Chingleput, so that I have had some experience.

7042. As to these village panchayats, would the division of the people into different castes stand in the way of their successful working?—I do not think so.

7043. You think that for village matters they could come together notwithstanding their division into castes?—It would require supervision, of course, by the higher authorities; there is no doubt of that. If these village panchayats were formed throughout South India, I think there should be a special officer appointed such as you have in the Accountant's Department. A man is sent down from the Accountant-General's Department to audit the municipal books and accounts; he comes and criticises what has been done, and points out the defects, and co-ordinates the whole system, comparing the books of one municipality with those of all other municipalities. In the same way there might be an officer appointed by Government to supervise these panchayats; he would know how they should be managed; he could look into all the details connected with them, and criticise their work, and co-ordinate them with all the other panchayats.

7044. With some supervision of that kind do you think the institution would be likely to succeed?—I think so, because it is suited to the genius of the Indian people. There are many things that they think the panchayat would be the right thing to manage if they could be got together. In marriage questions, for instance, among the lower classes they have a special panchayat in any questions connected with marriage responsibilities; in case of any dispute the panchayat is called together to settle it, and it even dissolves the union in some cases.

7045. You think that such an institution is suited to the genius of the people?—Yes, and I think it is a great mistake that that simple Board has been allowed to die out.

7046. Do you think that taluk Boards on the whole do useful work?—Yes, I think they do. I have no doubt the members of the Board at present do not take a very great interest in Local Board matters, and sometimes their opinion is not worth much, but still it is in the line of local self-government, and one can never learn to swim until one goes into the water; so, it is necessary that these Boards should be called into being, and the people educated up to be able to manage them. That is not done in a day; it requires many years' experience, and the defects will gradually disappear as time goes on if patience is exercised.

7047. Would similar remarks apply to District Boards?—Yes. To improve that, I think that committees should be appointed in connection with these Boards, and executive power to a large extent should be given to these committees. At present the executive power is wholly, I think, in the hands of the President; but sub-committees might be appointed, and they might be granted a certain amount of power to carry through things. That would make these men take a very great interest in the matters for which they were appointed. The Boards take very little interest in education—I mean very little practical interest; no doubt they all have education at heart, but the practical interest is very little, simply because they have not been called upon to apply their minds to the matter and try to guide the development of education in their district. If some power was given to them to do that, they might take a very much greater interest and make things go in a way that they never went before. I would suggest that, or the creation of a school Board for each district, in which men of this class would have power over education. The whole education would be in the hands of this special Board, and they would have their own officers and pay their own officers, and of course get grants from the District Board or from Government.

7048. If you think that the taluk Boards and District Boards could be induced to do the work, you would not recommend the creation of separate school Boards?—No, if they could be got to do it, but they have not yet got it into their heads to do it. It might be done by appointing special committees in connection with these Boards, and putting it in the hands of two or three men who would really take an interest in it. I would say that not only with reference to education, but with reference to roads and sanitation.

7049. What you mean is that there should be two or three separate sub-committees formed?—Yes, and that these should report every month to the taluk Board; if anything went wrong the other members of the taluk Board would call them to account, and a further advantage would be that the other members would come to take an interest in what these sub-committees were doing.

7050. (Mr. Hitchens.) In your experience are the inhabitants of a village more or less homogeneous?—It depends; there are certain villages where Muhammadans predominate for example, and some villages where certain other castes predominate; as a rule the central street is occupied by the Brahmans, and behind the Brahmans there are Sudras, and at a little distance from each caste village there is the Panchama village,—the Pariahs' village; that is almost universally the case in South India.

7051. I suppose they are torn by factions in the villages?—Of course; there are always factions in India.

7052. Do you think that that would prevent them coming to a reasonable decision in regard to matters entrusted to the panchayat?—There would be leading men in each village or group of villages that was chosen to have a panchayat; the leading men must be chosen, and the people themselves, I think, should have the power of choosing those men, otherwise a panchayat would be of very little use.

7054. Then your opinion is that the sense of responsibility that would be developed would in time make them respect the decisions of the panchayat?—In time; you would need to have patience; it must grow and I believe it would grow; I believe that a great deal is lost by want of patience in this country.

7055. You say there is a certain amount of faction as between the various sections in a village. Does the same feeling obtain as between one village and another?—I do not think so; I think it is more in personal matters.

7056. (Mr. Meyer.) In your part of the world you have got a series of "right hand" and "left hand" castes who are at frequent enmity with one another?—Yes.

7057. Would they work harmoniously on a panchayat?—If it is for the common good, I think they would.

7059. A man will drink the cup of appeal to its last dregs—is that your experience?—I do not think it would be so with regard to ordinary village people; there are many of them who are uneducated; very few in the villages are educated, and there is a great deal of deference shown to people higher than themselves amongst the villagers.

7060. It would be desirable, however, if the panchayats are to do any good, to make their decisions final, within reasonable limits?—In petty cases, I think so.

7061. You must have no recourse to the sub-magistrate or the district munsiff as against the panchayat?—For very small petty cases I think that would be quite enough. I was told by a Brahman the other day that his father was a munsiff in a certain village near Chingleput; his experience goes back about 50 years; there were panchayats in those days, and this was the sort of thing that took place at that time. An accusation was made against a man; the munsiff called his panchayat together; they sent for the man and asked him if he had done the thing that was complained of; the man always confessed, because the munsiff and these men of the village know all the circumstances of the people of the village, they know their conditions and their characters and what they would be likely to do, and so there is very little chance of a man successfully denying a thing if he has done it, and consequently he confesses. The munsiff says, "All right, you must pay so much to this complainant for doing a thing like this," and the man always pays, and the whole thing is done with; justice is administered, and no more is heard of the matter. That is the kind of paternal relationship that used to exist. All that is gone in these days, and perhaps if panchayats were revived this sort of thing might return again.

7062. You spoke of a supervisor of panchayats; how many supervisors would you need? You spoke of 34,000 Government villages; I suppose it would be impossible to have one man to supervise the panchayats in all the villages?—Yes.

7063. You would have one in each district perhaps?—It depends on the number in each district; that would be a matter of detail which would be considered afterwards; but the point is to create these panchayats. I believe that local self-government centres upon these panchayats and that if they are properly managed the people would be educated into serving on higher Boards—taluk Boards and District Boards and so on—in the future.

7064. But cannot such supervision as is required be better done by the local tahsildar and the Divisional Officer rather than by starting a fresh Panchayat Department, as you might call it, with a special officer?—I do not think so, because the tahsildar has an immense amount of work to do, and I do not think he would have time for such work. Moreover, he has to do with revenue matters and other matters which might bring him into conflict with these people. If you had a man who was quite separate from the tahsildar or Divisional Officer, and who had as his sole duty the organisation of the panchayats, I think they would be better managed.

7065. You spoke about the increased rigidity of our administration in the district; the Collector and other officers can no longer act, you say, at their discretion; they are more bound by rule. Is that your general opinion?—That is speaking generally.

7066. I suppose that results to a certain extent in facilities for appeal against the acts of those officers. If a man's decision upon a point is final, he can exercise some discretion; if there is an appeal, he is bound by the letter of the law; is not that the tendency?—I have not much experience of that; I cannot say.

7067. You spoke of education in connection with the local Boards. A previous witness suggested that education should be taken away from the local bodies and entirely run by the Educational Department. I gather that you would be entirely opposed to such a plan as that?—That was my opinion some years ago.

7068. You now think it should be centralized?—I advocated School Boards; I complained of the inaction of these Boards; in fact, education was going back under these Boards in South India for a number of years. If you go back ten years it is absolutely stationary; there is no improvement whatever; there are the same number of pupils and the same number of schools now that there were ten years ago. So that unless something is done to quicken the energy of the Board members, some other system must be adopted. I do not know whether the Educational Department would be any better. If the Boards cannot be made to take a greater interest in education, then it should be taken out of their hands altogether, and separate School Boards established with members who would take an interest in such work.

7069. Would you have them raise a special cess for schools?—Yes, I have advocated that too. I think that not enough is done by the Government for elementary education. Government are just playing with elementary education.

7070. You would be prepared to have a special School Board with a special School Board rate ad hoc, and supplementary to the ordinary land cess?—I have advocated in the public press that an education cess should be put on; for example one anna in every rupee. Under land revenue 625 lakhs are collected in Madras; if one anna in the rupee was put on for education it would give a large amount of money for the purpose.

7071. That is in addition to the cesses now levied for general purposes?—Yes.

7072. Do you think that would be popular?—I do not think it would be popular, but you may have to do that in time.

7073. Your idea of education is that it should be as far as possible worked by a local body, whether it be the taluk Board or some new special Board, but not directly by the central provincial Government?—I think not, but finally that, if they cannot do better without.

7074. Speaking from your experience of District Boards and taluk Boards, apart from education, do you consider that they are bodies which deserve to have larger powers than they at present possess?—I think so, and I think that the elective principle ought to be introduced; at present there is really no elective principle at work.

KHAN SAHIB MAHOMED AZIZ-UD-DIN SAHIB BAHADUR was called and examined.

7078. (Chairman.) You are Collector of South Canara?—Yes.

7079. How long have you been a Collector?—I have been permanent Collector for the last two years here; before that I was for some months Collector of the Anantapur district.

7080. Having been in your Collectorate for two years, I presume you are pretty well acquainted with it?—Yes; especially as I was Deputy Collector for several years before I commenced service in 1882.

7081. Have you in the course of your experience as an officer been constantly moved from district to district?—No.

7082. You have been fairly stationary?—Fairly stationary; in fact, I was kept very long in the districts to which I was posted.

7083. That very fact, I imagine, has caused you to know the people of your district better than many Collectors can know their districts?—Certainly.

7084. Have you a good knowledge of the particular vernacular spoken in South Canara?—Yes.

7085. You are not a native of South Canara?—No.

7086. But you know the vernacular spoken there?—There are five vernaculars spoken in South Canara.

7087. Do you know them all?—I do not know all, but I know three of them.

7088. You know three of them well?—Yes, fairly well, and besides I know Tamil and Telugu, which I had to know when I was on the east coast.

7089. You are able therefore to speak fairly freely with the people?—Yes, I am able to speak fairly freely; I make use of Hindustani generally.

7090. Do you find that in those districts the vernacular of which you do not know you have more difficulty in ascertaining what the views of the population are than in districts the vernacular of which you do know?—Certainly; if the language is known we are able to discourse with the people freely and can exchange thoughts; if we do not know the language we are wide of the people, and the people are wide of us.

7091. Of course, it is of great importance that there should be a good knowledge of the vernacular on the part of all Divisional Officers?—It is of paramount importance.

7092. How is most of your time occupied as Collector—in or out of your office; how many hours do you devote every day to your office work?—I have to devote almost the whole time to my office work.

7093. Except in those seasons when you are touring?—Even during those seasons I have to do the office work and inspect and tour as well.

7075. Surely you have the taluk Board electing to the District Board?—To my mind that is not real election, because all the members on the taluk Board are nominated, and it is from these nominated members that members are chosen to the District Board.

7076. Then you would like to have an elected taluk Board, and you would like to give the taluk Board greater powers?—Something like that.

7077. One or two witnesses have proposed the abolition of District Boards, and that all such local power as now vests in the District Board should be distributed as far as possible between the taluk Boards; are you in favour of that?—I am not so sure about that, because you require some body to supervise the work, and I do not see how the different taluk Boards could be supervised and co-ordinated in the proper way unless there is some central authority.

7094. When you are what is called on tour how many hours are you in the office as a rule?—I attend the office between 2 and 5. The rest of the time I work at home.

7095. That is to say, when you are on tour you have to devote three hours a day to office work?—No; I mean when I am at headquarters.

7096. But when you are on tour?—When I am on tour I finish the office work as soon as the post is received from the office; then the rest of the time I spend in seeing the people.

7097. How many hours do you have to give to purely office work when you are on tour?—Three hours a day is sufficient.

7098. Have you any suggestion to make to us whereby the amount of office work could be reduced?—Yes. I think it is necessary that some of the powers of the Board should be delegated to the Collectors; the non-delegation of such powers gives rise to unnecessary correspondence, and no material object is gained.

7099. Those powers which you think ought to be delegated would set free the Collector from a great deal of correspondence and office work, and he would be better able to get about?—Yes.

7100. That is the object of the delegation which you think ought to be made?—Yes.

7101. Now, you are well acquainted with the District Boards and taluk Boards, of course?—Yes; except for two years when I was senior Presidency Magistrate in the town of Madras, all the rest of my time I was in the mufassal, I was connected more or less with taluk Boards and District Boards; I was elected Chairman in the South Arcot district for several years.

7102. Would you agree with the suggestion of one of the witnesses that if an Advisory Council were started it would be desirable to do away with the District Board?—My difficulty has been this; I do not know what this Advisory Council is put forward for.

7103. Questions of revenue, or small irrigation schemes, or roads, or things of that sort, or small educational matters?—I should like to take these things seriatim and, if permitted, to express my views.

7104. If you started a Council would you find persons in the district who would form satisfactory members of it?—Yes, but I want to know before what this Advisory Council is intended for.

7105. Would it depend upon the subjects referred to them, whether or not the formation of an Advisory Council was advisable?—Yes; if I know what the subjects are to be, I can say from my experience what these Councils would be likely to do.

7106. Do you think the District Board is a good Board and does good work?—Yes, I think so.

7107. Might its powers be extended advantageously?—I think it has got nearly all the powers necessary in this Presidency.

7108. Then, should the taluk Board's powers be extended?—I do not know in what direction; they might be given larger allotments if necessary; they have all the necessary powers within their own jurisdiction.

7109. Do you agree that the formation of village panchayats is advisable or not?—There is already a panchayat under the District Boards Act which is called a union panchayat. These union panchayats are not held in favour by the people, because they involve taxation. I remember that once there was a proposal to establish a union at Pamidi in the Anantapur district, and that excited very angry opposition. As it is, the people are not in a position to make any self sacrifices, and they do not want any union or other institution which will involve taxation. If by these panchayats is meant the old panchayats that we read of in history, it is a different matter; I think that some such system might be introduced, but not on the old arbitrary lines; they must be introduced on more civilised lines.

7110. Then you would give them power to deal with petty civil and criminal cases?—Yes; we have already civil benches in the villages; we could not have criminal benches appointed unless the Village Magistrates Act was amended.

7111. If their powers were restricted to small questions, and they had no power of rating or power of taxation put into their hands, you think it would be desirable to start panchayats?—I think so.

7112. But it would be undesirable to give them power of rating or taxing?—Yes; rating or taxing they do not like, and to give them those powers would upset the whole thing. What I wanted was to educate the people to dispose of their petty civil and criminal cases, and thus save the public from going to the expensive courts and getting ruined.

7113. It has been suggested that the right of appeal in administrative matters should be limited; do you think that that would be a wise thing or not?—I think as the law now stands it is fairly well limited, and I do not think that by appealing to so many authorities much good ensues; but at the same time it is a privilege which the people cherish much, and it would give rise to considerable dissatisfaction if the right of appeal was curtailed.

7114. As a matter of practice, how far are appeals carried, I mean taking the generality of appeals? Do a great many pass through your hands?—Yes.

7115. Where do they generally end?—There are some appeals which the Collector disposes of finally; there are no appeals against punishment by petty fines, but in cases of dismissal of a servant whose pay is Rs. 50 or more there is an appeal from the Collector's decision to the Board and a second appeal to the Government.

7116. As a matter of practice, do they appeal beyond the Board?—They do sometimes.

7117. But very seldom?—Very seldom.

7118. So that what they are practically satisfied with, is an appeal from the Divisional Officer to you and from you to the Board of Revenue?—Yes.

7119. That is practically what satisfies the people?—Yes, it satisfies the people, but the right of further appeal in those cases in which it is now exercised cannot be restricted without giving dissatisfaction to the people; they appreciate it as a great constitutional privilege which they have obtained under the British Government of setting forth their grievances and obtaining justice in one place or the other.

7120. (Mr. Dutt.) Suppose that plague relief measures had to be adopted, and the people had to be segregated, or women had to be examined, do you think an Advisory Board would on such occasions be of some help to the Collector?—As a matter of fact there has been plague in Mangalore for the last five or seven years, and I have had much to do with it during the last few years; we have there what we call a Vigilance Committee consisting of 40 members; we meet every fortnight, and we get information from them as to the localities where dead rats are found and so forth.

7121. Are these non-officials?—Yes; in that way they are of use, but their influence on the public is practically nil; the people do not care very much. But there are some influential persons who do render us valuable assistance.

7122. If such influential persons were made to form an Advisory Board, could they in times of plague be of some assistance to the Collector?—Yes, it has been found of assistance and we have now a Vigilance Committee in Mangalore.

7123. Then, on the occurrence of famine or scarcity, could the members of an Advisory Board if properly elected or selected be of some use to the Collector in representing to him the condition of different classes of people whose condition is not generally known to the higher authorities?—I do not think the Advisory Board will know much about what takes place in the district or in the taluk which may be afflicted with famine. The Collector, as it is, is touring about in his district, and he is able to consult on such occasions various people.

7124. You think on famine occasions they would not be of much use?—I do not think that beyond drawing upon their imagination they will be of much use.

7125. Not as private un-official members?—No.

7126. Then with regard to occurrences such as floods and other calamities; would they not be of any use in giving an idea of the amount of remission that should be granted?—No. I had occasion to work in connection with the floods of the Kistna, and also at Cuddalore; it was not possible to get any help from any of these local people, and I do not expect that any good could come from consulting them.

7127. Did you make a selection of the people best able to advise you on those occasions?—Yes.

7128. Then on occasions when the Government has to explain a particular measure to the people, would the instrumentality of some of the leading men be of help to you?—In theory it seems all right, but in practice I do not think it will be of much use.

7129. Have you ever tried the experiment of having the object and scope of Government measures explained to the people through the leaders of the different communities?—But there are so few leaders; there are so many factions and feuds.

7130. I say, leaders of the different communities?—But there are so many different communities; there is no genuine leadership anywhere.

7131. Have you ever tried it?—There is no occasion to try it, because I know it.

7132. You say that there are so many factions and feuds; would the leaders of these contending factions be of some use to the Collector in bringing them together and effecting some sort of reconciliation and restoring peace?—People who are connected with factions are absolutely useless on such occasions; we have to look to other people who belong to neither faction, and they help.

7133. You have received no help from the leaders of these factions?—No, one distrusts the other; but people outside the factions are useful.

7134. Lastly, in ordinary concerns relating to the condition of the people in the villages, would the leading men be of any use, if an Advisory Board was formed, in keeping the Collector and the Divisional Officer informed of the condition of different villages?—I do not think so at all; I think it is rather a theoretical thing; it sounds very well in theory, but in practice it will be found impracticable.

7135. So that except on the one or two points which you mentioned first, you do not think Advisory Boards would be of any use at all?—No, I am not in favour of Advisory Boards being formed.

7136. (Mr. Hichens.) I understand you to say that a Vigilance Committee might be useful as an ad hoc body?—Yes.

7137. That is in a special emergency, but you do not say that they should be constituted into an Advisory Board?—I do not mean that at all; I mean that whenever we want to form such a Committee we do form it.

7138. Would your point of view be that if the Collector wanted to get at the opinion of the people of the country he should do it by knowing the people?—If he is a Collector who is in touch with his people and knows his business, he will know where to go.

7139. Do you have Agricultural Societies and other Societies?—Yes, we form them on occasions, whenever we want them. I am President of the District Agricultural Society of Mangalore, and I have under me several branch Societies.

7140. There are several of those Societies, and if at any time they wanted to make representations to you, you would always be prepared to hear them?—I think that those Collectors who are in touch with the people can obtain first hand information and advice from the people. With such Collectors the whole district is an Advisory Council.

7141. (Mr. Meyer.) You spoke of the unpopularity of any fresh taxation?—Yes.

7142. Did you hear the suggestion of the last witness that the progress of education should or might be accelerated by levying a special education cess and entrusting schools to special School Boards?—That would be most unpopular.

7143. Are the municipalities popular in your opinion?—The municipalities are popular where the work is properly conducted. Of course people do not wish to pay taxes, but nevertheless they do not grumble much if the taxes collected are properly utilised.

7144. But they object to fresh taxation?—They do not want taxation.

7145. So that they would not like a new municipality or a new Board to be established?—No; very often when we think of starting a municipality they object.

7146. Have you had very much experience of such municipalities elsewhere?—Yes, I was ex-officio Chairman of the Salem municipality, which is the third largest municipality in the Presidency, for a year. Then I was elected Chairman of the Cuddalore municipality, which is also an important one, for five or six years.

7147. Could the municipal Councils be given larger powers than they have at present?—I think the powers they have are fairly large; I would wait.

7148. Have they not to go up to Government in a variety of matters such as the appointment of petty clerks?—Yes; all those powers I would give.

7149. Then you do not think that any really big matters should be given to them, but in certain little points restrictions might be reduced?—Now they cannot appoint, without reference, subordinates on salaries of Rs. 50 and upwards; I would delegate all these powers to them, and, within the budget, I would allow them a free hand as far as possible.

7150. Have you had any experience of factions within the municipalities themselves?—Several.

7151. In that case, suppose there is a faction in the municipal Council, do those who are out-voted accept the situation, or do they at once proceed to an appeal to Government say?—There is no appeal to Government. There was one faction quarrel in the Mangalore municipality, when matters had to be reported by the Collector to Government; in another instance, in Cuddalore, factions were so bad and the municipality was mismanaged to such an extent that it was disfranchised.

7152. What do you mean by disfranchised?—The right of election was withdrawn, and it was reduced to fewer members.

7153. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) The last witness said that he considered that no progress had been made in the extension of primary education in the last ten years—that it was very much in the same state as it was ten years ago; do you agree with that view?—No, I do not agree. We have been endeavouring our best to extend primary education; we have now a larger number of schools, and the Government are giving us a provincial grant for the construction of new schools from their allotment of six lakhs; every year we are building new schools and opening new schools, and taking new schools under the grant-in-aid system.

7154. The statement would not be true of your district?—Not of my district nor of several districts where I have served.

7155. (Sir Frederic Lely.) I do not understand you to say that we should not give power to the panchayats to levy a tax; was not what the people objected to our obliging them to levy a tax?—Yes.

7156. Would you object to giving the panchayat power to levy a tax if they wished it themselves?—The measure would be unpopular.

7157. You mean even if the people through their panchayats did not object to it?—Yes.

7158. Would you object to giving them power, say, to make a rule that every householder should keep the ground opposite his own house clean?—He is expected to keep his surroundings clean now.

7159. But there is no power to compel him to do so?—He can be charged with a nuisance under the Nuisance Act or under the general provisions of the Indian Penal Code.

7160. If he does not keep the road in front of his house clean?—I mean his own surroundings.

7161. I have no doubt in your part of the country there used to be a sort of understood rule in the village that every man was responsible for the land on both sides of his house?—Yes, provided that the ground belonged to him.

7162. More than that—I mean the high road opposite to the house?—He is not bound to clean it.

7163. I do not say he is, but suppose the panchayat made a rule making it compulsory on a man to keep the high road clean for a certain length opposite his house under a penalty, would you see any objection to that?—No; such things might be done by the panchayats.

7164. That is to say, you would give them a right to impose such obligations of their own accord?—Yes, if they are willing to do it; and the power should be, in the beginning, such as not to involve much responsibility, and at the same time give an opportunity to these people to be educated in such matters. I would have village panchayats first.

7165. Would you or not give the village panchayats power to impose such obligations on householders in the village?—Yes, that is a reasonable obligation.

7166. Then you say the Collector is very heavily worked?—He is heavily worked; I should like him to have more time to mix with the people.

7167. Is the Divisional Officer also very much overworked?—The Divisional Officer also is overworked, because he has much to do now, and some of the powers of the Collector may be delegated to him.

7168. The jamabandi is done by the Divisional Officer and also by the Collector? The object of the jamabandi is that the officer may pass in review the revenue accounts of the year?—Yes.

7169. And draw his deductions as to the progress of the village or its retrogression?—Yes, and settle all disputes.

7170. And get all the villagers in and hear what they have to say ; in fact, to review generally the state of affairs in the village?—Yes.

7171. As a matter of fact is that done?—It is done. During the time of the jama bandi the other work is practically stopped, and for nearly a month or so almost the full time of the Collector is devoted to this purpose.

7172. How many villages would the average Divisional Officer have to do in the course of the season?—The jama bandi lasts for a month.

7173. How many villages would he have to do the jama bandi of?—Each taluk consists of 250 or 300 villages.

7174. You do not think that the work of the jama bandi does degenerate into mere routine?—Not in our case. Of course there are some officers who take no interest ; such instances are known, but in the instances I have come across at jama bandi these things are carefully gone into.

7175. Another branch of your work consists in revising the calendars of criminal cases?—Yes.

7176. Is that very heavy?—Yes, it gives a great deal of work, because the District Magistrate, if he does his duty conscientiously, has to go through these calendars.

7177. Does he as a matter of fact?—I do.

7178. Can you give me an idea of the number of calendars that come up in the course of the year?—I have got 5 taluks in my district. There are about 500 to 600 cases in each sub-magistrate's file per annum ; that would be 2,500 cases almost.

7179. You examine every one of them?—Every one ; but there are many calendars in which we just see whether there has been much delay, and exercise our judgment.

7180. As a matter of fact is not most of that work done by an office clerk?—Oh no. It is done by myself.

7181. (Chairman.) Do you think there is any obstacle in the way of a British Collector mixing with the people of his Collectorate?—Yes, I think there are several obstacles, and the chief of them is that generally English Collectors are disposed to be exclusive.

7182. They do not as a rule make advances to the native gentry?—There are some Collectors who are very good, but as a rule they are rather exclusive.

7183. Would the Indian population, whether Hindu or Mahomedan, welcome advances made to them?—Certainly. I think this exclusiveness is greatly felt, and as soon as this fetish is overthrown the better for administration.

7184. Would there be anything in the habits or customs of either one race or the other which would naturally exclude them and which would be a fatal obstacle?—There are some such obstacles among Brahmans, but they are disappearing as Western education is progressing. For instance not so many years ago a Brahman would never shake hands or touch anyone who was an alien in religion ; now they take no notice. They have been given a liberal education under the British rule, and they are willing that there shall be better social intercourse between themselves and their English comrades.

7185. And would you say the same of the Muhammadan community?—Yes. The Muhammadans have much in common with the English people, who are "the people of the book."

7186. I may take it then that, while there is no absolute bar to friendship on either side, any advances made by the European officers would be welcome?—Certainly. I think it is highly necessary that such advances should be made, and, as the Collectors are the higher persons, I think the advances should come from them first.

7187. You desire to add something about the Forest Department?—With regard to the forests no doubt the policy of the Government of India is that the Forest Department should be worked for the benefit of the people—the agricultural community—but at the same time in practice that policy is not very much realised. Very often the raiyats do not get the small privileges which might be extended to them without deteriorating the forests. The Collector who is the man on the spot knows all the demands and requirements of the raiyats, but when a representation is made by them, it has to go through the Collector to the Conservators, and the Conservators, who are professional people, look at it from a professional point of view only, and very often the Collector's suggestion is not approved. The result is that the people do not get what they should get and there is great dissatisfaction. I may say at once that on account of the forest laws there is very great dissatisfaction among the agricultural classes, and I think it is a matter which deserves the careful consideration of those in authority. The result is this ; what is not granted to these people fairly is obtained by them unfairly, that is by bribing the forest guards ; they get more than what we could give them fairly, and the whole thing is done in an unsatisfactory way. I should like to have these small forest privileges given to the people.

7188. You would like to see the restrictions which are laid by the present forest laws and regulations upon the village communities bordering on the forests and reserved lands overhauled, with a view to seeing whether small petty restrictions could not be got rid of?—Yes.

7189. Also you imply that the quality of the forest guards requires considerable improvement?—No ; I do not think you could improve the quality of the forest guard very much by giving them one or two rupees more, but I want more superior officers—more rangers and deputy rangers to supervise these subordinates.

(The witness withdrew.)

W. L. HICHENS, Esq.

Mr. N. MACMICHAEL, I.C.S., was called and examined.

Mr. N.
Macmichael.

30 Nov., 1907.

7190. (Chairman.) You are President of the Madras Corporation?—I am Acting President just now. I am a member of the Indian Civil Service, officiating as President of the Municipality during the absence on leave of the permanent President.

7191. Will you briefly state the nature of your duties?—The duties of the President are laid down in Madras Act III. of 1904.

(a) The entire executive power under the Municipal Act vests in the President, and he exercises supervision and control over all municipal officers and servants (Section 20):

- (b) he prepares the Administration Report (Section 30):
- (c) he makes arrangements for the elections of Commissioners (Sections 38-53):
- (d) he appoints and dismisses subordinate officers and servants (Section 58):
- (e) all contracts are made by the President on behalf of the Corporation (Sections 66-67):
- (f) he presides at meetings of the Corporation (Sections 72-80) and of the Standing Committee (Sections 83-85):
- (g) he prepares the budget (Sections 91-98):
- (h) he sees to the collection of taxes and tolls leviable under the Act (Sections 115-191):
- (i) he attends to the distribution of the water supply (Sections 193-196):
- (j) he looks after drains, latrines and urinals (Sections 208-227):
- (k) he is responsible for the maintenance, repair, and protection of the public streets (Sections 229-259):
- (l) he deals with building applications (Sections 260-289):
- (m) he looks after the lighting of the public streets (Section 290):
- (n) he attends to sanitation (Sections 292-403).

7192. The entire executive power of the municipality rests in your hands?—Roughly speaking, yes.

7193. You make reference to a Standing Committee which exists for certain purposes; do you have committees or sub-committees of the Corporation at all?—I have been in the office for seven weeks; there were several committees, I believe, previous to my appointment; the reports of them came before the Corporation during my time; I have not actually sat on any such Committee.

7194. They are not Standing Committees?—No, they are appointed for special purposes. There is a Standing Committee which meets twice a month.

7195. What does that do?—The duties and powers of the Standing Committee are laid forth in section 17 and the following sections of the Act.

7196. There are no Standing Committees in existence for the special consideration of housing, or sanitation, or drainage, or anything of that sort?—Such committees have recently been in existence; I cannot say off-hand whether any such special committee is in existence at the present moment.

7197. Do you find that you can deal with all this mass of detail yourself?—A great deal of that is dealt with by the officers under me, the Engineer, the Revenue Officer, the Health Officer, and so forth.

7198. The duty that is entrusted to you as Chairman has in fact to be done by some other officer, although you are responsible?—Yes; my duty, I should say, consists to a great extent in supervision over these officers.

7199. Is that the principal reason that the Government appoints the Secretary, the Engineer, and the other principal officers of the Corporation?—Because their duties are so important.

7200. Had you been head of a District Board or Municipality before you were appointed to your present position?—I have had about six years' experience as President of a taluk Board; I have only been Chairman of a district municipality for a short time.

7201. From such short experience as you have had during the last seven weeks, could a great deal of your duties be quite as well done by Standing Committees of the Corporation?—I consider that a great deal of the work I have been doing during the last seven weeks should have been done by the clerks in my office; they are hopelessly incompetent to do it in my opinion.

7202. Therefore it would be just as well that the members of the Corporation, who must be interested in the town, should have some power, and it would give them an interest to take part in executive work?—You mean with a view to relieving me of some of my work?

7203. Yes?—The first thing to be done in that direction is to reform the internal constitution of my office. The municipal office is in a hopelessly inefficient state at present.

7204. What we are rather considering is the possible devolution from you of some of your authority and power to somebody else. Would it, or would it not, be well in your judgment to relieve you of some of your executive power, while retaining to you, as Chairman, the directing power?—I am afraid I cannot answer such a question.

7205. Let me put this by way of illustration; the Mayor of a Corporation at home would have under him the Chairmen of different committees, each of whom has within the jurisdiction of his committee large executive powers; the Mayor exercises a general guiding influence. Would the application of some such principle as that be advisable in the case of the Municipality of Madras?—I should say that the present officers under me—the Engineer, the Health Officer, and so on—take the place of such committees.

7206. But you do not think it would be well to substitute for these permanent officials, whom you now have, some members of the Corporation?—Speaking off-hand, I should say that I do not know of any reasons for doing so.

7207. (Sir Frederic Lely.) Do you not find sometimes that your dual capacity produces inconvenience? I suppose a good deal of the discussion in the Corporation consists of criticism, more or less, of your acts as Executive Officer, does it not?—To a certain extent; it is the duty of the Corporation to bring to notice, and they may do so by resolution in the Corporation, cases of neglect in the execution of municipal work or of waste of municipal property.

7208. That is a challenge of your conduct as Executive Officer?—That is a challenge of my conduct as President.

7209. Does that not make your position as President rather anomalous?—I have not considered that point.

7210. Do you not consider that a better arrangement would be to separate the executive authority from the presidency of the Corporation?—The Corporation have absolutely no power to do anything except to express opinions.

7211. Take the officers in charge of particular departments as individuals; could the actual work of those officers be handed over to a committee?—No, the work of the Engineer could not be handed over to a committee unless they were skilled Engineers, nor the work of the Health Officer unless they were skilled Health Officers.

7212. The suggestion is that your executive supervision should be handed over to a committee; as a matter of fact, can executive powers be so well handled by a committee as by an individual?—No.

7214. Are there any duties in regard to sanitation or education or any branch of municipal work in which you think the constitution of a sub-committee would be useful in order to supervise the work of the Executive Officers?—In practically every branch it is most useful that the members should bring to notice any neglect that they see on the part of the executive. Whether the thing can be done any better by having actual sub-committees I should not like to say offhand.

7215. Does the President appoint all the officers, excepting the three officers appointed by the Government—the Engineer, the Secretary, and the Health Officer?—Yes. Under section 58 of the Act.

7216. That is done without consulting the members?—Yes, it rests entirely with the President.

7217. And the President has powers to fine, punish, or dismiss these officers?—Subject to the control of the Local Government.

7218. Is there any appeal from the order of the President?—Section 59 provides that “any municipal servant in receipt of a salary of not less than Rs. 50 per mensem may appeal to the Standing Committee against an order of dismissal by the President, and any such servant in receipt of a salary of not less than Rs. 200 per mensem may further appeal from the order of the Standing Committee to the Corporation.”

7219. Have men who get less than Rs. 50 any sort of appeal against an order of dismissal?—Not that I am aware of.

Mr. H. D. TAYLOR, I.C.S., was called and examined.

Mr. H. D.
Taylor.

30 Nov., 1907.

7223. (Chairman.) You are Secretary of Government in the Local and Municipal Department?—The Local and Municipal, the Educational, and the Legislative Departments.

7224. Will you state briefly the organization of your department and the nature of your duties?—The Local and Municipal Branch deals with and receives references from the following officers or bodies, apart from memorials which may be addressed by private bodies or individuals :

- (a) District Boards (23) ;
- (b) district municipalities (60) ;
- (c) the Madras Corporation ;
- (d) the Military Authorities in matters affecting the budgets, account rules and audit of Cantonment Accounts, Cantonment taxation, and similar matters ;
- (e) the Sanitary Board ;
- (f) the Sanitary Commissioner ;
- (g) the Sanitary Engineer ;
- (h) the Inspector of Boilers.

This covers all matters connected with local and municipal administration on which references are made to Government, the chief of which are the annual reviews for each individual District Board and municipality in regard to budget and administration reports, and the review of the notes of the sanitary and audit inspecting officers ; orders in regard to the increase in municipal taxation ; the sanction to the levy of fees in cases in which the power has not been delegated by Government ; the sanction to revision of the establishments of local bodies, the examination of schemes for the improvement of sanitation, drainage and water supply ; the examination, in consultation with the Financial Department, of applications for loans and grants to local bodies ; the examination of schemes for District Board railways, and all other matters connected with plague, sanitation and vaccination—including matters dealt with in the King Institute of Preventive Medicine ; and the annual reports in connection with these subjects. Also the framing of rules and bye-laws under municipal and local Acts, and decisions in election petitions in which an appeal lies to the Local Government.

Under Education, references are received from the Director of Public Instruction, from the University of Madras, and the Superintendent, Government Central Museum. The references cover a wide field, including the revision of educational rules and the Grant-in-Aid Code, the sanctioning, above certain limits, of grants-in-aid under that Code ; questions relating to the revision of establishment, or for new schemes of educational policy ; the distribution of special grants for special purposes to local and other bodies ; the examination of the budget ; the grant of exemption, in so far as the power has not been delegated under the Public Service Notification ; and the annual review of the administration.

7220. (Mr. Meyer.) Speaking generally as to this Standing Committee in regard to the Executive Officer, is it purely an advisory Council or is its sanction required to a variety of things before the President can act?—It has got a good deal of semi-executive power. Its sanction is required in a great many cases.

7221. In respect of executive acts of yours are there appeals to the Corporation as a whole—speaking generally?—No ; under section 427 of the Act “An appeal shall lie to the Standing Committee” —then follows a long list of orders of mine—“from notices or for action taken or proposed to be taken by the President under various sections ; the decision of the Standing Committee on any such appeal is final.”

7222. Then one may say the executive power is shared between yourself and the Standing Committee?—Yes, the Standing Committee has a considerable amount of practical executive power.

(The witness withdrew.)

The Secretary is the Secretary also to the Legislative Council ; he attends meetings of the Council and of Select Committees, and attends to all legislative business before the Council ; the election and appointment under the President's orders of the Members of the Council ; and to interpellations, memorials and the agenda paper. He is responsible for a record of the proceedings of the Council and for seeing that the various enactments as revised from time to time, are kept up to date, and that revised lists of local rules and orders having the force of law are prepared and published periodically.

He is also, in his official capacity, a member of the Sanitary Board which considers sanitary schemes suggested by local bodies and advises those bodies in connection with such schemes, and sanctions schemes and prepares type designs for sanitary buildings.

The Gazetted Staff under the Local, Municipal, Educational and Legislative Departments is as follows :—

SANITARY DEPARTMENT.

- 1 Sanitary Commissioner.
- 1 Deputy Sanitary Commissioner and Inspector of Vaccination.
- 1 Officer as Superintendent of the King Institute of Preventive Medicine, Guindy.
- 1 Sanitary Engineer.
- 1 Assistant Sanitary Engineer.
- 1 Inspector of Boilers and Prime Movers.
- 1 Assistant Inspector of Boilers.

The District Medical Officers are also District Sanitary Officers. In seven districts, Sanitary Assistants to the District Medical and Sanitary Officers have been appointed. The latter are under the immediate control of the Presidents and are paid from Local Board Funds. They are not Gazetted Officers.

EDUCATIONAL DEPARTMENT.

- 1 Director of Public Instruction.
- 21 Members of the Indian Educational Service—including 3 Inspectresses.
- 41 Members of the Provincial Educational Service.
- 3 Assistant Inspectresses.
- 2 Law College appointments.

I do not consider that the Directors and Inspectors-General perform any specially useful function so far as the Madras Presidency is concerned. I refer more particularly to the Director-General of Education and the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India. I incline to the opinion that their existence must tend in some degree to weaken the authority of the Local Government over its own Executive Officers, though correspondence on personal questions is no longer permitted. The responsibility for the details of local administration must rest with the provincial Heads of Local Departments subject to the general control of the Local Government. These must have a better knowledge of local conditions than a single officer with the Government of India possesses, and probably greater experience. Equally good results could be obtained by conferences once every 3 years or so at a suitable season and centre, where results and conditions could be compared. In the case of Sanitary Commissioners I doubt whether any practical results would follow from such conferences, as their duties are confined mainly to inspection and advice with reference to special local conditions. Directors-General should not be allowed to call for fresh statistics that do not exist in published form.

Schemes of educational reform in recent years date mainly from the Educational Conference of 1901, and hence the initiative has mainly been taken by the Government of India in accordance with the resolutions of that Conference. I am in favour of allowing the Madras Government to develop its educational policy on its own lines, in accordance with the funds which may, from time to time, be available to meet the cost of such development, adopting such suggestions from other provinces as may be found suited to the local conditions of this Presidency. If any special schemes involving a large outlay, which do not form an item in the provincial programme of development, are undertaken owing to a mandate from, or at the instance of, the Government of India, financial assistance should be given by the Government of India to the Local Government to the extent necessary for giving effect to those proposals.

I do not consider that of recent years there has been in the Educational and Local and Municipal Departments any material increase in the demand for statistics. The statistics as embodied in the annual administration reports on Education, Local Boards and Municipalities, Sanitation and Vaccination, have been accepted as sufficient for some years with few variations. For the Madras Municipality new details as to the causation of deaths and vital statistics were called for recently. The alterations in the educational rules have led to some slight revision of the forms submitted by local bodies in the matter of education.

Subordinate officers are bound to send on to Government all appeals addressed to Government, whether an appeal lies or not by rule, and whether or no the question has already been decided. Officers might be authorised to withhold appeals in such cases, and send an annual list to the Government. When a case has been decided by the appellate authority, it should not be reopened except upon a certificate of the authority passing the order that it contains new matter such as materially to affect the merits of the case. Second appeals might be disallowed except in such cases. As to appeals by local and municipal servants, these are governed by rule under article 24, Municipal Account Code, and Articles 414 to 421, Local Fund Code. The final powers of Presidents of District and taluk Boards might well be enhanced. There should be no appeal against fines up to Rs. 5, or against orders of suspension up to one month in the case of Local Board servants.

There are under the Madras Government 23 District Boards with 82 taluk Boards and 382 unions subordinate to them. There are 60 district municipalities in addition to the Presidency Municipality. Section 288 of the District Municipalities Act, 1884, and section 160 of the Madras Local Boards Act, 1884, authorise the delegation by the Local Government to any person of all powers except those specified in the first chapters of those Acts. Similarly section 159 of the Local Boards Act, 1884, authorises the Local Government to delegate to any person any of the powers conferred on the Collector by that Act. The Madras City Municipal Act, 1904, does not provide for the grant of any powers by delegation. The powers of the Local Government have already been delegated to a considerable extent in minor matters relating to Local Fund and municipal administration to Presidents of District Boards and to Collectors respectively. Cases in which further delegation appears possible are dealt with from time to time as they are brought to notice. The question of the extent to which further delegation of powers could be extended under the District Municipalities Act was reviewed in detail only two years ago. It does not appear possible to delegate additional powers to municipal Councils to any material extent except in regard to the creation of new appointments and revision of establishments; these bodies already enjoy a considerable amount of freedom in regard to expenditure from their balances. Under the existing financial rules such freedom has not hitherto been permitted to Local Boards, and the restrictions in that respect have, in my opinion, been detrimental to the administration of those bodies, and have led to the accumulation of considerable balances. The finances of the Boards can be dealt with by the Local Government individually and not as a whole without reference to the Government of India. Local bodies have ample discretion, within their means, for the selection of works for execution, but there is a great tendency for them to fail to discriminate between charges of a recurring and non-recurring nature, and to submit proposals for the former on the strength of a balance or of savings in a single year, without seeing whether the charge can be met in future years from the expansion of their normal income.

I consider that some concession might be made to the Corporation of Madras in regard to the power to create minor appointments up to a certain limit, and to revise establishments within that limit. There are also certain other powers as to local taxation under section 57 (iii), (v), (vi) and (vii) of the Local Boards Act that might in my opinion be delegated to District Boards, and the appointment of members of union panchayats might be delegated to Revenue Divisional Officers. If it be held that the Government are to have ultimate responsibility for the proper administration of local affairs then I doubt whether further concessions should be made. But if the local bodies are to bear the entire responsibility, these concessions might be granted. I should however view with some misgiving the grant of full control as likely to lead to waste and extravagance. In the case of such powers being granted, final control would have to be left to the auditor, and there should be no coming up to Government with applications to whitewash irregular expenditure, which so often occurs at present. If extended powers are given to municipal Councils I think that the standard of franchise should be raised. I am not convinced that the present standard secures efficient representation or the selection of candidates best qualified to hold responsible office.

So far as my own personal experience as Collector goes, the creation of District Advisory Councils would not serve any useful purpose. A Collector who knows and takes an interest in the administration of his district possesses all the facilities that he requires for obtaining the opinions of leading gentlemen in the district on points on which their advice may be of value both generally and as to local details. The appointment of a definite Council might limit his powers and facilities in this respect.

I do not consider it desirable to give District Boards any power of control over the smaller municipalities. Such a proposal would not fit in with the system which prevails in this Presidency. Of the 60 municipalities, only three—two of which are Hill municipalities—have a population of less than 10,000, while there are only five with a population between 10,000 and 15,000. The municipal Councils have no official representation on the District Boards, while the funds of the two bodies are raised from different sources and assessed on different principles. It might be desirable on the other hand to abolish one or two of the smaller municipalities in the plains and to place them in the position of unions, and thereby bring them within the ordinary Local Fund system.

7225. Do the District Boards and municipalities cause you a considerable amount of correspondence?—A very great deal of correspondence.

Mr. H. D.
Taylor.

30 Nov., 1907.

Mr. H. D.
Taylor.

30 Nov., 1907.

7226. Could you give us any sort of idea what the proportion of time is that they occupy of yourself and your staff?—The Department is separately staffed; for the Educational Branch we have a separate class of staff, and again in the Legislative and again in the Municipal Branches. Almost the full time of the municipal section is taken up with the District Boards and municipalities; there is sanitary work as well.

7227. What staff have you in the Local and Municipal Department?—About 30 altogether.

7228. What proportion is that to the size of the Educational Department staff?—The Educational and Legislative staff only numbers about six.

7229. Amongst your duties you are a member of the Sanitary Board. Has the Sanitary Board, which consists of yourself, the Sanitary Commissioner, and the Engineer-in-Chief, any power of deciding upon the schemes which are submitted to them?—To a certain limit.

7230. What is that?—Under the rules of the Sanitary Board, as approved by Government, all schemes for sanitary improvements estimated to cost over Rs. 500, received from municipalities or local bodies, have first of all to be approved. Plans and estimates for such schemes are sent through the Sanitary Engineer to the Sanitary Board. The Sanitary Engineer himself disposes of all schemes estimated to cost between Rs. 500 and Rs. 1,000; anything over that has to come on to the Sanitary Board, and in minor schemes they express final approval.

7231. But have they power of decision; can they say, "Yes, we pass this scheme," or send it back?—They approve it with, or without, modifications, but the municipal Council or the Local Board will have to adopt it and sanction the estimate, and allot funds for the work. There is a difference between a general approval of the scheme and sanction to the estimates; sanctioning estimates is the province of the Sanitary Engineer up to a certain amount, or of the Public Works Department in excess of that amount—that is in cases of schemes involving an expenditure of Rs. 10,000 and upwards.

7232. Does the Sanitary Board stand in the place of the Local Government Board in England; has the Sanitary Board power to say to a District Board or a taluk Board which sends it up a scheme, "Yes, we sanction this scheme and you can spend the money"?—No. It has no such power; it has no control over the funds; it may sanction a minor scheme administratively, as being sanitariously sound.

7233. Could it finally sanction and dispose of a scheme sent up to it by the District Board?—It can sanction a scheme up to Rs. 10,000; anything over that would go to Government. That does not mean sanctioning the funds. The Board has no control over the funds.

7234. Suppose they say, "This is a good scheme, we approve of it," then there is no further appeal as to the soundness of the scheme?—No, except that there is a technical scrutiny over the estimates, which is exercised as an executive duty by the Sanitary Engineer up to Rs. 10,000.

7235. Therefore the Sanitary Board has no ultimate power of decision; after all the review they give a scheme it has to go somewhere else, first for financial, and secondly for technical, scrutiny?—Practically. They are really advisory; they are advisory up to certain limits.

7236. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) As to this Rs. 10,000 limit; the work comes from the District Board through the Sanitary Engineer and the Sanitary Commissioner to the Sanitary Board?—Yes.

7237. So that so far as the approval of the scheme up to Rs. 10,000 is concerned, it goes nowhere else?—No, the Government do not express specific approval of schemes below that limit; unless the question of a provincial grant or loan has to be considered the Board has final control except as to the provision of funds and the technical scrutiny of the scheme.

7238. (Chairman.) Practically, therefore, every scheme has first of all to go to your colleague, the Surgeon-General, who sees it once, to your colleague, the Chief Engineer, who sees it twice, and to yourself who see it twice, first as a member of the Sanitary Board, and then as Secretary of the Local and Municipal Department?—I should not see minor schemes, below the limit requiring the sanction of Government, more than once.

7239. What is that limit?—There is practically no limit; proposals would only come to Government when there was a question of providing the funds when the application is made by the Board. Local Boards can sanction estimates for ordinary works themselves up to Rs. 2,500 or up to Rs. 5,000 when they do not include special masonry work.

7240. Then over Rs. 2,500 they come to you twice if they include masonry?—Sometimes proposals for works come to me twice, sometimes three times. On the Sanitary Board I can merely advise from the point of view of the interests of the Local Board.

7241. As Secretary of the Local and Municipal Department you advise again?—Yes.

7242. Therefore you advise twice on nearly every scheme of over Rs. 2,500?—On such sanitary schemes as come up to me in the Government I advise twice.

7243. Is that a good system?—It causes delay, but I think it prevents waste.

7244. It does not prevent waste of time?—It does not prevent waste of time, if you put it in that way.

7245. Is the decision you give as Local and Municipal Secretary any better than the decision and advice you give as member of the Sanitary Board?—When a matter comes up to me as Secretary of Government, the question is one of ways and means and financing.

7246. But you do not settle the question of financing?—I have to discuss it and see if it is a question of a loan or how funds can be provided; then the Financial Department has to be addressed on the subject as to whether the loan shall be sanctioned.

7247. Why should not the Sanitary Commissioner address the department straight away?—Because he has not the knowledge of the financial conditions of the local body.

7248. If he has no knowledge, what is the good of consulting him?—He is purely advisory on matters of sanitation.

7249. Does the Financial Department advise on sanitation?—No; if it is a question of a grant from Government or of a loan from Government funds it must go to the Financial Department in order that allotments may be made.

7250. You, as a member of the Sanitary Board, have the knowledge at your disposal whether or not it is in accordance with your general regulations in the Local and Municipal Department; the Engineer, as an expert, has technical knowledge which enables him to criticise the scheme; why should your decision as members of that Board not be final instead of referring it to yourselves in some other capacity?—Because the Board merely decides on the sanitary aspect of the scheme without reference to the financial conditions.

7251. Cannot you do that at one and the same time?—No, the Sanitary Board has the records, for one thing. In some minor works I am inclined to think that the Sanitary Board might be given certain powers of disposal.

7252. You think that reference to the same people on two or three occasions is necessary in all these matters?—Reference is made on different points; one is whether the scheme is satisfactory from the sanitary point of view; the other is whether it is feasible from a financial point of view.

7253. And the same person cannot decide those two?—No; because as Secretary of the Government in the Local and Municipal Department I cannot say whether a scheme is sanitarily sound without the advice of the expert.

7254. Have you not got the advice of the expert; if not, what is the use of your Sanitary Engineer and Surgeon-General?—But we have to get that advice.

7255. But you have it when you are on the Sanitary Board; they are sitting by your side?—There is the further question of the provision of funds.

7256. Do you not think that the Sanitary Board ought to have the final power, consisting as it does of experts?—But the Board has not the materials upon which to form an opinion as to the practical aspects of the scheme.

7257. You say that annual reviews for each individual district come up to your department; how many such reviews reach you?—There are reviews from 60 municipalities, one from the Presidency Municipality, and 23 from the 23 Local Boards; the same with the budgets.

7258. Are all these annual reports necessary?—I think it is necessary that Government should know generally how the local administration is going on. If Government are supposed to exercise any control and to have any care for the ratepayers—the people who pay the local rates—then I think it is necessary that the Government should have some idea of how the money is spent.

7259. But only under those conditions?—That is a matter of principle; I am assuming that Government is responsible for seeing how the money is spent. Whether the Government has that responsibility or not is a matter of principle.

7260. Then if there was a very marked freedom given to the municipalities and District Boards, these annual reports and their return to your department would cease to be necessary?—I think they would still be very advisable; in many cases, for instance, the Government make large grants of money for roads, education, and other purposes; the Government ought to know how the money that comes, not from the local taxpayer but from the general taxpayer, is spent.

7261. You read all these reports yourself?—Yes.

7262. It takes time?—Yes; I cannot say that I read every word of them; I glance through them and I have tabulated statements which I check and compare.

7263. Is that a really necessary part of your work?—I think it is essential so long as the Government retain control, they should know how the money is being spent.

7264. There are something like 150 of these reports received?—I get 84 budgets, and 84 administration reports in the Local and Municipal Department; that is apart from the sanitary reviews, of course.

7265. Are these 170 which you have just referred to different from the annual administration reports?—There are 84 annual administration reports; there are 84 Local Boards and municipalities, and there are 84 budgets.

7266. Then besides that?—There are audit reports and reports of the Sanitary Commissioner.

7267. One each?—Not one each year; the Sanitary Commissioner inspects all the municipalities about once in four or five years.

7268. And you get reports from the Engineer upon sanitation as well as the Sanitary Board's report?—No, only as to special schemes—water supply and drainage.

7269. Therefore the greater part of your time is taken up by reading these reports?—A very considerable portion of the time is taken up by reviewing them.

7270. And you think that it is necessary to do that?—Yes; if the principle of Government control is upheld.

7271. Are there any necessary powers which could be usefully delegated to the Director of Public Instruction?—Yes, there are a certain number of powers that could be delegated to the Director of Public Instruction.

7272. You hand in a schedule of those powers?—Yes.

7273. All these are trifling questions?—Yes, that is my opinion; I cannot give the view of the Government, of course. There is one item here about the Lawrence Asylum; that is rather an important and special institution, and I think a certain number of papers should come to the Government with regard to that.

7274. As to these questions which are referred to, how many of these do you actually settle yourself?—It depends a great deal on the nature of the paper and whether any principle is involved.

7275. I will not say all, but some, at all events, of these reports, are submitted to you by officers who have equal experience with yourself?—Yes.

7276. Some of them perhaps by officers who have even longer experience than you?—Yes.

7277. Therefore unless there is some special reason such as the accumulation of decided cases, it would appear at first sight that some of your powers as Secretary might reasonably be delegated to an officer, or officers, who have equal experience with yourself, or even greater experience. What sort of proportion of cases which come to you are decided by you without reference to the Member?—I should say roughly about half or, perhaps, a little more—that is, in volume. Of course, a number of those routine questions are merely Gazette notifications; those go to the Assistant Secretary and not to me at all.

7278. Matters which for the convenience of Government must be notified and sent up to you for publication?—Yes.

7279. Of the half which you settle yourself, what sort of proportion in number do you think could be settled without reference to yourself?—Under the rules the sanction of Government has to be obtained to all establishments.

7280. Do not let us deal with the rules; let us deal with this from your own view of your work without consideration of any existing regulations. What amount of that work do you think could be practically settled by the officer who now has to refer them to you, without harm to the system of government generally?—I should think perhaps one-tenth; I am going very largely upon sanctions for establishments; I happen to know the figures of those.

7281. Then of the remaining one-half of the work which comes to you which requires the consideration of the Member of Council?—It is difficult to say; it all depends on the nature of the proposals; if there is any principle involved, of course it must go to the Member in the absence of a precedent.

7282. You think the remainder really requires the attention of the Member of Council?—Yes, I should say so; I do not speak of the number of papers but of the volume of work.

7283. Is this in reference to all your duties?—That is only as to the Local and Municipal Department. In education I should say that a larger proportion of papers goes to the Member of Council for decision.

7284. Have you with regard to these other matters that come under your notice got similar proposals to those which you make with regard to education?—No; powers have been very largely delegated to Collectors in regard to municipal affairs, and two years ago Government went very carefully over the lists to see what further powers could be delegated.

7285. You think that that has pretty well cleared off what, in your view, could be so delegated?—Under the existing law, yes.

7286. But what could be delegated suppose the law was profitably amended—could there be a much greater delegation?—There could be no further delegation under an amendment of the law, because the present Local and Municipal Acts provide for the delegation of every power except under Chapters I, which relate to the constitution; those powers could not be delegated.

7287. You say that the power to impose local and municipal taxation on railway administrations has not yet been delegated?—No; it could be delegated under the Indian Railways Act, but it has not been delegated by the Government of India.

7288. Could it usefully be delegated?—I think it would save a great deal of correspondence; the proposals are always approved; we always consult the Railway Department and the local bodies; then we write to the Railway Board, and, as a matter of fact, no representation has ever been refused, so far as I know.

7289. Therefore, from your experience, if the Government of India laid down some general rules for guidance, that delegation could safely be made?—Yes.

7290. And it would save a great deal of correspondence?—It would save about 12 letters a year.

7291. Somewhat lengthy letters?—These routine letters are rather lengthy because they have to give the facts and a statement of the services rendered by the local body.

7292. Then there is a delegation with regard to tramways which you would rather desire to have?—That is a delegation in the case of tramway lines outside the municipal limits; a tramway may run outside the municipal limits for a hundred yards; in that case the sanction of the Government of India has to be obtained. That would require an amendment of the Act; it could not be delegated outside the Act. It is not a very important matter; there are only a few references under the Act, but still they seem unnecessary.

7293. You are in favour of power being given to you for local purposes to borrow in the local market?—Yes, in the local market for local purposes by local bodies; I do not mean by the Local Government, but by the municipalities and District Boards.

7294. Would there be any difficulty in finding the money locally?—There might be, except at certain seasons of the year. Perhaps between June and October it might be easier; there is only one big case in which this has happened; that was the Tanjore District Board Railway.

7295. In that case it was rather a failure?—That was a failure partly because the Tanjore District Board Railway is not guaranteed by any special cess. The Tanjore District Board instead of levying land cess at the maximum rate, as it might have done under the Act, levied only a portion of the cess for ordinary purposes, and devoted the balance to a special railway guarantee fund. Therefore this railway loan is not guaranteed by a cess as in the case of other District Board loans.

7296. Were the Board unanimous in the matter?—I believe they were quite unanimous. I think, as a matter of fact, that of the total amount only about 7 lakhs was raised in the open market, and Government gave a loan for the rest.

7297. Would people in the locality, who are now in the habit of hoarding their money, be willing to take up District Board, or local municipality paper?—I think so at a reasonable interest—about 4½ per cent. There have been two or three cases in which small loans have been taken up.

7298. With regard to the Inspectors-General, must responsibility for the details of local administration rest with the provincial Heads of Local Departments?—I think they have most local experience, and they know best how to apply that experience by general principles to local conditions.

7299. You are not very anxious to have the interference of Directors-General and Inspectors-General because the provincial Government, through their Heads of Departments, know what is going on in the Presidency much better than a Director-General can?—I think so.

7300. Does the provincial Government, as far as you are concerned, consider that the officers under them—the District and Divisional Officers—have the same claim to non-interference?—I have no idea what the views of the provincial Government are. My own personal view is this. There might be delegation to a certain extent, but taking education for instance, the allotment of funds must rest more or less with the Director of Public Instruction because he has to consider the needs of the whole Presidency; whereas, if you delegate those powers to Inspectors and lower down the scale, they would want to get too large a share for their special district; therefore, there must be control.

7301. Are the Government of India justified in requiring some amount of supervision over the way in which the money which they allot for certain purposes, is spent?—I think the Local Government can be trusted to a greater extent to deal with allotments of funds than individual subordinates of the Government. It is a body that on the whole has more experience and a wider view of general policy, especially when you have to consider departmental interests against local interests; these interests have to be weighed in the balance very often, especially with regard to schools.

7302. Is the Director of Public Instruction of the same opinion as yourself with regard to these matters?—I believe he differs from me; he is inclined to departmentalise too much, specially with regard to Local Board schools. Some time ago a proposal was made that the Local Board should make a lump contribution to the department for educational purposes. I differ personally from that view. I think that the Local Board should have more control over the Local Board schools, and that they should not be entirely departmentalised.

7303. Does the Director of Public Instruction share your view as to the utility, or otherwise, of the Director-General of Public Instruction?—I have spoken to him about it, but I think he does not consider the appointment of much material use.

7304. The provincial Director of Public Instruction thinks that it is good to have a Director-General and that there is a greater chance of getting schemes sanctioned and funds allotted by the Government of India if there is a Director-General as an expert adviser to the Government of India?—I am rather inclined to doubt that. I do not think we have had any moral help in getting schemes sanctioned. In one matter with regard to a scheme for the re-organisation of Training Schools we were very much delayed; we pressed for a moderate instalment of reform; the Director-General did not understand our system and thought it covered much more than it did; we were only asking as to part, while he thought we were asking for the whole, and that led to delay.

7305. Your view is that any knowledge which the Director-General gets together from the different parts of India might make him tend towards an undesirable uniformity?—It might be so.

7306. And that if the provincial scheme differed from his view of the desirability of uniformity, the scrutiny of the Government of India might be a drawback to your getting a scheme which would exactly suit the requirements of the Presidency?—That is possible.

7307. Would it be probable?—I think it very likely would happen.

7308. Have you ever asked for, or adopted, suggestions from other provinces in this matter of education?—Not by Government. There was a conference two years ago of Directors of Public Instruction at which they compared views, but there were no formal resolutions passed; they compared their views, and if they found anything good in one province which they thought might be useful for adoption in another, they resolved upon adopting it accordingly.

7309. Have you, as a matter of fact, apart from that conference, ever asked for, or adopted, suggestions from other provinces?—There has been a tendency lately with regard to the rural schools to attach a small garden to the schools. That idea was taken from the Central Provinces, I think.

7310. Is that the only case?—There might be other cases, but generally, I think, we have worked out our own policy as far as possible.

7311. Then you say: "There has not been any material increase in the demand for statistics"; you mean demand by whom?—By the Government of India.

7312. Do all these statistics which we have had referred to, the vital statistics and so forth, come to you?—The vital statistics are tabulated by the Sanitary Commissioner and are published in the Gazette, and a copy is sent to Government once every month.

7313. You, of course, see a great deal of the work of these municipalities and District Boards?—On paper.

7314. Do you ever get any suggestions from the Chairmen of these District Boards—from the District Magistrate in his capacity as Chairman of a District Board—as to how things might or might not be done?—No, the resolutions of the District Board are sent up for sanction or approval, and the resolutions contain the proposals.

7315. Suppose you got a suggestion from the Chairman of a District Board that such and such a course ought to be adopted in regard to some matter under discussion, would you think that he was exceeding his powers?—Certainly not. Frequently proposals come up for altering certain Code rules; they are always considered.

7316. I do not mean from the District Boards, but from the Chairman of the District Board. Suppose the Government disagrees with the proposals of the District Board, what happens?—If the Chairman of a District Board sent up a proposal, unsupported by a resolution, he would be told to place it before the District Board and to obtain the District Board's opinion.

7317. If there were suggestions and proposals as to the method of managing business in one of these municipalities, you would not send them back to him with a rebuke?—Certainly not; I think that any reasonable proposal would be considered.

7318. A good deal depends on the interpretation of the word "reasonable"?—It is a question of degree, certainly.

7319. But you do not perhaps, as a matter of fact, get these suggestions?—No, I do not think we have very many suggestions except as to special points on existing Codes.

7320. You are not in favour of the delegation of additional powers to municipal Councils, or District Boards?—Municipal Councils and District Boards must be considered more or less differently.

7321. Might further powers be delegated to the municipal Council?—As at present constituted, I doubt it.

7322. One of the witnesses has said that the control of Government is such that there is little scope for self-government remaining; you would not agree with that view, as regards municipalities?—I think municipalities have a fairly free hand; they can allot from their balance up to a limit of Rs. 500 for individual works.

7323. Is that giving them a free hand in administration?—Well, if the budget proposals come up they are considered; if there is no reason on financial grounds why they should not be carried through they are nearly always adopted; but the tendency is for establishments to go up by leaps and bounds without reference to financial considerations.

7324. Your experience is that the general idea of every municipality is not to clean streets, or light roads, or to make sanitary improvements, but to make appointments for people in the municipalities?—I think that with regard to a great number of the proposals it is not so much the proposals for appointments themselves as the form in which they come; they ask for petty increases which are not justified; a man may have served as a peon at Rs. 8, that being the market value of his labour; a proposal comes up to raise his pay to Rs. 9 on personal grounds—not to raise the pay of peons generally, but to raise the pay of that particular peon; then that man dies and another appointment has to be made; that man starts, of course, at Rs. 9; he serves for a number of years, then another personal proposal is made to increase his pay to Rs. 10; so that the pay of the post—not of the man—is raised to Rs. 10; that goes on indefinitely.

7326. Do you think they would be so far forgetful of the length or shortness of their own purses that they would not get rather tired of this in time?—With greater responsibility it is quite possible that they might, but at present I believe that a large number of these proposals come to Government simply in order to throw upon Government the odium of refusing them; if they had greater responsibility they might exercise better discretion.

7327. Is it not desirable, in order to relieve Government of the odium which you say now attaches to them, to give the responsibility of refusal to the municipalities?—Provided the municipalities are entirely responsible for their own finances and held to be so; if that principle is conceded then I would give them the power.

7328. Therefore, if it was made clear to the municipalities that any extravagance would have to be met out of their own funds and could not be made up by provincial funds, you would be in favour of increasing their powers?—A trial might be made.

7329. And might be usefully made?—I will not say usefully; I do not know that the money would be expended usefully in all cases; in many cases it might.

7330. Are people ever likely to run unless they begin by walking?—It is hardly possible.

7331. Therefore, if you are ever to educate the people into self-government within their own doors, they must be allowed to make some mistakes?—Yes, I think so.

7332. It might be useful after all, notwithstanding possible financial blunders, to give the municipalities more power than they have?—Yes, but the franchise should be enhanced so as to improve the administration and so as to ensure a better class for municipal Councillors than in some cases exist. I do not for a moment say that there are not some very excellent gentlemen on the Councils doing excellent work, but the tendency of the municipal Councils is such that many gentlemen who are qualified to sit upon them and who would otherwise stand for election, will not do so.

7333. The whole of the municipal expenditure is met by municipal rates or cesses?—Not the whole; there are contributions or grants from Government in some cases.

7334. Do you know to what extent?—There is a question of these aided schools—schools which are aided through the Local Boards—by Government money given through the Local Boards; I think that might have to be changed.

7335. I am talking of municipalities?—The municipalities in the same way get certain grants.

7336. Therefore a certain proportion of municipal income is derived from grants-in-aid made by the provincial Government?—Yes.

7337. What is that proportion?—I believe Government gave last year about Rs. 60,000 for grants-in-aid to municipalities for education, and they have given a special grant for improving the standard of municipal elementary schools of about Rs. 17,000.

7338. What would that represent in proportion of the municipal income?—The municipal income

Taylor.

Mr. H. D.

is about 33 lakhs. I suppose the proportion contributed by Government would be about 2 per cent.; that is leaving out special grants for special schemes like water-supply and drainage, which amount to very large figures. That is why I think in many cases provincial control should be retained, because otherwise Government would have no security for the money it has advanced or granted for these special works.

7339. Would not that control, which in these cases seems to be essential, be met by the submission to, and approval by, the Government, of the particular scheme towards which they were to lend money?—That would not show whether taxation had to be enhanced to meet the interest on the capital involved in the scheme. All these schemes have to be very carefully examined, not only with reference to the schemes themselves, and their cost, and the details, but also with reference to the finances of the municipality, in order to make certain that the municipal finances can stand the expenditure.

7340. Would you give much the same sort of opinion with regard to the District Boards and taluk Boards?—I hope that there will be a change next year, but hitherto the District Boards and taluk Boards have not been allowed to make any allotments from their balances owing to the inclusion of the local finances in the general provincial and imperial budgets.

7341. You have seen the Resolution of the Government of India regarding the separation of Imperial and local finance?—I have seen the Resolution, but I am not quite sure how the account portion of it is to be dealt with. If the local bodies are given a free hand over their balances it will prevent accumulation. Hitherto the budgets have had to come up; there are 23 individual budgets; these are carefully reviewed; the totals under each head are then sent up to the Government of India and the necessary reductions are made. For the current year, after the budgets were reviewed, and the totals made up, the Government of India reduced the totals by 4 lakhs for works, and 2 lakhs for education. The budget proposals have thus all to be reviewed a second time. The result is that Local Boards, within their budgets, and Government, within the totals, cannot reappropriate. It is true that we are allowed to reappropriate under the rules. The taluk Boards meet once a month; it may take two months before we get estimates from all the District Boards, and by that time conditions have changed altogether. Not only that, but the past system has retarded the preparation and issue of the budgets; also they have had to be prepared on four or five months' actuals instead of coming in and being prepared more up to date.

7342. Then will this separation between imperial and local expenditure result in a reduction by a considerable amount of correspondence between you and the Government of India; will it reduce the correspondence between you and the local bodies?—It might tend to increase the correspondence if the sanction of the Government has to be obtained to allotments in excess of a certain amount; otherwise it would decrease correspondence on the budgets and it would decrease budget work; we should get budgets out much more quickly.

7343. Would it be advisable to delegate all this to the District Boards and municipalities?—Perhaps it might.

7344. Would it not be advisable to delegate to District Boards the power to spend their balances?—To a certain extent.

7345. At present that would have to come to you?—At present there are no rules; specific proposals for expenditure from balances have to go to the Government of India.

7346. Could not the Board of Revenue be consulted?—The Board of Revenue has nothing to do with such proposals, which come to the Local Government direct. I would give the District Boards power to spend up to Rs. 2,500 on individual items, provided that the balance was not reduced below 5 per cent.; if the cost of any proposal, not included in the budget, exceeded that limit, I should say let it come up for Government sanction.

7347. Is there no sort of via media between the ultimate responsibility of the Government and that of the local authority?—I do not think so. It is a question of principle; either the Local Board must be responsible, or the Government—one or the other must be responsible. If the Government is responsible they must hold control especially in matters where they give funds from the pockets of the general ratepayer.

7348. Do you know whether, as a matter of fact, in other countries Government makes grants-in-aid to local authorities without assuming control at all over the way in which the money they so grant is spent?—I am not aware of that. I believe that in England everything is under strict rules and under the control of the Auditor.

7349. Have you no audit of these Local Boards?—Yes, there is the Accountant-General's audit.

7350. Might not the audit be the via media?—We must have rules here and a strict audit.

7351. Is there not a local audit now?—Yes.

7352. Might that not be trusted?—No, I think that the local audit staff is not sufficiently strong.

7353. Not sufficiently strong, or not sufficiently honest?—The pay of the highest clerks is about Rs. 70.

7354. Therefore, do you mean they are not sufficiently honest?—Perhaps they are hardly sufficiently reliable.

7355. Could not that be improved?—At considerable expense.

7356. We had a suggestion made to us that the District Board should be abolished, and one witness in reply to that suggestion said that the substitution of a strong taluk Board for the present District Board would entail a very large increase of correspondence with the Collector first of all and then with your department; do you think that that would be so?—There are 82 taluk Boards at present and there are 23 District Boards; that means that the work would be four times as much.

7357. Would it necessarily be four times as much?—I think so under the present system; at present the proposals of the taluk Board come through the President of the District Board.

7359. And the District Magistrate, who is now President of the District Board, and, therefore, I suppose, the real supervisor of all these taluk budgets, would not be able to deal with new taluk Board budgets?—He could allot funds for distribution subject to the sanction of the Government as is done at present.

7360. Does he not practically control the taluk Board budgets at the present moment?—No, I do not say so. The Revenue Divisional Officer is President of the taluk Board and the members of the Board meet together and they consider their budget; these budgets are then sent up to the District Board where they are discussed and tabulated; if additional funds are required, the District Board consider what allotments can be made.

7361. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) You suggest that the result of the recent orders of the Government of India excluding District and Local Funds from their budget should tend largely to freedom and elasticity in the administration of the funds of the Local Boards compared with the present system?—Yes, and saving in time.

7362. Might similar results follow a separation between imperial and provincial funds?—I have no particular knowledge of the absolute financial relations between the Imperial and provincial Governments; there is a difference in that there are 23 separate District Boards, and that means 23 separate budgets; it is impossible to reappropriate from one District Board budget to another, without referring to them all. That is the difference between the relations of the Government of India and the provincial Government, and those between the provincial Government and the District Boards.

7363. In that case the provincial Government as regards provincial finance would be in the position that the District Board occupies towards the provincial Government in the separation I suggest. Would they not get greater freedom and elasticity in dealing with their own revenues if they were separated?—That I cannot say; I know nothing about the distribution and so on between the other departments, except as regards education.

7364. You are not in favour of the Director-General of Public Instruction; you think he is not much use to you?—I do not consider that he serves any useful purpose; I have no opinion one way or the other; as long as he does not interfere he may be a very useful adviser to the Government of India.

7365. Could he not fairly help the Home Department and the Government of India to understand the technical part of educational references?—Perhaps he might not have the experience; he may be a new man without any knowledge or technical experience of Indian conditions.

7366. But you would admit that it is a possibility?—He might be useful to the Government of India, but my contention is that he is no real use, so far as I can see, to the provincial Government.

7367. You are acquainted with an important review issued in 1904 of educational matters?—Yes, as the result of the Educational Conference of 1902.

7368. That is a useful document to all provincial Governments?—Yes; it has practically decided many questions; a lot of proposals were suggested before; they are not all original proposals of the Government of India; they embodied proposals made by Local Governments previously which had been under consideration for some time.

7369. So long as things of that sort are not imposed upon you by the Government of India, but you are allowed to adopt them if you like, you agree that that would be a useful document?—Yes.

7370. And similarly as to the annual reports of the Sanitary Commissioner and the Surgeon-General, are they not very useful?—I do not think they are of any material use, because our own Sanitary Commissioner deals with the local conditions on the spot.

7371. My point is that it is not a useless function to have somebody in the centre who can collect information and disseminate it?—That may be the case.

7372. So long as it is not disseminated in the form of orders?—Just so, and so long as our officers are not called upon to spend their time in tabulating special statistics.

7373. You think that the central officer ought not to be allowed to call for special statistics at all?—No.

7374. Would you allow him to correspond at all, or simply to take what he can get from the annual returns?—I would allow him to apply to the Government of India for anything he required, and if they thought it necessary, they could call upon us for the information.

7375. Then you say that local officers have no power to dispose of appeals addressed to the Local Government?—No, they must send them on.

7376. Whether they have been decided already, or not?—There are cases within my experience where I had to send an exactly similar appeal on the same facts twice, which had already been rejected by the Government.

7377. Would it not be simpler to give power to Local Governments to deal with such appeals?—I think so, unless it could be certified that there were any new facts upon which the case could be re-opened.

7378. You suggest an annual return; is that not too long a period?—It is a long time; I put it down as annual so as not to increase statistics, but half-yearly or quarterly would be quite as good.

7379. Suppose Government thought that there was something in the petition that had been wrongly withheld, it would take a long time to right the wrong, if there were a wrong?—That would be the case.

7380. Now, what happens to appeals from Local Fund and municipal servants; do they ever come up to you?—If the appointment is one which requires the sanction of Government then the appeal lies to the Government only.

7381. In the case of a subordinate of a lesser status where does he appeal to?—In the case of a servant of the panchayat the appeal is to the President of the taluk Board; in the case of the servant of a taluk Board, there is no appeal up to one rupee fine, which seems a very small limit; any fine in excess of that, or any suspension or dismissal, goes to the President of the District Board; in the case of servants drawing a salary of Rs. 50 and upwards there is a further appeal to the District Board.

7382. Does it stop at the District Board?—Yes, unless it is a case of some Government servant, such as a medical subordinate, or some one in whose case the sanction of the Government is required to the appointment; that is at present, for Local Board servants, anything under Rs. 150, and in the case of district municipalities, Rs. 50.

7383. You do not think that the appeal might lie from the executive of the Board or municipality concerned, to the general body, and stop there for servants of those bodies?—Yes, except in the case of servants lent by the Government.

7384. Why should you make that exception?—Because I think that being the servants of Government, they have the right to appeal to Government, whose servants they are.

7385. If they were dismissed, it would only mean that they would have ceased to serve the particular Board?—It would leave a stigma upon a man for life.

7386. You think that the fact that the first punishment has been in the case of Local Boards by either the Sub-Divisional Officer, or the Collector, would not suffice?—Not in the case of a special department such as the Medical Department.

7387. You make that exception?—Yes, especially with the Medical Department and of Government servants generally.

7388. You have got in your Municipal Act, section 288, which enables the Governor in Council to authorise any person to exercise any one or more of the powers vested in him by this Act save and except those mentioned in Chapter I, and the Governor may at any time and in like manner withdraw such authority. Chapter I simply refers to the constitution of the local bodies. Have you got a General Clauses Act?—Yes.

7389. What does "any person" include?—Any corporate body or other association of individuals.

7390. So that you have absolute power to delegate either to the Collector or to the Divisional Officer or to the Council itself?—That is how I interpret the General Clauses Act.

7391. There are similar provisions in sections 159 and 160 of the Local Fund Act?—Yes.

7392. So that without any further legislation the Government of Madras can practically proceed to any amount of expansion of local self-government they choose?—Yes.

7393. Have you used those sections much?—Two years ago a list was prepared of powers which should be delegated to the Collector, and very considerable powers were delegated to him in regard to minor appointments and sanctioning rates of fees, and matters of that sort.

*Mr. H. D.
Taylor.*

30 Nov., 1907.

7394. Has any one complained about it?—No. The Collector was required to send a quarterly statement, which has now been made annual.

7395. So far as you know has there been no public complaint?—No, I do not think there has been any objection taken to it; there have been practically very few cases under it comparatively speaking.

7396. So that practically your growth in District Board or municipal self-government is very much at the stage where it was in 1884, so far as Government control goes?—As far as general Government control goes, yes.

7397. You have not been able to emancipate these bodies very much in the last 23 years?—As regards municipalities elective privileges have been given more freely.

7398. How about the elective principle in Local Boards?—At present there is no true elective principle; at present the taluk Boards are all nominated, and a certain number of the members of the District Boards are elected by the taluk Boards.

7399. Have you never had suggestions made to try the elective principle in connection with the Local Boards?—It has been considered. I understand it was not found possible to devise a really practicable scheme.

7400. How many union panchayats have you got?—382, I think it is.

7401. Are they all equally distributed over the Presidency?—There were no union panchayats until last year on the west coast, but two have now been started in Malabar. The physical features of the country are different and houses are scattered, and that does not lend itself to the formation of a panchayat. Elsewhere I should say that the numbers vary from 12 to 20 in various districts; it depends on the size and population of the district.

7402. Does it depend on the interest taken by the Collector?—Not at all. Sometimes proposals are made for a union and they are considered by the Collector, but I might say that when it is proposed to constitute a union, the people almost invariably object on the ground that they are going to be taxed. They do not like the imposition of taxes.

7403. But that is the basis of your whole structure of local self-government?—No, I think not. The Act provides for all the executive functions of panchayats, but it does not so provide in the case of the taluk Boards or District Boards; except that their budgets are controlled, panchayats have much freer powers and the powers of appeal are strictly defined in the Act itself; in the case of Local and District Boards the powers of appeal and so on are limited by rule.

7404. Important municipalities in the district are not represented on the District Board at all?—No; not necessarily; very often, of course, the members of the Municipal Council are also members of the taluk Board.

7405. Would it not promote co-operation if municipalities were represented on the District Boards?—I do not think so. The funds of both bodies are derived from totally different sources. The municipality perhaps might be allowed to send a member to the District Board, but that would require an amendment of the Act.

7406. You say you have not made very large use of these powers of delegation with regard to Collectors in the last 23 years; is that due at all to the fact that the work is all controlled from the Secretariat?—No, I do not think so.

7407. I mean you have nobody who can tour and get into touch with the truth of local self-government, and try to push it at all, and help the people to expand?—The Collectors tour a great deal in their districts and I think they are in touch with the people after they have been there for some time.

7408. You do not think it retards the growth of local self-government at all that the Board of Revenue is not concerned with these matters?—No, I do not think that that has anything to do with retarding it. Hitherto the reason has been the difficulty of working out a scheme; I am not quite sure whether you are talking of delegation of powers, or representation.

7409. In regard to the endeavour to foster and educate these local bodies and get them fit for greater responsibilities, would not that sort of thing go quicker if your controlling power was not centred in one place in the Secretariat, but was in the hands of officers who could come into personal touch with the various bodies?—I do not think it would make any difference.

7410. In regard to education, the Director of Public Instruction has now the control of the Reformatory School?—Yes.

7411. Has he any special title in connection with that?—I am not aware of it; there is a special Superintendent of the Reformatory School.

7412. Is he not described as Inspector of Jails under the Reformatory Act?—That may be so under the Act.

7413. You may take it from me that it is not necessary under the Act. Do you not think that that rather stamps the boys?—It is certainly not desirable; when they are sent back to their villages they are sent not to the District Magistrate, but to the Collector, I think.

7414. (Mr. Meyer.) In your capacity as Local and Municipal Secretary you have a certain amount of experience of the work within the municipalities; you have appeals from discontented persons?—Yes.

7415. Is there a tendency for the minority of the municipal Councils to appeal to Government against the decision of the majority?—Complaints are received, more in the way of petitions from private individuals and bodies.

7416. Apart from that do you get appeals of that sort or appeals by one party against another party?—Yes, very frequently, especially in regard to nominations for appointments.

7417. But in regard to the actual work of the municipality, do you find that if there happens to be a division of opinion on the Council, the minority accept the decision of the majority, or that they try to upset it by going to Government?—There have been only a comparatively few cases of protest.

7418. Have you had much to do with the proposed constitution of new municipalities?—There have been no new municipalities constituted recently.

7419. There have been proposals to constitute them?—I think there was one proposal; one or two, perhaps.

7420. Were they objected to by the people themselves?—I do not recollect; anyhow the municipalities were not constituted.

7421. A witness told us yesterday that there was a general objection to the creation of new municipalities, or new village unions, on the ground that it would mean extra taxation, is that so?—Yes, that is the case; that is my own personal experience as Collector.

7422. Another witness suggested to us that education would get on better if it were taken out of the hands of the Local Board and vested directly in the Educational Department; is that your view?—That is not my view altogether. I consider that Local Board schools should continue to be under the control of the Local Boards subject to observing the standards of efficiency and the requirements of the educational rules, and subject to inspection by the officers of the department.

7423. There was another suggestion that there might be a distribution of functions, the Local Boards taking, subject to what you said just now, the primary and the lower secondary schools, and the Government, through the Educational Department, being responsible for the upper secondary schools; would you be in favour of that?—I think that the sphere of the local bodies should be restricted, as far as possible, to elementary education.

7424. Absolutely elementary, or to include these lower secondary schools also?—I should prefer it being restricted to elementary education.

7425. Then with regard to the municipalities, how far should their sphere go?—One or two of the municipalities have very good and satisfactory colleges. My own view is that no municipal funds should be spent on these colleges; they ought to be self-supporting; if they are self-supporting they could be under separate management.

7426. If the municipality has the money you would allow it to take up secondary schools as far as it desires?—They seldom have the money for secondary education unless it is obtained by taking it away from elementary education; all local bodies have now been relieved of the charge of grants-in-aid for secondary education, but they have not yet devoted to primary education the full amount which has been saved under that provision.

7427. The first duty of a municipality then is primary education?—Yes.

7428. Are Training Schools in this Presidency under the control of Government or local bodies?—Until recently Government was responsible for female education; now the responsibility for all elementary education, whether for boys or girls, is placed under the local bodies. There are a certain number of Government schools and Training Schools still under local bodies which have survived from the old system.

7429. With reference to the orders of the Government of India that the local receipts and expenditure shall no longer figure in the Imperial budget, was that a spontaneous suggestion of the Government of India or did it come from your Government?—That I cannot say. The question was raised last year during the time of the budget; I believe the question had been considered before.

7430. Did your Government refer to the Government of India, or did the Government of India refer to your Government and say: "We are thinking about this scheme and would like your opinion upon it"?—That I cannot say. The matter would come from the Government of India to the Financial Department. I merely saw a suggestion which was received from the Financial Department; I cannot say by whom the reference was made originally.

7431. You have complained that in time past, before this separation, the Government of India reduced your budget under the head "Local" considerably?—Yes.

7432. Are you aware of the reason for that reduction?—Probably it was on the ground that the expenditure might not be worked up to.

7433. And in the interests of accurate estimating. As a matter of fact was the expenditure worked up to?—I do not think the total expenditure of the local bodies is ever worked up to quite, except in a few cases; in some cases, there is a slight excess which has to be remitted by the Council.

7434. You complain that if a District Board is contemplating in any year expending more than the budget allotment, they had under the previous system to go to the Government of India. Was not the general rule that the Local Board spent less than it had budgeted for?—The District Board could never be certain what it was going to spend, because, owing to the existence of this rule budgets were framed so late that the Board could not take its work in hand, and the result was the undue crowding of expenditure into the last months of the year. As a matter of fact, a Board which had some urgent necessity could not say whether it could reappropriate or not.

7435. As a matter of fact the generality of District Boards, so far from exceeding their budget allotment, fell considerably within them?—I think that is so.

7436. Further, does not the practice prevail in each District Board of putting within the budget allotment a reserve for unforeseen expenditure?—That is unforeseen expenditure which can be utilised only for special items, such as epidemics of cholera, and special matters of that sort; it could not be utilised for ordinary work.

7437. If there was no plague or cholera, what was to prevent you from transferring a few thousand rupees from the reserve to some other head; is there any order of the Government of India that prevents you from doing it?—The amount under that head is very small and quite insufficient to carry out work of any considerable magnitude.

7438. You have mentioned a certain amount of lapses and the hurrying of expenditure over the last months of the year. Is there a tendency on the part of the Secretariat here to censure officers when they have not spent up to the budget allotment?—I cannot say that there is any direct censure, but when the budgets are reviewed the question of expenditure under the various heads is also reviewed.

7439. I am speaking not of the budget, but of the administration report?—I mean the administration report.

7440. You do not make such remarks as this: "It is very unsatisfactory that out of the allotment for roads only 80 per cent. or 60 per cent. was spent within the year"?—Yes, we should do so, assuming that the figures were as stated; if the expenditure was so short Government would make such a remark as that.

7441. Does that not in itself tend to hurry the expenditure by officers during the last few months?—It might at the end of the year, but if they have had no opportunity of spending it at the beginning of the year, it cannot be helped.

7442. Is it not better not to spend than to spend hurriedly in such a way?—Quite so, but still communications have to be maintained in proper order.

7443. They could spend it the next year?—But meantime repairs would require more money because the roads would go from bad to worse.

7444. You mean a stitch in time saves nine?—That is the idea.

7445. But if your stitch in time is a very hurried one, in the last few weeks of the year, will it really be saving nine?—That is a matter of opinion; it is all left to the Local Boards, but I believe that if the budgets came out earlier than they do now, and they knew exactly what they had to spend, they would be able to spend the money to better advantage.

7446. You have stated that as regards municipalities you have had none of these restrictions that you complain of because the municipal accounts do not figure in the Imperial budget?—Yes.

7447. So far as you, as a provincial Government, are concerned, there were no restrictions; the Government of India imposed no restrictions on you?—There were no restrictions imposed upon the Local Government.

7448. But at the same time you have imposed rather a rigid restriction on the municipality. You say to a municipality, "You shall not add to your budget allotment by more than Rs. 500 without our sanction"; is that necessary?—That is not correct; they may spend up to half the balance or up to half the balance as revised with reference to the opening balance, but no individual allotment over Rs. 500 may be made without reference to the Government.

7449. No individual allotment over Rs. 500 that has not figured in the budget can be made during the year without reference to the Government?—No.

7450. What is the object of that restriction?—In order to see that there is a proper working balance retained for the next year, because the municipal balances are not so large as to be able to stand any large drain upon them.

7451. Did you not say that it would suffice if the municipality kept 5 per cent. of its normal income on the budget?—A District Board in its budget has to work up to a 5 per cent. balance;

Mr. H. D.
Taylor,

Mr. H. D.
Taylor.

30 Nov., 1907.

municipal Councils work up to a 10 per cent. balance as far as possible.

7452. You think that a 10 per cent. balance generally suffices?—It should be sufficient for a working balance unless there are any special schemes for which the municipality is reserving funds; for instance, a future scheme of water-supply and drainage would require more.

7453. Let us take the concrete case of a municipality with an income of Rs. 50,000; you would make it keep a standing balance of Rs. 5,000?—That would be provided for in the budget.

7454. But suppose its actual standing balance is Rs. 7,000, could it use up the remaining Rs. 2,000 without reference to you or not?—It may use Rs. 3,500; it may use half the Rs. 7,000 without reference to Government, provided that no single allotment exceeds Rs. 500 for any special work.

7455. Is it not quite sufficient to lay down that the municipality shall keep up a certain amount as a standing balance and shall not encroach on that standing balance without reference to you? Is it necessary to add the restriction as to the Rs. 500 sums?—The only question is this; it might be required for an important work of sanitation or something of that sort, the details of which would require further examination. Personally I see no reason why that limit should be retained.

7456. Now as regards the District Boards the Government of India will relieve you from all restrictions as to reappropriations, but you said that you would still make District Boards come up for an addition to their budget of over Rs. 2,500?—I think there should be some limit.

7457. There again, would it not suffice to make the District Board maintain such standing balance as the Government consider necessary and not to make it come up in individual cases?—No, for this reason; there is a great tendency for local bodies in any one year to incur recurring charges—charges of a recurring character which come on next year and the year after—and out of their balance they might for one year incur a charge for the maintenance of a new hospital or a new school which they could not possibly meet from their normal income. That is a very common tendency which is seldom properly looked into by the local bodies.

7458. Would it not be better if a local body did that to let it feel next year the obligation of cutting down expenditure?—It is very unpleasant and bad for the people who have been deprived of the hospital; there have been such cases in the last year or two, and expenditure has had to be reduced under certain heads for that reason.

7459. If you get somebody else to economise for you, will you become truly economical yourself?—I only express the general principle that it would cause dissatisfaction. Such a rule might be fair, but it would cause to the general body of people more dissatisfaction than they now feel.

7460. You said in connection with the municipalities that one reason for interference was their tendency to raise the pay of small appointments?—On personal grounds; if the conditions are changed and there are reasonable grounds—for instance if the market price of wages, as it were, is raised—that is all right, but to raise it on purely personal grounds is, I consider, unjustifiable.

7461. Do they tell you when they come up to you that it is on personal grounds?—Yes.

7462. You mean the personal merits of A.B. who holds the appointment?—Yes; they do not propose to give A.B. a personal allowance of one rupee; they propose to raise the pay of the appointment on the personal merits of A.B.

7463. With certain limits under each head for establishment and so forth, is not the scrutiny of the budget a sufficient general check?—It might be, but they come up for these increases outside the budget.

7464. Is it not the fact that in the scrutinies of the budget you often cut down the pay of these small appointments?—Very often, if there is no sufficient reason assigned.

7465. Your budget control is not confined to general principles and seeing that they are not spending too much money generally, but you go into the pay of a peon or a petty clerk?—The orders are as a matter of fact that proposals for establishment should be submitted separately in advance, so that they can be scrutinised and then, when the orders have been passed, they are entered into the budget.

7466. You do cut them down pretty frequently?—Not pretty frequently. There are a number of reductions, partly on financial grounds and partly on questions of principle; but if there is a real case, the additional establishments are given; they are more often given than refused.

7467. You review the municipal budgets. Do you send them on to your Member or do you deal with them finally yourself?—Some I send on, some I do not.

7468. If you have to cut about a municipal budget, would you send it on to the Member?—Yes.

7469. You would not send it on to him if you knew that the alteration was justified?—Not if they were mere trifling alterations. I go by general principles. If there is any principle involved, any question of loan for instance, it would go to him.

7470. If you are to refuse to sanction the pay of a clerk or peon, would that be a matter of principle or would you exercise your discretion?—Sometimes I would, sometimes not; but these proposals come up separately, not in the budget. The general order passed is that the provision is allowed to stand subject to formal sanction at a later stage.

7471. Does that apply also to the District Board budget proposals?—Yes.

7472. Do you find that they make the same proposals in regard to petty appointments?—Yes, sometimes.

7473. And do you disallow them as you do in the case of municipal budgets?—Yes, in accordance with the principles I have explained.

7474. The real executive control of the District Boards rests with the Collector?—It should do. Every proposal of the District Board should come from the Collector, as President, to Government. The Collector is also President of the District Board.

7475. The Collector is directly responsible for the budget though it has to receive the approval of the District Board?—It has to be forwarded through the Collector as President.

7476. As the District Board President he frames the budget and gets it passed by the District Board as a body?—Yes.

7477. The budget will include these small increases of pay?—The budget should not include them unless they have been sanctioned in advance. The proposals should come in separately; the order has been given time after time that it would prevent delay in issuing orders on the budget if the proposals were sent in separately.

7478. Is the Collector, as District Board President, primarily responsible for these proposals for increased establishment?—Not primarily. In some cases he may be responsible in connection with the District Board, and as to the taluk Board establishment perhaps the President of the taluk Board, or very often the Medical Officer, applies for increases.

7479. Do you think that the Collector has scrutinised these proposals and has approved of them?—Probably.

7480. You think he is not to be trusted in these petty matters to grant a final decision, but that the Government is bound to upset what he wishes?—There are principles; as long as fixed principles are observed orders must issue accordingly.

7481. But do you consider it a good system or not?—No; I think the President of the District Board might have control in such matters.

7482. You desire to have power to impose local and municipal taxation on railways, because you say that the railway administrations generally agree with whatever proposals are made?—They do not often disagree, but the proposals are always sent to the railway administrations for remarks.

7483. Railways are an imperial matter?—Yes.

7484. In that case would you let the Local Government decide, or would you have it go to the Government of India?—I raised that merely as a question with regard to working, not as to financial control; it was really with the object of saving time and correspondence.

7485. You spoke of giving powers to local bodies to raise loans in the local market. Would they be able to borrow in the open market on the same terms as they now borrow from the Government of India or from the Local Government?—Certainly not; if the Government will do it, well and good; but in all these District Board railway matters the Government of India have said that they will not be able to lend the provincial Governments any money for some years to come. Therefore, in order to construct railways which are important to the district it will be necessary for the District Boards to raise funds in the local market if possible.

7486. Suppose a municipality wants to build a new market or something of that sort and some loan is required; could they not do so much more conveniently by borrowing from Government?—Yes, some of them can; many loans are given by the Government, but there are many cases of small loans that have been raised in the local market under the old rules. I only raised this question because I wanted to put forward the view that time and trouble could be saved. These references to India on matters of petty loans appear to me to be unnecessary.

7488. Then where does it come in; you say you would allow the Local Government a free hand in regard to loans up to one lakh; your railway loans would largely exceed one lakh. I put it to you that in regard to other loans it would be much more feasible for the local bodies to borrow as they do now from the provincial Government?—If the Government can comply with their requirements there is no objection.

7490. Then you have not yet had an opportunity of judging in practice?—I do not think so, but there are the references involved under the new rules, and that is the point to which I draw attention.

7491. You spoke of having got no real help from the Director-General of Education. Have you ever asked him for assistance in any matter that you had to deal with; have you ever asked him what has been the practice in other provinces, or whether he could give you any idea of what the past policy of the Government of India had been, and so on?—There has been no direct correspondence with the Director-General of Education.

7492. It is open to you to ask for his advice in these matters?—I am not aware of any rules on the subject; I presume there would be no objection to our asking his advice. Probably in that case the Director would be asked to make a reference.

7493. You spoke of conferences as a substitute for Directors-General; you meant especially the Educational Conference of a couple of years ago; who summoned that conference?—I cannot quite recollect whether it was under the Director-General or not.

7494. Was it not summoned by the Government of India?—I believe it was.

7495. Then there was the Conference of 1901?—That was summoned by the Government of India I believe.

7496. Would you leave it to the Government of India to summon these conferences, or should they meet automatically at fixed periods?—There would have to be some central authority to arrange it, I think.

7497. Who would preside?—They might elect one of themselves to preside.

7498. Is there not this disadvantage that an officer having gone to a conference and got a certain amount of good therefrom, might shortly afterwards go on long leave, retire, or be transferred to other divisions?—That is always possible.

7499. You say that the Imperial Sanitary Commissioner is not likely to do any good; who is responsible for plague work?—Plague is mainly under the Collectors, under the advice of the Sanitary Commissioner.

7500. Is not plague a matter in which the Imperial Government ought to have something to say?—Yes, they are very materially interested.

7501. Might not an Imperial Sanitary Commissioner, who has toured in the various provinces and seen how plague rules are worked in each province, have considerable assistance to give to you?—He might, but I am not aware of any practical assistance that he has given in that connection.

7502. You say that you would allow the Madras Government to develop its educational policy on its own lines subject to the funds available. Do you mean that literally—would you give them an absolutely free hand?—I think so.

7503. Would you allow them for instance to withdraw altogether from collegiate education?—I do not think the Madras Government would ever do so; I take it that the Government are a reasonable body.

7505. But that is what they have been doing?—Yes, we have had a grant of 8 lakhs, and another of 6 lakhs for educational purposes.

7506. I take it that a great many of the schemes that municipalities undertake—drainage schemes and water-works schemes and so on—are undertaken not of their own volition but under pressure from the Madras Government?—I cannot say that that is the case.

7507. Surely as Local and Municipal Secretary you can say whether the municipalities have initiated schemes or not?—Frequently schemes are applied for; for instance, they were very anxious to get a scheme of water-supply for Salem and Coimbatore, but there are people who object to pay the tax.

7508. In cases between you and the local body, would you apply the same principle that you would in regard to cases between you and the Government of India; that is to say, if you desired a Local Board to undertake a scheme, and they did not want it, would you be prepared to give financial assistance?—No such scheme would be imposed on the local body; all such schemes have to be approved by the local body before the funds are provided. A scheme is frequently prepared and has to be given up because the Council cannot or will not find its proportion of the funds.

7509. You say that there is no material increase in the demand for statistics in the Local and Municipal Department in relation to statistics called for by the Government of India?—Yes.

7510. Can you say the same as regards statistics called for by the provincial Government?—Yes; there have been a few alterations in the forms

Mr. H. D.
Taylor.

due to alterations in the regulations, but I think the volume has not materially increased.

7511. You speak here with regard to exceptions from certain educational standards that are prescribed for the public service, and you say they are freely given in the case of specially backward places; are they given by general order or by special reference?—Mostly by general order as in the Agency Tracts; in some places, such as Bellary and the Ceded Districts they are given by special orders.

7512. Might there not be general orders there too?—It is possible, but I do not think the conditions are quite the same. It might re-act upon the efficiency of the Service.

7513. Are you in favour of tahsildars being personally graded within the district instead of by charges?—I have not considered that question; I think it might be a good thing.

7515. But it comes up to Government for sanction?—In the case of a District Board, no; I think a municipal Council does have to come up in case the amount exceeds Rs. 500.

7516. Is that necessary?—It is a sort of safeguard; it ensures that funds under one grant are not being devoted unduly to another grant; I think it is a wholesome check.

7517. You spoke of the necessity of keeping Government control over District Boards because of the considerable amount that Government contributes; was not the greater part of that amount granted by the Government of India in 1905?—Yes, 14 lakhs.

7518. And the intention of the Government of India was to increase the resources of the District Boards for dealing with the duties entrusted to them?—Yes.

7519. Was there anything in those instructions which implied that District Boards should be put under special restrictions with regard to the allocation of the expenditure of such extra grants?—As far as I recollect, the order stated that the grant was made mainly in connection with roads and bridges.

7520. Was there any implied direction that you should look after the District Boards more carefully in respect of that money than in respect of the ordinary land cess money?—No, except the general direction that it should be for roads and bridges—a direction which, as a matter of fact, has not been strictly adhered to.

7521. You get a lump allotment for certain purposes; did you distribute it to the District Boards proportionately to their income?—Roughly, in proportion to one quarter of the land cess.

7522. That is to say, each District Board gets roughly an addition of 25 per cent. to its income?—Practically it comes to 25 per cent. of its income from land cess; in the case of backward districts it is a little more; the richer districts get a little less than their proportion, and the backward ones get a little more.

7523. Suppose a municipality wants money for work of a sanitary character costing over Rs. 500, they have to come up for sanction; a District Board requires no sanction up to Rs. 1,000?—It is Rs. 500 in the case of the District Board as well, as regards sanction to sanitary schemes. The approval of the Sanitary Board is necessary.

7524. Is it necessary that petty projects of that sort should come up for sanction?—My own personal view is that it is undesirable; it leads to estimates being cooked, and I know from my personal experience that if a District Board had Rs. 500 available, the estimate might go up to the Sanitary Commissioner and Engineer with the result that it would be raised to Rs. 1,000. As a consequence no work would be executed, and the people instead of getting half a loaf would get no bread at all.

7525. You think that so far as regards the necessity of consulting the Sanitary Board the limit ought to be considerably higher?—I think so.

7526. Have you found that the Sanitary Board works too much for the highest results—I mean, preferring the best to what might be practicable from the funds available?—They aim at the ideal; I have always tried myself to reduce it to the practical.

7527. And you find that tendency with the Sanitary Commissioner and the Sanitary Engineer also?—Yes.

7528. What is the use of the Sanitary Board when the municipalities and District Boards have got the Sanitary Engineer and the Sanitary Commissioner to advise them fully from the sanitary point of view, and have got the control of Government from the Finance and Public Works point of view—what is the use of this intervening body?—I do not think there is really any particular use in it.

7529. You think it may be abolished?—I think so.

7530. (Mr. Hitchens.) Does the Government make any other contribution to Local Boards besides the 25 per cent. that you allot?—There are certain contributions in fixed proportions towards the pay of Medical Officers.

7531. I mean in respect of education?—Yes, grants are made; subsidies are given to Local Boards for education, or rather subsidies are paid through the Local Boards to aided schools.

7532. That is to say they get definite contributions from the Government in respect of their own local schools?—They are not definite. This year a special grant of 6 lakhs was made by the Government of India; a certain proportion has now been given for the improvement of the scale of pay of the masters, and a certain amount has been spent upon buildings. The amount has been almost entirely swallowed up in this way, but other funds have been given to them in aid of the schools. That is an expenditure which is very rapidly expanding.

7533. Is this a final or annual grant?—It is annual. It is with reference to budget considerations and the growth of expenditure.

7534. Is it made conditional on the Local Boards contributing a certain amount themselves?—No, there is no fixed percentage.

7535. Then how do you ensure that they spend a certain amount?—It is included in the budget.

7536. But when the budget comes to you, do you cut it about fairly freely, and if there is not enough provision, say, for education, do you transfer something from roads?—When the budget comes, three principles are generally observed; first, that the prescribed minimum balance is set apart; secondly, that the proportion for works is set aside; thirdly, that the recurring charges do not exceed the annual normal income. Having observed those principles, the proposals of the Board are generally accepted, but they have to be cut about owing to the fact that there are recurring charges which often largely exceed the normal income. Perhaps a considerable balance has accumulated, and they are rather inclined to rely on these balances to incur charges which are not charges once for all, but charges which recur from year to year.

7538. I understood from one of the witnesses that the Director of Public Instruction stipulated beforehand the amount that it was proposed to spend by each District Board in respect of education?—Yes, that is the case. Extracts from the budget in respect of education are sent through the Director of Public Instruction; extracts from the budget in respect of hospitals are sent through the Surgeon-General; extracts from the budget in regard to sanitation are sent through the Sanitary Commissioner.

7539. Every head is scrutinised?—Yes, as to whether it is sufficient or insufficient.

7540. Is it common that suggestions are made that a large grant should be given for education?—Frequently; very often it is impossible to make the grant, and sometimes even the provision made has to be cut down.

7541. You do not frequently alter the budgets of the Local Boards; the policy generally is to leave them alone?—Observing those three principles that I referred to, the policy is to accept their suggestions; if those principles are observed, the budget as a rule is not interfered with.

7542. Apart from the Government contributions, the principal source of income of the District Board is the land cess?—Yes, that comes to about two-thirds of the ordinary income.

7543. What does it amount to?—56 lakhs; in most districts it is levied at one anna in the rupee of the assessment, except in the Nilgiris and Malabar and Canara, where it is two annas in the rupee. But, as a matter of fact, the full cess is not levied in Malabar; in consequence of the introduction of the late settlement there has been a gradual reduction.

7544. Who decides that the cess is to be one anna in the rupee?—That is provided in the Act as a maximum. The District Boards send up proposals at their first meeting as to the tax to be levied and the establishment to be dealt with.

7545. But they have full power to decide that the cess shall be half an anna if they like?—They can suggest it; I doubt whether it would be accepted.

7546. Is it, as a matter of fact, generally taken for granted by the Boards that they must levy the full amount?—I think so; I think the full amount has been levied almost ever since the Boards were started, except in the case of the Tanjore District Board, where it was levied at 9 pies in the rupee until they started their railway, when they volunteered an added proportion; there are special districts where it is two annas in the rupee; it varies in the district of Malabar according to the different taluks.

7547. If such a suggestion came up to you, the district concerned would have to show very strong reasons why the proportion should be reduced?—They would have to show that it was largely in excess of their requirements for expenditure.

7548. Now, is a certain proportion of the land cess given to the taluk Board and a certain proportion pooled?—One half is bound to be given to the taluk Board.

7549. And the proportion that is pooled is distributed according to the discretion of the District Board?—Yes, according to the requirements of the taluk Board. Certain roads are District Board roads and maintained from District Board funds.

7550. But the balance is distributed amongst the taluks at the discretion of the District Board?—I think that is the principle.

7551. Does that in your opinion lead to a scramble?—I do not think so. My general experience as President of a District Board was that the claims of all the taluk Boards were considered equitably.

7552. In your opinion the principle that the richer portion of the district should pay for the poorer portion is a satisfactory one?—I think so; it is a district cess; if you take the district as the unit, it is fair.

7553. You, as Government, have never had to interfere in any way with that distribution?—No, I cannot recollect any interference with the distribution between District and taluk Boards. The budgets are revised; we do not go into details; when it goes back to the District Board, the District Board may have to revise the taluk Board budgets again.

7554. You have never had complaints that a clique of the District Board have taken all the money for themselves?—I can recollect no such case.

7555. Is the principle adopted at all, in regard to your grants-in-aid, of giving them conditionally on the work being efficiently performed?—The grant-in-aid to schools, yes.

7556. Either in the matter of schools or in the matter of roads. You say that the Government of India gave a certain contribution which was to be spent largely on roads and bridges?—Yes.

7557. Did they make any condition as to efficiency before the grant was given?—No special conditions are made. It is presumed that the money will be spent as far as possible to the best advantage.

7558. You are aware of the English principle whereby in connection with grants to Local Boards the grant is only made conditionally on the whole of the roads being properly kept up?—I am not aware of that principle.

7559. Could that be applied here?—I think generally the main roads are kept in a pretty efficient condition. There is a special District Board Engineer under each District Board, and the President and members of the taluk Board tour about; I do not think it would be possible to say that all roads must be efficient before the grant can be given; I think the Boards do their best to make them efficient.

7560. Would it be possible to substitute what one might call an indirect control of that nature for the rather direct control that you exercise to-day?—I do not think that the Government can be said to exercise any direct control over the actual executive operations of the various Boards.

7561. Possibly not, but the budgets are submitted to you to-day, and to a large extent you do make yourself responsible for the expenditure by approving those budgets?—Yes.

7562. You may add to the expenditure or you may interfere directly, and you do freely interfere?—We do not very often interfere with particular schemes; we sometimes suggest that the expenditure on such and such a road is too large, and with regard to the special grant we have asked the Boards to prepare a programme for 5 years; but, as a matter of fact, if any programme is approved, any modifications that they make in the programme are also approved.

7563. Would the interests of Government be sufficiently safeguarded in the matter of education and roads and so forth, if they threatened to withhold their grants unless efficiency was secured?—No, I do not think that would be sufficient; not in educational matters certainly.

7564. Now in connection with your remarks with regard to complete freedom of the provincial Government in matters connected with education; are there certain educational laws?—Rules.

7565. There are no Acts passed by the Legislature dealing with education at all?—No, not that I am aware of.

7566. At all events there are certain broad principles with regard to education about which uniformity may be desirable?—Yes, I think so.

7567. Would it be possible to pass laws, as in other countries, simply embodying certain principles and saying that within the limits of those principles the provincial Government should have complete freedom?—I do not think so; you would want one separate law for each province. The local conditions are different. The conditions even in this Presidency vary very greatly. We have our own body of educational rules, and then we can make exceptions in the case of backward localities.

7568. But if you could define the general principles by law you might leave their execution to the Government in each province?—It could be done, but I do not think it would apply to this country.

7569. (Mr. Dutt.) You have referred to the Tanjore railway, which led to the increase of the assessment from 9 pies to one anna; has there been any other scheme of that nature in any other district?—Yes; there are about 9 districts now which have imposed a cess, under section 57 (ii) of the Act, of 3 pies in addition to the ordinary cess; that is under that special section.

7570. In all those cases the cess was imposed according to the resolution of the District Board, was it?—The resolution of the District Board, supported by a majority of three-fourths, and reaffirmed at a subsequent special meeting as provided by the law.

7571. Was the sanction of the Government necessary and was it obtained?—Yes; in one district, Trichinopoly, the levy of the cess has been discontinued at the instance of Government, because there is no scheme sufficiently forward to justify the continuance of the cess.

7572. You said that the law as it stands vests the President of the District Board with all executive power. That is under section 33 (i) of the Act. That includes the appointment of all officers, does it not?—It includes the appointment of all officers, but there are rules under sections of the Act which the Government may frame with regard to the appointment of officers. Certain rules have been framed which have been embodied in the Local Fund Code.

7573. Do these rules modify in any way the general power of the President to appoint all officers?—Under the most recently revised rule the President can appoint all officers drawing a pay of less than Rs. 150; it used to be Rs. 100, but it has been enlarged considerably in the last few years.

7574. He has also power under the Act to punish and fine and dismiss all these officers?—Yes. The President has that power, subject to an appeal to the Board.

7575. In cases of fines over Rs. 5; there is an appeal up to a certain tribunal?—No, in cases of fines over one rupee by the President of a taluk Board there is an appeal to the President of the District Board. I think one rupee is too small, and it might be raised to five rupees.

7576. Do similar rules apply to taluk Boards?—Yes; instead of the appeal going from the President of the taluk Board to the taluk Board, it goes from the President of the taluk Board to the President of the District Board, and from there again in some cases to the District Board.

7577. The budget of the taluk Board is generally prepared and placed before the District Board?—Yes.

7578. Is any portion of the District Board's work made over to sub-committees formed under the Act?—The Act provides for rules being made by the Government for delegation to sub-committees of certain powers, but so far as this Presidency is concerned no such rules have been sanctioned by Government. In some districts I believe there are sub-committees at work, although they have not the formal sanction of Government.

7579. Would the creation of sub-committees for the performance of different duties lead to a greater interest being taken by the members themselves, and, generally, to the efficient discharge of those duties?—I do not think so, because I do not think the members would find time, in addition to attending meetings of the Board, to attend meetings of the Committees. Many members take simply an individual interest in their own localities; of course many of them take an interest not only in their own particular taluk but all over the district.

7580. Could the practice of creating these sub-committees be fostered a little more in the immediate future?—I think not; I think there would be practical difficulties in the way of their administration.

7581. Is the present system under which practically the whole of the work of the Board is done by the President, likely to encourage members to take more interest in their own duties?—The whole executive work is done by the President, but he consults the members pretty freely, and is always prepared to receive suggestions and advice from them as occasion arises.

7582. In regard to the Corporation of Madras we had evidence from a witness that appeals lie only when an officer drawing a pay of over Rs. 50 is punished, but that, in the case of officers drawing a pay of under Rs. 50, there is no appeal; is that so?—I am not quite sure what the rules in the City are; I think that the appeal lies to Government only in the case of officers appointed by the Government.

7583. We had evidence given before us yesterday that besides those unions it would be an advantage to create small panchayats in small villages; are you of that opinion?—I do not think they would do really much good.

7584. I mean for the management of small village concerns and having some supervision over village schools and so forth; in the smaller villages if panchayats were formed would they not be of some help to the administration?—I do not think it would be of any material assistance. I see no objection to the formation of such committees, but I think that one man would probably do the work better.

7585. At present the work is done by village officers, or by the village karnam; I mean any little work that has to be done under orders that may be passed down to the village?—I do not think they look after sanitary works or funds expended by the Board; the Boards make their own arrangements. The Boards might say to a village head-man, "Here is a certain amount of money for your two or three villages; we will give you this money and you must do the work"; that is quite permissible.

7586. When small works are given to a village, to whom is the actual work entrusted; is it given by contract?—It is probably given by contract; it would be in the discretion of the taluk Board.

7587. If panchayats were formed might they usefully do work of that nature?—They might if they were unanimous, but I am afraid there might be cliques among them.

7588. Evidence was given to us yesterday that unions generally were unpopular because under the Act they had the power of imposing a tax?—Yes, the house tax.

7589. We also heard yesterday that the creation of panchayats would be very unpopular if the panchayats were empowered to impose the tax in their villages?—I think they would be absolutely unpopular.

7590. Suppose it was desirable to create these panchayats, would it be possible to create them without the power to impose any tax—simply to ask them to look after their village concerns and give them some little power under the law of disposing of small disputes in criminal cases and civil cases; would it be possible to do this without giving them power to impose a tax?—It might be done; I cannot speak about the civil law; I have known panchayats in the Hill tracts most useful in settling civil disputes, but those consisted of the heads of the different villages, not selected by the villagers themselves.

7591. You have told us that the Indian Government has contributed a certain amount of money to District Boards lately to help them in their work; would that set free some amount of money from the District Board funds to be applied to village purposes, supposing that village panchayats were created?—I do not think it would set free any considerable funds; a Board might be able to allot money, but many of them at present are rather in financial difficulties, and it is only owing to fresh grants that they have been saved from bankruptcy.

7592. (Sir Frederic Lely.) You said just now that the Sanitary Board might be abolished. Do you mean to say that it might be reduced to the Engineer and the Sanitary Commissioner?—The Sanitary Commissioner is not a member of the Board now.

7593. Would it not be well to make a Board consisting of the Sanitary Commissioner, as sanitary expert, and the Engineer, as engineering expert?—I think not; there would be no majority, and the Sanitary Commissioner's schemes would be altogether too ideal.

7594. It is not proposed that they should exercise any authority; they would only go about, together or separately, and advise the municipalities from their respective points of view?—The Engineer, I am afraid, would not have time to go about. His inspections must be restricted to important schemes.

7595. You do not think it would add strength to self-government to have a Board consisting of these two experts who should give professional advice to municipalities who wanted it, instead of the present Sanitary Board?—The present Sanitary Commissioner does tour about and give advice.

7596. I am suggesting that he should associate himself with the Engineer, and that they should form themselves into a Sanitary Board which would be the professional advisers supplied to the municipalities on behalf of the Government?—It is practically done at present. All proposals come to the Board through the Sanitary Engineer and the Sanitary Commissioner.

7597. But you would abolish the Sanitary Board?—Then these would remain the advisers of the Government without the intervention of the Board.

7598. You do not think my suggestion would be a good thing?—They could not go about jointly, that would be impossible; there might be an additional Deputy Sanitary Commissioner.

7599. You do not think that it would be a good re-arrangement, rather less cumbrous and more coming face to face with the people?—I think that the present Sanitary Commissioner does come face to face with the people; he is constantly touring.

7600. You recognise that there are very numerous varieties of municipalities, ranging from the best to the worst in point of size, and intelligence, and civic spirit?—Yes.

7601. You would recognise that in any policy that might be adopted?—I do not think you could make exceptions; there must be one law for them all.

7602. You would force all into the same mould?—Yes.

7603. You do not think it would be an encouragement to the civic spirit that a municipality should feel that by good management it would justify itself being entrusted with more extended powers?—That is practically the case at present as regards representation privileges and elective rights.

7604. You do not think it need be recognised more definitely that there should be various grades of treatment, and that a municipality should be placed in the grade which it could justify by its own management and civic virtues?—No, I do not think it would be desirable.

7605. I will take a municipality of the very best class; you admit that there are numerous classes; there are some towns which are much more fit for self-government than others?—Yes.

7606. The Chairman has suggested whether it is not possible to provide a via media between the total responsibility of the Government and the total responsibility of the municipality; you say that either one or the other must be responsible?—I say that, given the principle that Government is responsible, it must have material responsibility; abandon that principle, and the municipality must have everything.

7607. Would it not be possible as a compromise to insist in the most emphatic way on the Collector watching the actions of the municipality, and bringing formally to notice any defect in management or any misgovernment?—That is done at present. The Collector has power to veto any resolution of the Council.

7609. Suppose if the Collector sees that the members have been playing fast and loose in favour of their relations—that they have entertained an excessive staff—you made it compulsory, and the regular thing, for the Collector to record his opinion in clear terms and send it to the municipality to be laid before them and to be considered. Would that not have a good effect?—It could be done.

7610. Do you not think in the case of the best municipalities that that security might be sufficient?—I am inclined to doubt whether it would.

7611. (Mr. Hichens.) Do municipalities contribute to District Boards at all?—No, in some cases there is an arrangement of the revenue and expenditure on certain special works; they are very minor items; there are no general contributions.

7612. A Collector giving evidence before us the other day explained that he was not aware of the principle on which the Government contribution was based. Are Collectors, as Presidents of the Boards, informed of that principle?—Yes, every year they are informed of the amount; they know what the amount is, and they know, or should know, what the principle is upon which it is based.

7613. But suppose as Presidents of the Board they protested against its inadequacy, would they be rebuffed?—I do not think the question could be reconsidered, because the figures will have been communicated to all the districts at the same time.

7614. Suppose district A. said, "We have not been treated as fairly as district B.," would they simply be told to mind their own business, or would the thing be gone into to see if they had been fairly treated?—The matter would be very fully considered at the time, and we should consider before the next year whether they had been fairly treated or not.

7615. But it could not be re-opened?—Not for that year, because the amount will have been communicated to all the Boards, and they will have framed their proposals accordingly.

7616. Are the powers of Collectors in the Presidency of Madras as large, or less large, or larger, than the powers of Collectors in other Governments?—I have no knowledge of the powers of Collectors under other Governments.

7617. Are the powers which the provincial Government now exercise towards municipalities and Collectors practically that which Commissioners exercise in other Governments?—I could not say.

7618. You have no means of comparison?—No, except by comparing the regulations here with those of other Governments.

7619. Have you ever done so?—I have done so.

7620. What was your view?—I only compared them with reference to election rules and representations; in each case I found the powers of other provinces were considerably greater; I mean in regard to representation there is a greater system

*Mr. H. D.
Taylor.*

Mr. H. D. of popular representation in other provinces on Taylor. Local Boards than there is in Madras.

30 Nov., 1907. 7621. Therefore, to that extent the provincial Government here stands very much in the position of Commissioners elsewhere?—No, I do not think so; I think Local Governments elsewhere by rules can delegate powers of representation which have not yet been adopted here. I do not say that the functions of Government are in any way different.

(The witness withdrew.)

The Hon. Mr. A. G. CARDEW, I.C.S., was called and examined.

The Hon. Mr. 7622. (Chairman.) You are Acting Secretary in A. G. Cardew. the Revenue Department?—Yes. The total revenues of the Presidency are about £9,000,000 sterling, of which the provincial share controlled by the Local Government is about £3,000,000. But in spending these three millions the Local Government's powers are limited in many ways of which the following are examples:—

- (1) A Local Government cannot create any new permanent appointment of which the pay exceeds £200 a year (Rs. 250 per month). (C. A. C. 283.)
- (2) A Local Government cannot create a temporary appointment for more than six months if its pay would exceed £200 a year (Rs. 250 per month). (C. A. C. 283.)
- (3) A Local Government cannot revise the grades of any class of subordinates. (C. A. C. 283.)
- (4) A Local Government cannot sanction any unusual expenditure which exceeds £66, even though not recurring. (C. A. C. 278 A.)
- (5) A Local Government cannot waive its claim to escheated estates if the value of the estate exceeds £66. (C. A. C. 280.)
- (6) A Local Government cannot sanction any expenditure on travelling allowances except in accordance with the rules of the Civil Service Regulations.
- (7) Even when sanction of the Government of India has been obtained, the Local Government cannot renew it if it is not acted on within a year.
- (8) A Local Government cannot sanction any expenditure (e.g., from its balance) which would cause its total budget for provincial expenditure to be exceeded.

The limits thus imposed on the powers of Local Governments appear to be in some respects unduly low. I think in instances Nos. (4) and (5) above, which are cases of non-recurring expense, the existing powers might be multiplied by 10. As regards instance No. (2), the limit of time might be raised from 6 to 12 months. As regards instance No. (3), it is, I think, unnecessary to require the sanction of the Government of India to revision of the pay of grades, provided that no appointment on pay exceeding £200 a year (Rs. 250 per month) is affected, and provided the total increased charges do not exceed Rs. 25,000 a year (£1,666 a year). As regards No. (6) some power is needed to enable Local Governments to grant special rates of travelling allowances, within the limits of actual outlay, to officers travelling in special localities. Special instances occur for which no set of rules can provide. The rule in No. (7) might perhaps be abrogated altogether, or a longer limit of time, say 5 years, might be fixed.

In my opinion all borrowing is best kept under the control of a central authority.

The relaxation of restrictions imposed by law should be by means of specific amendments and not by a general Act of Delegation, such as Act V. of 1868. It would, I think, be evidently improper to empower the Government generally to delegate any power imposed by law, just as it would be improper for the Government to take advantage of such authority and to delegate many of its powers. Whatever legislation is necessary to enable such delegations as may be decided on to be carried out should be enacted in the Legislative Council of the Governor-General in Council.

The natural tendency of a Secretariat to seek after uniformity has always to be reckoned with, but we have, of late years, been lucky in the Revenue Department, and have nothing to allege against the Department of Revenue and Agriculture of the Government of India. I am not sure whether all Departments of the Government of India have been equally blameless. When I was in charge as Secretary in the Educational Department, the Home Department of the Government of India was rather given to issuing lengthy resolutions intended to inculcate uniformity in the least uniform of subjects. Recently the same Department has pressed the Local Government to adopt what is believed in Madras to be a harmful measure of centralization, on the ground that it has succeeded elsewhere; this is, the delocalization of tahsildars and their grading on a provincial list, thus removing their selection and control from the District Collector to a central body, such as the Board of Revenue. No rules will prevent the occasional occurrences of such instances of interference, and no test of when interference is justified, or the reverse, can be laid down.

As to whether the Imperial Secretariat is too dominated by considerations of expense, special attention might usefully be directed to its action and rules in regard to irrigation projects. The definition of a "productive work" which has been laid down by the Government of India is entirely inelastic, and its conditions are so onerous that it is very difficult to find a work that complies with them. The Government of India has, at the same time, shown a tendency to interfere to what seems to me an undue extent in regard to the distributory systems under irrigation projects which cannot be classed as productive, and even as to the method on which the charge for water should be calculated. It is indeed a fact, I believe, that no estimate for any of the large irrigation projects in this Presidency whose investigation was the outcome of the Irrigation Commission has yet been passed by the Government of India.

No ill-results from the action of Imperial Directors and Inspectors-General have as yet come to my notice. Whether they will be generally worth what they cost is another matter, and far better results would follow from sending the Head of a provincial Department to tour in other Presidencies and to study local methods on the spot than from employing an Imperial Director-General to come and bring him news of what is going on elsewhere. Our most fruitful movements have come from within, and not from without. Thus the idea of bringing the principle of co-operation to the aid of rural credit belongs to Sir Frederick Nicholson, as also does the idea of developing the fish-resources of the Presidency. The development of the Agricultural Department, though aided by the Government of India, has owed most of its progress to encouragement from within. The investigation of our supplies of subterranean water is largely due to the initiative of our Director of Industrial and Technical Enquiries. On the other hand, the action of the Government of India has been potent in advancement of reform in some directions. The report and recommendations of the Government of India's Excise Committee will probably have a far-reaching effect in promoting reforms in Excise Administration. It is thus impossible to lay down in general terms any opinion as to the desirability of leaving Local Governments untrammelled in regard to the adoption of reforms from other provinces.

I have not been impressed by any great necessity for curtailing existing rights of appeal, or petition. It would certainly not, in my opinion, be desirable to require an appeal to be accompanied by a certificate from the authority appealed against. My only suggestion in regard to these heads would be that appeals from officers whose salary is Rs. 100 and over but under Rs. 250 should lie to the Government of India and not to the Secretary of State.

Transfers are still too frequent. Every posting should be held to be for at least three years in absence of special circumstances.

Unless the functions proposed to be allotted to (a) Advisory, (b) Administrative Councils are clearly defined, it is difficult to form an opinion on this suggestion. It should be clearly recognized that the creation of these Councils would involve great increase of work to the Divisional or District Authorities. If a Collector has to decide whether a certain tank is to be maintained or not, or where a certain office is to be located, he reads the reports of his subordinates, studies the plans, and perhaps visits the place, and passes orders. If he had to postpone his decision until he had discussed the matter with an Advisory Council, not only would he have to go over the record at least a second time, but the discussion itself would take time, not counting the large amount of trouble involved in arranging the meetings of a Council. Again, the existence of Advisory Councils would undoubtedly tend to increase delays. Instead of the Collector being able to pass a decision immediately on the study of the papers, he would have to wait till the next meeting of the Advisory Council. This is exactly what now happens with matters that come before the District Board. I doubt whether this result would be popular. There would, no doubt, be a section of the people, especially the English-speaking inhabitants of the Collector's headquarters, who would like it, because they would hope to be on the Council and to share in the importance which that position would give. But the raiyat in a far away village, who was dependent on the tank or on the location of the office, would not be on the Council, and he would prefer prompt despatch to the very doubtful advantage of having the question canvassed by a council of headquarter vakils.

The village community in this Presidency is a very important organisation even now, though its vitality has diminished under British rule and the tendency is towards disintegration. I am in favour of encouraging the growth of independent action in the village community as much as possible. Madras Act I. of 1889 provides for village courts possessing civil jurisdiction up to Rs. 200, and Madras Regulation V. of 1816 for village panchayats, while Regulation XI. of 1816 gives some small punitive powers to village headmen. These powers might be expanded.

I consider that the control exercised over local bodies by Government is so detailed that little scope for self-government remains.

The following may be cited as instances:—

- (a) No Local Board can employ, without sanction of Government, any permanent servant whose pay exceeds Rs. 2 per mensem. (L. F. C. 113-115.)
- (b) No land, however small, can be alienated without sanction of Government.
- (c) Medicines for Local Fund dispensaries and hospitals must be got from the Medical Store Department; no European articles can be bought except in accordance with article 98, C. A. C.; refunds of revenue require the sanction of Government.
- (d) All additional allotments from general savings under any particular grant or on the estimates as a whole are prohibited.
- (e) All plans and estimates for any sanitary work must go to the following authorities:—If it exceeds Rs. 500 (£33-6-8) to the Sanitary Engineer; if it exceeds Rs. 1,000 (£66-13-4) to the Sanitary Commissioner, Sanitary Engineer, and Sanitary Board; if it exceeds Rs. 5,000 (£333-6-8) to the Sanitary Commissioner, Sanitary Engineer, Sanitary Board, Chief Engineer, Public Works Department; if it exceeds Rs. 10,000 (£666-13-4) to the Sanitary Commissioner, Sanitary Engineer, Sanitary Board, Chief Engineer, Public Works Department, Government, Public Works Department, and usually Government, Local and Municipal Department.

These examples, however, hardly bring out with sufficient definiteness the closeness of the control exercised over Local Boards. District municipalities are governed by a different Code; but they are also well looked after by the Local and Municipal Department of the Secretariat. There would be a considerable reduction in work if the whole of this control were removed, and if the Local Boards and district municipalities were left to manage their own affairs. Such a change would, no doubt, involve some loss of efficiency, but there would also be a great saving in delays. It would be likely to result in increased encroachments, on public streets and roads, less success in keeping roads in order, and in maintaining sanitation, and probably a considerable increase in the amount of money wasted. But the people would get some real practice in managing their own affairs. If they managed them badly they would themselves be the chief sufferers, and they would, like other people all over the world, prefer managing their own affairs badly to having them managed for them in the most immaculate manner possible.

A second direction where large reduction in work is possible is by increasing the powers of the native officials, and especially the tahsildar. The tahsildar is an officer whose pay ranges from Rs. 150 to Rs. 250 per mensem (£120 to £200 a year). Practically no officer becomes a tahsildar under 15 years' service. The district munsiff, who is the corresponding judicial officer, has ordinary jurisdiction in suits up to Rs. 2,500 (£166-13-4). As soon as a tahsildar becomes a Deputy Collector, though he may be on the same pay (Rs. 250 per month, £200 a year) he has all the powers of a Divisional Officer. The tahsildar might deal with encroachment cases and water-rate cases, which contribute a large amount of the work that has to be done at the annual settlement of village accounts known as jamabandi. He might appoint his own clerks and peons; at present, he cannot make any appointment other than that of a masalchi (servant to look after lamps) and a sweeper. He should be allowed to pass and cash his own pay-bill and that of his office. He should also have power to grant leave to village officers, to appoint substitutes during leave, and to punish village officers within certain limits. He should be empowered to sanction the sub-division of survey fields.

It may be said that this process of devolution would relax the control of the superior officers and to some extent this is true. It is a necessary result of any process of decentralization. The use of the more extended powers would, however, be safeguarded by the right of appeal. The devolution of powers to tahsildars would give some relief to Collectors and Divisional Officers, and in my opinion it is these officers who need relief rather than the Government, or the Government of India. Except in a few matters of financial control, the work which the Government now do must continue to come to them and cannot be delegated to other authority.

7623. With regard to these restrictions which you enumerate to the spending powers of provincial Governments, could all these be conveniently removed?—Not all, only those that I have enumerated.

7624. With regard to the revising of the grades of any class of subordinates, are the grades of the subordinate classes here necessarily the same as those which obtain in other provinces?—No, they are not necessarily the same.

7625. So that a larger extension of pay would not necessarily disturb, or even at all disturb, the pay of such grades in other provinces?—No, I do not see that it would.

7626. There would be no danger of your establishing a precedent for other provinces?—I do not see how it could if you retain the other limits, e.g., the Rs. 250 per mensem.

7627. In practice, have the rules often to be disregarded and application made to the Government of India for sanction?—We do not often make application, because it is so very troublesome, but the fact that the restrictions exist often produces hard cases.

The Hon. Mr.
A. G. Cardew.

7628. How many cases would there be—half a dozen in the year would you say?—I do not suppose we should have more than that.

7629. You would be able to relieve a small grievance?—Yes. We have just had a case; a man travelling in some out-of-the-way place had to take 30 coolies to carry his kit; there is no rule which would enable us to pay him what it really cost him. We do not want to have to apply in a case of that sort; it is waste of time to go into questions of that sort—I mean waste of time to the Government of India.

7630. And the man suffers?—Well, in most cases I think he does.

7631. Do these other restrictions really occupy much time in correspondence with the Government of India?—I do not think so; I do not think there is a great deal of time lost beyond what is necessary; some of these financial restrictions might be somewhat relaxed.

7632. You have got no particular reason to complain of the Government of India in respect of the Department of Revenue and Agriculture?—No, I think they have been very sensible so long as I have seen their papers.

7633. But while you were Secretary in the Educational Department you did find an enormous mass of correspondence?—The Government of India write essays on education and send them to the Local Government.

7634. Does the passion for uniformity so re-act upon the Director-General of Public Instruction that he is a hindrance to educational schemes in a province when advising the Government of India on proposals made by provincial Governments?—It is quite possible of course, if you get a man of that type of mind.

7635. Have you ever had good reason to suspect that anything of that sort has arisen in cases that you yourself have known of?—No. I have not seen any instance of undue interference; but I feel sure that much more benefit would come from, say, sending our Director round to study Bengal results and Bombay results, than letting Mr. Somebody come and tell us what they do in Bengal or Bombay.

7636. Do you remember occasions when the Government of Madras have sent their Director round?—I was Inspector-General of Prisons for a long time; I went round and got a lot of useful information; I went to a number of jails in Bengal, some in the Punjab and some in the North-Western Provinces. We had a conference of the different Inspectors-General of Prisons and I afterwards went round and inspected several jails. No man coming and telling me things would have brought them home to me in the way they were brought home to me by actually seeing the jails. I feel quite clear that that is the best plan, so far as regards the instruction of provincial officers.

7637. There is an Imperial Director of Criminal Investigation?—Yes; that is for police, not for prisons: there is no imperial officer for jails.

7638. And, notwithstanding the absence of an imperial officer, you get on pretty well?—Yes.

7639. Who presided at the conference of which you spoke just now?—The Inspector-General of Jails in Bengal, who was the senior officer present.

7640. Notwithstanding that he was not an imperial officer, did you get on well at the conference?—Oh, yes, extremely well, and we got considerable good out of the conference.

7641. Suppose that the Heads of provincial Departments were to go touring about in the way you speak of, looking for information and getting it, would that interfere in any way with the discharge of their ordinary functions?—The Director of Public Instruction could quite well carry on his work, or at any rate his Deputy could look after his work until he came back. If he went for three weeks he would see a great deal. And of course there is no comparison as to the cost of the two methods; that which I suggest is very much the cheaper—just some little travelling allowance. Then, too, there is always the danger that an expert adviser will be a man with cast-iron views of his own.

7642. On the other hand, he might be a very intelligent man, and be able to give most useful information to one province from what he has seen and learned in others?—One is sure to learn a great deal in going round.

7643. You think that, so long as a Director-General can be confined solely to giving advice, he is a useful officer?—Of course he may be.

7644. But he must be bound down very tightly not to interfere in administration?—Yes, that is so; but when it comes to advising the Government of India, he naturally advises on projects that come up, and that advice may have the effect of producing unnecessary uniformity.

7645. You tell us that you have not been very much impressed by the necessity for curtailing appeals?—No.

7646. How long is it since you did Collector's work?—Four years.

7647. Are you considering the case of officers drawing smaller pay or of officers drawing higher pay, or is it general?—I meant it to cover all the questions.

7648. You think that any curtailment of the right of appeal would produce dissatisfaction?—It would certainly produce dissatisfaction.

7649. It would cause such serious dissatisfaction, or at all events such dissatisfaction, that it is not worth while abolishing the appeals?—I think so; the native loves to have his case looked into.

7650. Are the districts here too large?—Yes, I think so, undoubtedly too large.

7651. Do you think their size interferes with good executive work?—I certainly think they do. I had a very heavy charge, much too heavy for one man; they have had a second man there now for a long time.

7652. No removal from the Collector's shoulders of the necessity of reference in small matters would really enable them to tackle one of these big districts?—I think not; and it is not only the Collector, it is the Superintendent of Police, the District Engineer, the District Board Engineer—the whole administration would benefit if there were smaller charges.

7653. And that, in this Presidency at all events, is one of the root difficulties?—It is.

7654. Have you noticed any particular evil arising from the necessity or the habit of too constant transfers?—I think I may say yes.

7655. How could that be remedied?—Take a Divisional Officer; he has charge of three taluks; they are all of very considerable size; if he stays in his district for three years he has a fair chance of knowing the chief people, knowing his taluk Board members well, knowing who is fit to go on to the Board, and also of learning the character of his subordinate officials, which is a very important point; but if he is only there six months he cannot obtain any of that knowledge. These constant transfers tend to destroy a man's interest in his work; if he is changed about from place to place every six months or so, it is only natural that he should lose interest in his work.

7656. How is it possible to avoid that difficulty?—It is very difficult to say. I can only suggest that there should be a sort of prima facie rule that a man should stay for three years. Of course, it could not be a hard-and-fast rule; it could not work always; men have to get leave, men have to get promotion; it is very difficult. Personal grading has done a good deal in other provinces.

7657. You are in a different position in this Presidency?—Yes; our Collectors are not yet graded personally, so that there is extra pay attached to different districts; that means that some particular man may be appointed to a particular district so as to give him the extra pay, on the ground that he is the senior man; that is all proposed to be altered now; the proposals are before Government.

7658. You say you have not yet personal grading of Collectors?—We still have three districts where the extra pay attaches to the district, and once you send a man there you cannot very well take him away unless to some place where he will get the same pay.

7659. How long will it be before the change that is proposed will come into operation?—Mr. Meyer proposed this in 1904; a further reference came the other day from the Government of India; I should hope that two years ought to see the end of the present system.

7660. In a question of this kind why should there have been all this delay?—It is a complicated matter; I suppose there has been some reason for its detention in Simla.

7661. However, you think that the Government here is blameless?—Less to blame, I should say.

7662. You tell us that it would not be well to have Advisory Councils, because a great deal of the work might have to be gone over again. What had you in view?—The Collector would have to go into any matter pretty closely himself in order to introduce it to his Council; then he would have to talk it over with the members of his Council; then he would have to go back and pass his orders; or if he disagreed he would have to write a letter and refer the matter.

7663. As an illustration you put the case of a proposal for a tank; you say that the Collector now would study the plans, read the reports of his subordinates, and then pass his orders. Is it not possible that the actual work—not his work, but the work contemplated—has sometimes to be done twice, because it is first put in the wrong place, or something of that sort?—A mistake may be made of course; the more you consolidate, the more chance of mistakes.

7664. Does that sort of thing occur in practice?—It must occur; I cannot tell you the percentage of cases, but it must occur.

7665. Then the danger of doing work twice may exist under both conditions?—Yes, but I submit that it is absolutely certain that you must do the work twice when you have to discuss it with a Council.

7666. Would it not be better to discuss a thing twice than perhaps to dig a tank twice?—I see the point; but at the same time I fancy that the number of cases where you would dig your tank twice would be very very small.

7667. You think the first danger would be larger than the second?—Yes, unquestionably; it would be certain; it must increase work.

7668. You suggest to us that village communal life is still in existence. We have had a certain amount of evidence to tell us that the communal Council has died out?—Communal life is undoubtedly in existence.

7669. It has decayed and is decaying?—The tendency is to decay. Education of course makes a man stand on his legal right, and he goes to the courts.

7670. At any rate, it has not so far decayed that it might not be easy to resuscitate it?—No.

7671. Then with regard to these municipal bodies you say that the control exercised by Government is so detailed that little scope for self-government remains. Is that your deliberate judgment?—Yes; they cannot do very much.

7672. Is that a good or a bad result?—I think it is rather a bad result; it destroys the object of self-government.

7673. And you would like to extend the functions of local bodies?—I think so. If you are going to have local bodies you should make them a reality, and let them run their own show, and make their own mistakes and learn wisdom thereby.

7674. You think the experiment, even though it might result every now and then in financial blunders and even disaster, would be worth making?—I think so; I should be prepared to try it. The chief difficulty is about the roads.

7675. The last witness told us that the essential condition of an increased grant of self-government must be that the local bodies should be financially responsible in every degree; would you make that same condition? The provincial Government must not be called upon to make good the financial defects and blunders and deficiencies of the local authority; do you agree with that?—It seems sound.

7676. You would also attach that same condition?—I think so certainly, just as a Corporation at home does not come down on the central Government to make good its debts.

7677. If it gets into debt or becomes bankrupt it must make good its financial liabilities?—I think so; that should be part of the idea.

7678. Has the necessity of imposing taxation for municipal purposes rendered municipal bodies in this country unpopular and even undesired?—Yes, if you can judge from the press; we have had petitions objecting to the constitution of towns as municipalities.

7679. Therefore if you gave all local bodies increased freedom, coupling that with full financial responsibility for their acts, it might be some time before such bodies became popular?—Yes. Taxation is always unpopular, and they are afraid of extra taxation.

7680. But the control of Government over these local bodies is such, both administrative and financial, that the localities do not recognise what financial responsibility means?—Yes, they do not realise it; they are told that they must raise their land tax from $2\frac{1}{2}$ to $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.; they do not do it of their own free will; they do it because Government tells them they must do it.

7681. Therefore it would be a long time before the extension of freedom of Government in local affairs would be popular?—I am afraid so, in most cases.

7682. However, taking the advantages with the disadvantages, you think the experiment is worth trying?—As a political one, yes.

7683. Do these questions all come to you in sufficient number to enable you to tell us whether there would be an increase of work in your department or the reverse if the local bodies were granted greater freedom of action?—It would enormously reduce the work of the Local and Municipal Department.

7684. How would it affect your work?—It would hardly affect the Revenue Department at all.

7685. You mention to us the desirability of increasing the powers of native officers and especially the tahsildars; would that decrease your work considerably?—Not my work, the Collectors' and the Divisional Officers' work; it might even increase their work, by giving them appeals instead of original orders, but that one cannot really foresee.

7686. Suppose that power of remission in cases of dry revenue was given to the Collector, would that, do you think, endanger your provincial revenue to any serious extent?—I am afraid it might.

7687. There is no limit to his powers of remission in wet land cases?—No.

7688. Could there not be some limit put to his power of remission in dry land cases, so that at any rate he might grant relief in urgent cases?—The number of units is less in the case of wet crops. We have some three million landholders, each holding under a separate title, some holding only a quarter of an acre.

7689. If the quarter of an acre does not bear crops, why should you not grant relief to persons who need it?—I mentioned that only by way of illustration. Then, a part of the difficulty arises out of the fallows. About 20 per cent. I think of the dry areas remain fallow annually. In those cases you have no means of telling whether a man has left it fallow because he wanted it to be fallow, or because he wanted to graze his cattle, or whether it was owing to the failure of rains that he could not grow anything.

*The Hon. Mr.
A. G. Cardew.*
30 Nov., 1907.

*The Hon. Mr.
A. G. Cardew.*
30 Nov., 1907.

7690. How many villages does a revenue inspector have to overlook?—An average divisional charge is 595 villages; a taluk charge is 246 villages; a revenue inspector's charge would be about a quarter of that, about 60 or 70.

7692. At all events, you think that it would be impossible to permit a Collector to have any discretion in regard to the remission of dry revenue?—In ordinary years; of course he has it in cases of famine.

7693. If it is possible to entrust him with that discretion in famine years, why is it not possible to trust to his discretion in ordinary years, and if he fails, pull him up very severely?—In famine years he does not give any remission on a field; he is obliged to give it by a whole tract of country, because of the difficulty of discriminating between field and field in dry land.

7694. You would not compel the Collector to give remissions; all you would do would be to allow him to give it where the circumstances justified it; you would not give him that discretion?—I am afraid it might be very disastrous indeed.

7695. (Mr. Hichens.) Is it the fact as to remissions in respect of wet crops that the principle is, so to speak, cut and dried, that the rules and regulations are so clear that it is really a question that can be decided by anybody who is on the spot?—If you know the facts; the difficulty is to know whether there was water in the tank.

7696. It is one of those questions where the personal equation does not come in?—It comes in a great deal in judging the evidence as to the facts. You have a certain amount of information as to whether there was water; you have to apply that information; some men take a favourable view of what amount of water is required for the crops, some take another view.

7697. But the personal equation would come in as much in connection with wet crops as in connection with dry crops?—I think so; it comes in a great deal undoubtedly.

7698. You have said that the Collector is at the present time over-worked?—In many districts.

7699. And in order to ease him, in the first instance you propose to give him somewhat wider powers, to remove a certain amount of routine work from him—that is to say, to prevent references from Government?—Yes.

7700. Would that help very much do you think; speaking broadly, if your suggestions were carried out, would he be really appreciably better off?—I daresay you could save 10 per cent. of his work.

7701. As much as that?—I should think so, by taking all these minor things and deleting a lot of other things which could be cut out no doubt by careful scrutiny. Court of Wards' work is very heavy; I do not see why we should not take up that point and get the Court of Wards to delegate a lot more power to Collectors.

7702. Would the Collector have a clerk in his office who could draft all the letters for him in regard to these points and he merely have to sign them; would it involve much personal work on his own part referring them to Government?—Yes, I think the Collector often takes more trouble over letters to Government than over letters to anybody else.

7703. I take it that the more substantial suggestion you would have to make would be the reduction in size of the district?—Yes; in the direction of better administration that is, I think, the most important.

7704. Would the reduction in your opinion have to be pretty considerable?—It would have to be so to give any great relief.

7705. Roughly, would you double the number of districts?—I never regarded that as within the range of practical politics; I think we proposed to create 3 new districts.

7706. You think that would be enough?—That would relieve the heaviest charges at present.

7707. There are something like 24 districts now, and to create another three is roughly the idea you have in your mind?—Those are the proposals already before the Government of India.

7708. That is enough you think to achieve the object of relieving the Collector and giving him the time he wants?—No, I do not think so; it is only the barest first step towards relief; I should double that number.

7709. You would want 6 or 8 more at least?—Quite.

7710. That would to some extent have the effect of increasing the work of the central provincial administration?—Slightly perhaps, but not much.

7711. You would have 6 or 8 additional Collectors?—Yes, you would have more sets of returns to be tabulated, and so on.

7712. If you had a larger number of districts as you suggest, would it be advisable to create some intermediary authority between the Collector and the central provincial Government?—No, I do not believe in intermediate authority very much.

7713. I mean a Commissioner?—Of course we have got the Commissioner in collective form.

7714. The Board of Revenue you mean?—Yes.

7715. But if you had smaller districts it would to some extent reduce the importance of Collectors?—Yes, there would be more of them.

7716. And they would have smaller charges?—Yes.

7717. Would it be desirable under those circumstances to create an intermediate local authority?—No, I think you would only get a post office probably, and if you did get a man who was not merely a post office, at any rate it would only be putting a fifth wheel in the coach.

7718. You do not think that what you call the collective Commissioner, that is the Board of Revenue, would have the same tendency?—Well, there are only two Land Revenue Commissioners, and they have the whole 24 districts to deal with; if you had a Commissioner in each division I think there would be a tendency to refer to the Commissioner for orders.

7719. You would not favour that?—Not at all.

7720. (Mr. Dutt.) You have said that if there is relaxation of the restrictions imposed by law, the relaxation should be given by specific amendments and not by a general Act of Delegation. I suppose if a general Act of Delegation was passed there might be a tendency to delegate powers too often?—There might. I think it is improper to say that the Governor-General in Council may delegate whatever he chooses. If the discretion were exercised in an unwise way it might cause improper delegation.

7721. There might be a danger of a break in the continuity of policy from time to time?—Yes.

7722. So that on the whole you are strongly of opinion that if any relaxation was allowed it ought to be allowed by specific amendments?—I think so; I think it is best to say, "These are the powers you want, you shall have them," rather than to take the power of giving everything.

7723. You say that in some cases improvements have been brought about by the Local Government and in other cases they have been brought about by the Imperial Government, but, in some large measures of administration like the creation of Local Boards and the creation of elective municipalities, have they not been the ideas of the Imperial Government?—It would differ in different provinces. I think we had Local Boards down here before the Imperial Government took the matter up.

7724. Not elective Local Boards?—No; probably a movement like election would come from the Imperial Government.

7725. With regard to the creation of Advisory Councils, you say it would add to the work of the Collector, and also in some cases cause delay in work; are there not some matters in which it is worth while that there should be a little delay in order that the opinions and the views of the people might be ascertained?—Yes.

7727. But take matters which do not come up before the District Board; the Advisory Council might be called upon to consider matters like plague measures?—In the case of plague measures it would be rather difficult; they would advise you to take no measures, then what would you do?

7728. In the matter of segregating patients and the examination of women and so on, would not the Collector get valuable advice from his Advisory Council?—That is so probably, but you would only want two or three sensible fellows to do that.

7729. The Advisory Council might consist of two or three or more?—The fewer the better.

7730. In certain matters would it be worth while to delay operations in order to get the advice of really sensible men?—I cannot give a negative answer to that.

7731. Would that also have the effect of associating the people with the Collector in matters which really concern their own interests?—I do not think it would associate the people very much, because you would have to have a very small number to make it a working thing, and the Collector would consult 3 or 4 of the prominent men who formed his Council. They would of course be individuals who would speak only as individuals; they would not have any representative power.

7732. You do not think it would be possible to get on the Board men who would represent the views of some of the communities?—Would you have anything bigger than a panchayat? The native idea is the best; you might have five and not go further; as soon as you get more it would be a mere matter of speeches.

7733. I was only asking your opinion on the general question whether to some extent it would not associate representative men with the Collector in the work which really concerns the people themselves?—It would of course.

7734. You speak of giving the village courts civil jurisdiction up to Rs. 200, and you call attention to the Regulation XI. of 1816 which gives some small punitive powers to the village head-man. If you advocate the creation of village panchayats, would you still keep these civil powers in the village munsiff or would you transfer them to these village panchayats?—I would not deprive the village munsiff of his powers, because he does an enormous amount of useful work, and to root up what you have got in order to put down something better is a mistake.

7735. In any village having a panchayat for the first time you would be inclined to try the experiment of giving some small civil powers to such a panchayat as a body, instead of investing any particular man with those powers?—Yes, I think the Act provides for that.

7736. Also, you would be inclined to invest them with some small powers to dispose of petty suits and so on?—Yes, I think in those matters where you want a decision the panchayat does very well—where you want an adjudicator, not executive action.

7737. Under the present Act a large amount of the executive power is vested in the President of these Boards and municipalities alone. Would you favour the idea of creating little sub-committees and transferring to them certain branches of administration, like the inspection of schools?—I am in favour of their doing it, but I would not favour amending the Act.

7738. The Act provides it, but would you be in favour of following it up and doing it?—Certainly, if you can only get them to work in that way.

7739. If you did create these little committees, might there be a chance of making them take more interest in their work?—The only way of getting a man to take interest is to give him something concrete and definite, and let him work at it; at present that has not been done very much.

7740. (Sir Steynning Egerley.) You say you are opposed to borrowing by Local Governments?—I am not an authority on the subject, but it does not seem to me workable.

7741. Not for small local purposes in rupee loans?—You mean on behalf of local bodies?

7742. Not necessarily?—Then whose credit would be pledged? Would the local provincial credit be pledged? That is the difficulty that strikes me. You either pledge the imperial credit, or not. If you mean only to pledge the provincial revenues, which the Imperial Government can withdraw by a stroke of the pen, you would have to pay a great deal more. No one would lend to a man whose resources might be taken away.

7743. Are not the provincial settlements permanent now?—Our own is just under revision. I do not think you can call a provincial settlement permanent.

7744. The only purpose for which I suggested the question was, if you have a big public works which you see is very advisable, and it is a little bit beyond your current revenue, and the people of the district are interested in it, could you not tap capital that the Government of India would never reach?—You ought to, but, somehow, apparently you cannot.

7745. It has never been tried?—It has not been tried in that way.

7746. You would be opposed to that sort of thing?—Only because I think you would pay more; you would have to offer better rates.

7747. But the Imperial Government cannot always increase their own borrowings sufficiently to meet the demands all over India?—I am not qualified really to give an opinion on those points about borrowing.

7748. As to the procedure for delegation, you say you think it is improper that it should be done except by means of specific legislation. Of course that is the a priori view, but do you consider it entirely a question of principle, or is it a question of expediency?—There is a risk, of course, of a general power not being wisely used.

7749. We hear it often called giving a blank cheque to the executive; that is the argument, put in a few words?—I can conceive an indiscreet use being made of it very easily.

7750. By the provincial Government?—I think so.

7751. In this Presidency, you have got certain provisions of the law which are based on that principle. There is a provision in the Court of Wards Act, section 8, and there are provisions in your Municipal Act?—We also have a provision which I think is rather an improper one, in our Excise Act; it is very sweeping.

7752. And in the Local Boards Act too, section 160?—I think you are not quite correct. However, there are a few instances of the other principle.

7753. Are you at all acquainted with the codification of the Civil Procedure Codes in India?—Very slightly.

7754. We may take it that the Act of 1859 and the Act of the seventies and the Act of the eighties, were all instances of specific legislation?—Yes.

7755. You are aware that the Government of India has amended that principle in this new Bill?—Yes

The Hon. Mr.
A. G. Cardew.
30 Nov., 1907.

The Hon. Mr. A. G. Cardew. 7756. Do you think that that is improper?—It is convenient; I hardly approve of it; it is legislation by rules.

30 Nov., 1907. 7757. Do you not think it is rather a question of expediency than principle?—But in this case there is no great expediency. I think it is a question of principle.

7758. Do you know the English Public Health Act at all?—No.

7759. That, of course, was specific legislation. Do you know that they had to induce the legislature to pass a much more general Act to help them through in particular instances?—Yes.

7760. So that specific legislation in certain instances may be ineffectual and unsuitable?—I understand that there are such examples.

7761. In the case I put from England it was found to be so, and it has evidently been found to be so in the Indian Civil Procedure Code?—Yes.

7762. Suppose for the purpose of transferring powers from the Central Government to the Local Government, or from the Local Government to subordinates, you say that all the legislation must be in the Viceroy's Council?—I thought it would be more convenient; it is only a question of convenience.

7763. Then the result would be that if you proceed by specific legislation you will want in the Legislative Council as many Acts as there are provinces?—I do not see that.

7764. The circumstances of all the provinces are different?—You could have a schedule.

7765. Then you would have to have as many schedules as there are provinces?—Yes, schedules in one Bill.

7766. How long do you suppose it would take to pass such an Act with 8 or 10 schedules, taking your experience of imperial legislation?—One season I should have thought.

7767. That is to introduce it into Council, but I mean to carry it through Council?—Each Local Government would have to check its schedule.

7768. Then would you not have to come again two or three years later, on the experience of the English Public Health Act, and have to do the whole thing over again?—There is that possibility, no doubt; that is the main reason in favour of a general Act.

7769. To save delay and difficulty and constant trouble?—No doubt there is that danger; it is a question of expediency.

7770. I suggest to you that the question of expediency arises pretty strongly?—Yes.

7771. Now, you have got these general powers here in the Municipal Acts, the Local Boards Acts and the Court of Wards Act, and you say that the great risk is that they will be too frequently used?—Indiscreetly used, I said.

7772. I thought you said also too frequently used?—I do not lay stress on the word "frequent." It was suggested to me that it might produce fluctuations in policy; I do not think that is very likely.

7773. You have got these very general provisions here; have you ever heard of any public complaint about their abuse?—No, I do not think we have so far.

7774. You know that there is a similar Act on the other side of India, in Bombay, which has been in use over 40 years?—I thought there it was a very special case; you had a Commissioner who was a little Local Government.

7775. Then you suggest that it is impossible to lay down any principle as regards the relations between the Government of India and the Local Government in administrative matters. Are not the Government of India capable of following suitable principles if they could be enunciated?—Certainly, if they could be enunciated.

7776. Would it be very difficult to enunciate principles that might be workable as to the relations between the provincial Government and the Imperial Government?—In administrative matters it would be rather difficult, I should think.

7777. In 1870 the Government of India published a self-denying ordinance that they desired "to confine the interference of the Supreme Government of India, in the administration of the provincial service, to what is necessary for the discharge of the responsibility which the Viceroy in Council owes to the Queen and her advisers" (that is one principle) "for the purpose of securing adherence to the financial conditions now prevailing" (that is a second principle) "and to the general policy of the Government of India" (that is a third principle). Do you not think that those cover the ground very carefully?—I should think that they would be almost quite useless. I do not think it would give you any criterion in a particular question—say remissions of revenue.

7778. Take it in regard to this question of the delocalization of tahsildars' appointments. If principles of that sort were really followed the Government of India would at once see that a question of that sort was altogether outside their sphere of influence? I mean, it is entirely outside those three principles?—Those principles are so very vague that I am afraid they left very little impression on my mind.

7779. You can hardly say that a particular thing like that comes within either the question of the maintenance of financial conditions, or the question of general policy, or a question as to which the Viceroy is reasonably responsible to the Secretary of State?—Yes, I agree to that.

7780. So that you might perhaps erect barriers behind which either department or Government might have a clear field, and an understanding of that sort might be useful?—Yes.

7781. Are you in favour of no delocalization of tahsildars?—I am in favour of making the grade personal within the district.

7782. Only within the district?—I think only within the district.

7783. For instance, you would not make it personal within linguistic groups—Tamil and Telugu?—No, because you take control away then from the local officer, i.e., the Collector; you would have control from headquarters: the Board or the Government here would have to control it; Government would not know one man from the other.

7784. You think it would be a disadvantage perhaps?—Yes, I do not think it would be sound.

7785. Then as to the Directors-General?—I said I thought that they might be harmless. I only come into contact with the Directors-General of Agriculture and Forests.

7786. Do you not come into contact with the latter except on invitation?—He is coming here immediately to make a tour. They wrote and asked if we would like him to come, and the Government here said they would be very pleased if he would come.

7787. Have you found the Director-General of Agriculture very useful?—Yes, I think he is rather useful.

7788. He does not attempt to give you any orders?—Not a bit; we have had no kind of complaint against him.

7789. He does not call for statistics or returns?—I do not think in matters of revenue there have been any calls of that sort; I understand there have been in other departments.

7790. Then he has a centre of research under his control at Pusa?—Yes.

7791. It is an advantage that your centres of research should be in contact with that?—Yes.

7792. Also he has periodical conferences with your Directors and experts?—Yes.

7793. All that is very useful?—Yes, I think that is very useful, certainly.

7794. May we say that the collection of information and research and the dissemination of information after research are very advantageous?—Yes.

7795. You are rather doubtful about the question of advice to the Central Government?—I only think that it might become a source of danger; I do not say that it is, in my limited experience.

7796. Is not the great danger direct administration on the advice of the Director-General?—My idea was that he would advise the Government of India to reject or modify schemes sent up, or insist upon some scheme of his own.

7797. That is, direct administration by the Central Government on the advice of the Director-General instead of on the advice of the provincial Government themselves?—Yes.

7798. So long as that danger is avoided you think there would be much useful work?—Yes.

7799. And you think that no measures are really too strong to avoid that danger?—It is hard to see what answer I could make to that.

7800. Would you cut off entirely any right of correspondence from the Director-General?—He has no right really of correspondence except upon purely technical matters.

7801. That is very apt to expand into orders?—You cannot practically prevent his writing, if it is only demi-officially.

7802. He cannot convey an order demi-officially?—He can convey information and instructions.

7803. Still it is always possible to disregard them?—He writes direct to the local head of the department and says, "My view is"—so and so.

7804. Would there be the danger, which you thought existed, of a general tendency to pass from correspondence and criticism into the conveyance of orders?—I have seen no evidence of such a tendency at present.

7805. Your evidence complained of the over-control of local bodies. You say that there is little scope left. Do you not think that over-control must always result where a central authority at a distance tries to administer in detail?—Yes, in detail.

7806. And you say that the endeavour to administer such local bodies has resulted in that way?—I think so.

7807. Would you be in favour of taking all that work out of the Secretariat?—Do you mean giving it to some non-central body?

7808. It would be an improvement even to give it to the Board, because the members of the Board tour?—I do not see much improvement in giving it to the Board; it was in the Board formerly.

7809. It has been taken from the Board?—It was taken from the Board, I think, in 1883; it would be only substituting one scheme for another.

7811. Local self-government here is really in its infancy?—What was the date of your Act?—Our Act was in 1871.

7812. I was thinking of the elective principle which you have never used?—In municipalities we use it.

7813. But not in the local bodies?—No.

7814. So that it is in its infancy?—Yes.

7815. Do you not want rather more than the absence of control; do you not want sympathy and help and fostering care for local self-government?—I would give it I think through the local officer and not through the central authority.

7816. But my point is that it is quite impossible to foster it as long as all control is vested in the Central Government?—Probably that is so.

7817. Can you suggest any sort of substitute for it?—No, the only substitute is the action of the District Officer, and he too should be outside—I have no scheme at all. It is a very difficult problem. The Hon. Mr. A. G. Cardew. 30 Nov., 1907.

7818. Do you think that the conversion of the Board of Revenue into territorial Commissioners with direct responsibility for a definite area in the Presidency for all departments would be likely to help local self-government?—It might. I have so little experience of what a Divisional Commissioner does that I can hardly realise it. It might help local self-government a little.

7820. (Mr. Meyer.) You are apparently still in favour of going to the Government of India in regard to the creation of new appointments above Rs. 250 a month?—It does not affect officers very much here. With Deputy Collectors, for instance, our top grade is Rs. 250, so that we are not tied down by the Rs. 250 limit. It might be better to put the limit up to Rs. 500.

7821. Are you aware that the Government of India has been given power recently to make new appointments up to Rs. 500, with the exception of appointments held by persons recruited in England?—No, I was not aware of that.

7822. As the Government of India's power has been enhanced, do you see any objection to the provincial Government's power being enhanced in like measure?—Not at all; I would draw the line at any point; Rs. 500 might do.

7823. You say the present limit enables you to make a new Deputy Collector; it does not enable you to re-grade the Collectors?—No, that is the difficulty.

7824. You would like a larger limit for that reason among others?—Even the limit of Rs. 500 would not do that.

7826. Would you ask for larger powers in regard to temporary appointments and deputations than you have at present?—If you make Rs. 500 or Rs. 750 the limit, I think you might extend the period for 12 months; beyond that I do not think they would be needed.

7827. Have you found the rule in Article 81 of the Civil Service Regulations, which restricts deputation now to 20 per cent. of the man's normal salary, to be inconveniently restrictive?—Most inconveniently restrictive; I ought to have mentioned that.

7828. Have you any proposal to make as to that?—The rule is most inconvenient; we have had to exempt a whole lot of classes of people.

7829. A deputation cannot now, without the sanction of the Government of India, exceed 20 per cent. of the salary the man would ordinarily draw. You would regard that as an inconvenient limit?—A very inconvenient limit.

7830. Have you any proposal to make on that score?—I should allow the Local Government power to give him any allowance within its limits of creating fresh appointments. You create an appointment at Rs. 100; you put in a man at Rs. 60; he can only get 20 per cent. of the Rs. 60; I do not see why you should not give the Local Government power to give him the full Rs. 100.

*The Hon. Mr.
A. G. Cardew.*
30 Nov., 1907.

7831. You put a man at Rs. 1,166 on special duty; you want to give him more than the 20 per cent. on the Rs. 1,166; would you recognise that as a case in which you think you should have to get special sanction?—I do not think it much matters when you get so large a pay.

7832. In regard to smaller appointments the Local Government you think might have a free hand?—Yes; it is a great nuisance having to go up for sanction.

7833. As regards your proposal about travelling allowances, you do not complain of the general travelling allowance rules, but you think the Local Government ought to have reasonable power to make exceptions in special cases?—Yes.

7834. You now have to go up to the Government of India about everything?—About any exception outside the rules.

7835. Now, as to the separation of local from provincial and imperial finance. You say the separation was advocated in the Madras Government letter of the 21st December 1906 and that then came the resolution of the Government of India of the 19th November 1907. Do you mean to imply that the Madras Government initiated the proposal?—We do not know who initiated it in the minds of the Government of India.

7836. I put it to you that your letter of December 1906 was in reply to a proposal made to you by the Government of India?—You are quite right.

7837. The initiation, so far as you are concerned, came from the Government of India?—Yes.

7838. As regards local borrowings in the open market. The only example you have had on any large scale was the case of the Tanjore District Railway?—That is the only case I remember.

7839. And there were a few loans of the Madras municipality?—I think so.

7840. Have you found there that the response to applications for such loans has been of such a character as to enable one to anticipate that local patriotism will induce subscriptions to provincial Government loans which would not be made to imperial loans?—I am afraid not; it is a pity, but I am afraid that there is not much response.

7841. And if that advantage was obtained you might have the countervailing disadvantage of having to pay higher terms?—I think you would; I think the Ootacamund Municipality pay 6 per cent.

7842. When it might have borrowed under the Local Loans Act at 4 per cent.?—Yes.

7843. As regards the power of general delegation, is your position that there are a number of powers which existing laws have placed in the hands of Government which might really without harm be given to subordinate authorities, but that there are other cases in which the public learned when the law was passed that the power would be left in the hands of the provincial Government or the Imperial Government as the case might be, and that they would condemn it as a sort of breach of faith if there were fresh general legislation transferring the power to the local authorities?—Yes. Perhaps the public might think it a breach of faith, and I think too that in such a case as making rules, which is a very large power, we ought not to be able to delegate it to the Board of Revenue say; there are rules creating criminal offences; there are dozens of such cases.

7844. But in other matters which do not affect the liberty of the subject, you would see no special objection to a general power of delegation, perhaps?—I should not like to commit myself to an affirmative reply as to whether in all other cases a general delegation might be given.

7845. You do not see your way to make a distinction between things essential and things non-essential, in the matter of delegation?—It is so difficult to define the difference.

7846. You would have to go to each Government and see how far the powers could be delegated or no?—You must do that, of course, and I think it ought to be done by the Legislature.

7847. You say that "The Home Department of the Government of India was not long ago rather given to issuing lengthy resolutions intended to inculcate uniformity in the least uniform of subjects"; what special case had you in your mind?—Some of the educational resolutions which were issued 3 or 4 years ago; I do not know that I can refer to precise instances.

7848. The resolution of March 1904 for instance laying down the general lines of educational policy?—That is a little later than anything I could have referred to; I was at home about that time.

7849. But education is the only department in which you have had special complaint to make?—In connection with these irrigation projects we are rather afraid that they are going to interfere with our system; that is the only case I know.

7850. You spoke of the Government of India requiring the Government of Madras to delocalise the tahsildars and grade them in a provincial list. Was that an order, or was that merely a suggestion made by the Governor-General in Council?—It was a suggestion which I think was intended to be something equivalent to an order.

7851. The Government of Madras has the opportunity of showing cause against it?—Yes.

7853. In principle, take the grading of tahsildars or anything else; might it not be legitimate for the Central Government to ask Madras or any other province whether the system that they had found to be successful in other parts of India might not be advantageously adopted in the province of Madras?—Of course there is no objection to their drawing attention to what has been found successful elsewhere.

7854. And asking the provincial Government to consider whether it should not be adopted in Madras and to show cause against the suggestion?—Yes, but I think in this case it was intended as almost an order, if not quite.

7855. The letter, in fact, was on that scheme of mine for the reconstitution of districts which has been under discussion as you say for some years?—Yes.

7856. In nearly every case the suggestions of the Government of Madras were accepted in that letter so far as the Government of India could accept them?—Yes, I think so.

7857. There may have been some slight alterations in grading, but, against several proposals of yours that were absolutely accepted, this is the one proposal which the Government of India did not quite see the force of and they asked you to reconsider it?—Yes.

7858. You have indicated as a possible objection to the Directors-General and Inspectors-General that their advice may tend to undue uniformity; you admit that, under financial or administrative rules or otherwise, a certain number of cases must go up from the provincial Government to the Imperial Government; you must have a certain control?—Yes.

7859. Under the present system, the Member of Council or the Secretary who deals with these matters in the Government of India is generally a Civilian taken from a particular province, is he not?—Yes, I believe so, generally.

7860. He has had his whole training before he went to the Government of India in some one province?—Yes.

7861. Would there not be a tendency on the part of such an officer to think that what was suited to his old province was suited to other provinces?—I am told so.

7862. Might not that be corrected by an Inspector-General who had been around the different provinces and who was able to say, "I can assure you that what is suited to Bengal is not suited to Madras because the conditions differ altogether"?—Yes, or he might come from the same province and aggravate the tendency.

7863. But if he had been around himself might not his visits shake any doctrinaire ideas that he had formed from one particular province?—No doubt there is some experience obtained by the Directors-General.

7864. You said it would be much cheaper for your Director of Public Instruction, for instance, to tour round the other provinces than for an Imperial Director-General to be appointed; but it would be necessary for seven other provinces, at least, besides Madras, to send their Directors of Public Instruction touring around; if you added up the cost of all these officers and the loss of time caused by the provincial Directors being away from their duties, would there not be a considerable balance on the other side?—I doubt it very much—no, I think not.

7865. You think it would still be less expensive?—Yes; there is the matter of pensions and so on; it is much more expensive of course to have an imperial specialist.

7866. You spoke of material benefit that you had derived from the conference on jails that you attended; was that conference initiated by the Government of India?—Yes.

7867. If you had formal and regular conferences, would you have them meet at automatic periods or only when the Government of India thought fit to decide?—When the Government of India thought fit; I hardly think it is necessary to have an automatic period.

7868. Some time after you attended that conference and got, as you say, much valuable information there, you ceased to be Inspector of Prisons?—Yes.

7869. And all that valuable knowledge was lost to your successor?—Yes, that is perfectly obvious; men must change, and experience goes with them, not only in that case but in others, e.g., the imperial experts themselves.

7870. You say that the initiative in bringing the proposal of co-operation to the aid of rural credit belongs to this province through Sir Frederick Nicholson. Sir Frederick Nicholson of course submitted a most valuable report, but had the Madras Government done anything special upon it prior to 1904 when the Government of India passed their Agricultural Credit Societies Act?—No, nothing I think.

7871. Therefore, though credit for the immediate initiative belongs to Sir Frederick Nicholson, the credit of the Government initiative belongs in a way to the Government of India?—Yes.

7872. You spoke of reforms very likely to be carried out on the report of the Excise Committee; you have studied that report of course?—Yes.

7873. Was it not one of the findings of that Committee that the provinces had worked far too much in water-tight compartments, as they expressed it?—Yes.

7874. And in several special cases Madras was held up to other provinces?—Yes, or Madras methods.

7875. And on the other hand Madras itself in some minor respects was criticised?—Yes.

7876. Might not the work of that Committee have been saved and to a certain extent anticipated if you had had an Inspector-General of Excise travelling about the provinces and communicating with the Government of India?—Yes, it might; but I think it would have done more good by sending the Excise Officer of Bombay, say, here to Madras to study our methods.

7877. An Excise Officer did come down from the United Provinces to study your methods some time ago?—Yes.

7878. Do you gather from the evidence afforded by the Excise Committee's report that his visit had any practical effect in the United Provinces?—I do not know what effect it had.

7879. You spoke of the number of transfers and of the personal grading of Sub-Collectors and Head Assistants as a great reform in that direction. Was that measure adopted by the Madras Government or was it ordered by the Government of India?—I do not know.

7880. As regards the transfers of Collectors, are they not caused a great deal by the strict regard to seniority in the matter of acting appointments?—I do not think that is so much the case now as formerly.

7881. If a Collector took anything more than 3 months' privilege leave would they put in the senior Civilian Divisional Officer in the district, or would they put in another man who was say a couple of years senior to him from outside?—They would probably bring the man from outside if it was more than three months' leave.

7882. Does that not in itself make a certain number of transfers from district to district?—Yes.

7883. I am not speaking of permanent promotions, but might it not be advisable in the way of acting promotions to take the man on the spot if he was fit?—I agree.

7884. Is sufficient regard to language paid in making transfers, or is a man moved from a Tamil district to a Telugu district, or from a Telugu district to a Tamil district?—I should be inclined to keep men entirely inside the Telugu country or the Tamil country as far as possible.

7885. But is it done at present at all?—I think not; I do not think it is done as much as it might be.

7886. Would you be in favour of passing over unfit men as Collectors?—Yes.

7887. Without reference to any particular persons, do you think that hitherto there have been some men made Collectors who were not really fit to be such?—Yes.

7888. You yourself, you said, were in favour of the creation of some 8 districts more; that would make 32 districts in all?—I do not tie myself down to that number; I only suggested, or rather it was suggested to me, that there might be 8 more.

7889. Do you really think that 32 districts could be managed directly by the Board of Revenue; it would be rather a large team to drive?—I do not see that there would be any greatly increased difficulty.

7890. There would be 32 letters and references instead of 24 on subjects of general reference, and reports and returns; and in the Government Departments in the same way they would have to deal with 32 districts instead of 24; do you not think that that would over-burden headquarters?—I do not think so.

7891. You say that Collectors are overworked and can only be relieved by this considerable increase of districts; at the same time you are against giving larger powers to the Divisional Officer?—No, I did not mean to convey that impression; on the contrary, I would give them powers in many cases.

7892. I gathered that your real devolution of power was to be to the tahsildar and not to the Divisional Officer?—I did not mean to convey that.

7893. If you gave further powers to the Divisional Officer would you not reduce the Collector's work a great deal?—Yes, his work would be reduced in proportion.

*The Hon. Mr.
A. G. Cardew.*
50 Nov., 1907.

The Hon. Mr. A. G. Cardew. 7894. You spoke of the delay that would happen if the Collector had an Advisory Council to consult. Does not a Collector consult Indian gentlemen at present in regard to various matters with which he has to deal?—Occasionally perhaps.

7895. Would it not be rather a case of having a Board of recognised advisers instead of advisers whom the Collector varies at discretion and whom a new Collector might find some difficulty in selecting?—It would be a good deal more than that I think.

7896. As regards the giving of larger functions to panchayats, you have served in Madura as Collector; there were very serious feuds there between the Shanars and other Hindu castes?—Yes.

7897. Suppose you had a considerable number of high-caste people in a village panchayat, they would not be likely to be very tender to the Shanars?—In localities where you have that very bitter feeling there would be that danger; you might have a little trouble.

7898. Would you not have to restrict the powers of the panchayat in such cases, or how would you meet that difficulty?—I think you would have to restrict the powers of the panchayat in those localities where you have two races on such bad terms.

7899. You would have to have some guarantee for the protection of the minority?—Yes.

7900. The present Secretary in the Local and Municipal Department told us finally that he thought the Sanitary Board did not serve any useful purpose; that the scientific advice required could be obtained from the Sanitary Commissioner and the Sanitary Engineer, and that such central control as was required could be got from the Government. Do you share that view?—Yes.

7901. The Sanitary Board as at present constituted you think is unnecessary?—Perfectly useless I think.

7902. Would you see your way to giving the Collectors a power of control, over the lesser municipalities at any rate, that is now kept in the hands of Government; might not the Collector review the municipality's budget, and pass it, and deal with the administration report, and give such sanctions as the Government now requires to come to it?—Yes, if you have your 8 extra districts and relieve the Collectors materially in other ways, so as not to utterly break their backs.

7903. But how does this affect the work of the Collector; he is now passing the things on to Government; therefore, instead of writing a report to Government he would write his sanction or order; would it not rather diminish his work?—I do not think so in practice; at present he writes an endorsement which is not very long; he does not feel any great responsibility; he has no power except to offer an opinion.

7904. As a matter of politics, you think the Collector might do it?—I am not in favour of it; I think the proposal should be to leave municipalities alone—to give them a free hand.

7905. There must be some control or would you give them an entirely free hand?—There should be an audit I think.

7906. Suppose a municipality neglects its sanitation and becomes the centre of disease, might it not be best for Government to take steps?—Only I think in case of plague; I would not in other respects.

7907. Or cholera?—No, I should be inclined to give a free hand there.

7908. Suppose it was thought desirable that Government should exercise some control, might it be expedient to entrust it to the Collector instead of to the Central Government?—Yes, I think that would be a very good devolution.

7909. You say that the difficulty about dry remissions is that one field might have been left fallow and so on?—That is one difficulty.

7910. Is there not also some similar difficulty about wet remissions? For instance, a remission is not to be granted when there is either no crop on a wet field, or the crop has failed, owing to the raiyat's own neglect; is not that a principle of the remission rules?—Yes.

7911. And is it not also a principle that, where the season has been such that although it was not possible to raise a wet crop it was possible to raise a dry crop, only the difference between the wet and the dry assessments should be granted?—Yes.

7912. Consequently you have gradations of remission even in regard to wet fields?—You only give the difference, as you say. You have varying circumstances to consider.

7913. Then I do not quite see the distinction in principle between the wet and the dry crop. For instance, if a Divisional Officer or a Collector can be trusted to discriminate between the fields in which there has been no crop owing to the neglect of the raiyat, and those in which there has been no crop owing to circumstances over which the raiyat had no control, might he not also discriminate roughly in regard to dry crops between lands in which the crop had failed from causes beyond the raiyat's control and fields which would ordinarily have been left alone?—I think there is a distinction. In the case of the wet land you have an appeal to a fact—as to whether water was available—but in the case of the dry land how are you to tell whether there was a shower on the field sufficient to enable a dry crop to be raised?

7914. I do not think it has been suggested that there should be the same remission on dry crops as on wet crops, because your dry assessments make a large allowance for bad seasons which the wet assessments do not?—That is another point of course.

7915. The point is, when circumstances are so bad as to justify dry remissions, should you not give the Collector some discretion in the matter?—I think not in the case of isolated fields; there are the other objections which you allude to, such as that the settlement involves an allowance of 10 to 25 per cent. which is intended to cover those very vicissitudes of season.

7916. Would you give any larger powers to Collectors in regard to the granting of agricultural loans?—Yes; I think one of the proposals of the Government of Madras is to increase the power of the Collector; it is proposed to raise it I think to Rs. 5,000.

7917. (Chairman.) How much of the work of the office which comes through you do you settle yourself without sending up to the Member?—A very small quantity—only with regard to unimportant work.

7918. About a quarter should we say?—Yes. I should not put it at more. I put it even lower, say a fifth.

7919. With regard to that amount of work which you could settle yourself, which probably comes to you from officers of either the same, or greater experience than your own, do you not think it would be possible and desirable to delegate power to deal with that correspondence to other officers?—Yes, there are certain cases in which we do propose either to do it, or to ask the Government of India to do it, which will cover that class of work—things like applications, and so on.

7921. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) You said you thought that you might give delegation of powers subject to the submission of returns. For instance, the authorities which were immediately subordinate might be given considerable authority subject to reporting at intervals, monthly or quarterly or whatever you might think it ought to be; have you thought that out at all, or would you be prepared to do it?—I do not like the principle of returns very much except to shew that the total is not excessive.

7922. There are certain powers which you reserve over the Board of Revenue. Suppose you say to the Board "You may exercise for a given time any powers you like subject to a monthly return to us of what you have done"; you would then on that return get that information. I suppose you have that system in the Secretariat?—Yes, we have.

The Hon. Mr. A. G. Cardew.

7923. Could not that system be extended between the Government and other officers?—I think it exists.

30 Nov., 1907.

Mr. WALTER FRANCIS was called and examined.

7924. (Chairman.) Will you state your present official position?—I am a member of the Indian Civil Service, at present officiating as Collector of Malabar. Overwork is by far the most important obstacle to personal contact between the people and the Executive Officers. An officer who can only just get through his papers by 8 hours' steady work a day has little inclination to spend time in conversing with the people or visiting remote villages. Something should be done to lighten Collectors' work by giving them the extended powers in matters relating to revenue, general administration and the Court of Wards, by giving them wider financial and other authority, and by lessening the existing restrictions imposed upon them in their capacity as Presidents of District Boards. Collectors might be given lump allotments, based on the actuals of previous years, for expenditure on their own authority on the many petty miscellaneous matters which now have to be referred to Government for specific sanction. For example, if more than Rs. 2 is expended upon burying a destitute pauper, Government have to sanction the outlay; a few annas spent upon caring for a child deserted by its mother needs Government sanction; one of the sub-jails in Malabar is far from any Local Fund hospital, and every time a prisoner is sick the Hospital Assistant from a neighbouring Medical Mission is called in, and every time Government have to be specially applied to for sanction to his fee of Rs. 2. Instances might be multiplied almost indefinitely. They are specially numerous in estates under the Court of Wards.

In the case of municipalities, again, a Collector has to exercise much detailed control; certain classes of correspondence between the Council and the Government pass through him and he is expected to give an opinion on each file. It is open to discussion whether this close supervision, though it undoubtedly improves administration for the moment, does not kill the Council's sense of initiation and responsibility and check the growth of public opinion on municipal shortcomings.

Presidents of District Boards are hampered by the Local Fund Code, which looks at matters from the Auditor's, rather than the Executive Officer's, point of view. The correspondence it occasions is out of proportion to the funds expended, and is so heavy that most Collectors hand it over, except where important, to their Vice-Presidents—usually the Headquarters Deputy Collectors. A President has to obtain sanction from Government to the levy of all fees under the Act—such as pandal, market, cart-stand and other fees; to the establishment of tolls and ferries, even temporarily; to the extension of compulsory vaccination, and to the opening and closing of markets; and previous sanction to certain classes of charges, 31 in number, among them allotments from general balance and transfers of funds from District to taluk Boards. All these restrictions hamper work. If a flood damages roads and bridges, and emergent repairs are needed to prevent the damage spreading, but the Board has no funds except under general balance, it must watch small breaches becoming big ones and tottering bridges collapsing while it obtains Government sanction to expenditure; or if plague breaks out and a taluk Board has no funds, a plague staff cannot be organized until Government have sanctioned an allotment from District to taluk Board funds.

Even if these restrictions were withdrawn and the greater part of the reports and returns to higher authority, about which there is so much complaint, were abolished, no sufficient relief would be experienced by Collectors personally, nor would they be much nearer to the attainment of leisure to move among the people. Returns and reports are mainly compiled and written by Collector's offices, and not by Collectors themselves; moreover, the abolition of their submission to Government and the Board would not always render their preparation unnecessary, for even if the Board and Government no longer controlled Collectors in such detail as at present, Collectors would still need to control their own districts, and such control cannot be exercised without a certain number of reports and returns. It is little more trouble for a Collector to forward the returns to the higher authorities than to scrutinise them himself, and as his outlook and information is confined to the limits of his own district he is less fitted to criticise them usefully than those who are in possession of particulars enabling them to compare the progress in one district with that in others similarly circumstanced. What crushes Collectors nowadays is not so much the reports and returns they have to send in, as the multiplicity and complexity of the numerous departments of which they are supposed to be the heads and for whose smooth and efficient working they are held ultimately responsible. In addition, the standard of administration in several matters—such as sanitation in all its branches, vaccination, education, medical relief and roads—has been very much raised of late years, and several entirely new departments of work—such as Land Records maintenance, Civil Veterinary effort and Archæology—have been invented. The latest straw is the Agricultural Associations, which, though not officially part of a Collector's duties, usually depend upon his personal efforts for such vitality as they possess, and, being but indifferently organised and staffed, require more individual attention from him than many of the recognised branches of his work.

Collectors should be given smaller charges and so less work. An objection, no doubt, is that the Board of Revenue and Government would then have a larger number of officers to correspond with. If, however, the control they exercise were at the same time relaxed in as many ways as were safe, there need be no great increase in their work. One means of doing this would be to cut some of the departments more adrift from the Collector and no longer hold him so entirely responsible for their efficiency. This has already been done in the case of Civil Courts, Posts and Telegraphs, Registration, Jails, Sea and Land Customs, and might be pushed further than it has so far gone in the case of the technical side of Excise, Forests and Ports.

In the case of forests, the District Forest Officer has at present hardly any powers independently of the Collector and the Conservator. His correspondence, except that with his subordinates, goes out in the Collector's name, and the Collector is responsible that mistakes are not made in it. It naturally embraces many technical matters with which a Collector can be but imperfectly acquainted, and which he has to endeavour to master. The District Forest Officer might also be given more power over his subordinates. At present appointments and promotions in the district forest, subdivisional and range offices are subject to the Collector's approval; so are the appointments of forest guards (of whom the Collector can know almost nothing); while the transfer of such guards has to be effected in communication with the Collector. It would seem better to put the District Forest Officer into the position now occupied by the District Superintendent of Police.

I am opposed to the creation of Advisory or Administrative Councils. I can think of no branches of work which they could well take entirely off a Collector's shoulders, while if they had powers to refer to Government matters on which they differed from the Collector, the latter would need to spend much time giving his reasons in writing for his opinions and actions. Nor would such Councils be of practical utility. At present I learn more about District Board matters in informal conversations with District Board Members than from anything which is represented at the Board's meetings themselves.

Similarly, I am opposed to investing District Boards with powers of control over municipalities. This would only mean that the Collector, as President of the District Board, would be more than ever responsible for their smooth working.

For similar reasons I would not give village communities greater powers. I do not think that they could be entrusted with them without supervision, and the supervision of honorary bodies would be more delicate and difficult than the administration of the existing paid official agency. The present benches of magistrates in towns do not usually work with enthusiasm, and such "village sanitary associations" (sweepers controlled by the villagers but paid from local funds) as I have known have generally been failures.

7925. We have had evidence that there was a distinct disinclination on the part of Collectors and Divisional Officers to mix with the people amongst whom they worked. I gather from your statement here that the lack of intercourse, if that exists, and where it exists, is not due so much to disinclination as to inability?—Certainly.

7926. That is the point of view you wish to emphasise?—Very much.

7927. As President of a District Board, you nominate the members of the District Board?—Yes.

7928. Is that, or might it be, one reason why you find you get better work out of the members of the Board out of the house, when you meet casually, than when you are present at formal meetings?—No, when they meet me informally they talk with more freedom than they would with 30 or 40 people, the whole Board, listening to them.

7929. You think there is a certain amount of reluctance on the part of individual members of the Board to speak to you when their neighbours can hear what they are saying?—I think so; I think they talk with more confidence with me informally than in speaking at the Board.

7930. Would that be due to their not being accustomed to making a formal speech?—Yes, I think it would be due largely to shyness. I do not think the fact that I nominate them causes any restriction in their speaking.

7931. We had it from a gentleman yesterday that he did feel himself under some obligation to the official who had nominated him to the Council?—They are not all nominated, some are selected by the taluk Boards; I notice no difference between those who are selected by the taluk Board and those who are nominated by me.

7932. This witness was nominated for a period and then ceased to be a member and then became elected as a member of the taluk Board. While he was nominated he told us that he felt under some restriction as to speaking; when he became an elected member he said he was freer. Have you noticed that?—Never.

7933. A great deal of the work of your District Board you hand over, you say, to your Vice-President?—Yes.

7934. Because you cannot do it yourself?—I cannot do it.

7935. Under those circumstances, is it a good thing for the Government of Madras to continue to nominate you as the nominal President of a Board?—I see all the important papers; I do none of the routine work; the Vice-President passes every kind of bill and every intermediate reference, but he has nothing to do with large matters; all those come to me.

7936. Who is your Vice-President?—He is my Headquarters Deputy Collector.

7937. Did you nominate him?—No, he was nominated before I was there.

7938. Would it not relieve your staff if you could hand over your work to a Vice-President—not nominated by the Government, or a gentleman who is not necessarily an official?—No, I would much rather have an official; he is used to official ways and official methods; you get less correspondence and papers when you have a man who has been all his life trained as an officer under you than if you had a non-official.

7939. You think that a non-official would never be so qualified?—I do not say never; I know one useful non-official Vice-President, but they are rare; they have not had the training.

7940. You do not think that a man gradually accustomed to take part in local affairs, first as a member of a sub-committee, then perhaps as Vice-Chairman and finally as Chairman, would gradually get that knowledge of affairs and public documents which would enable you to trust him with the control of this routine work?—He would not relieve me any more than the present Vice-President.

7941. But he would relieve the staff?—He would relieve the Headquarters Deputy Collector to that extent.

7942. Again, he would take some official work off your shoulders?—Yes.

7943. So that in that way it would be relieving you of some of the less important of your duties?—Yes, if it was possible to get a non-official who could do the work.

7944. It would take time, but still you think it might be done?—I think it might be possible to find a non-official; he would have to spend some hours a day on it; it would be a thankless post.

7945. You suggest that you should have some freedom with regard to the spending of your District Board's Funds?—Yes, it is not so much the spending, as the restrictions in smaller matters, that causes a great deal of correspondence that the Vice-President has to dispose of; there is a Code several hundred pages thick; there are rules in every direction as to what may and what may not be spent, and an immense number of references are necessary under the terms of that Code. I should like to see that simplified.

7946. The necessity for constant reference to headquarters involves a constant turning up of this Code and occupation of your time in getting at the proper references?—I leave the office to do that.

7947. Somebody has to do it?—The Code cannot be all carried in one's head.

7948. So that it would be a double relief; you would not have your time occupied, and your staff would not have so much to do?—Just so.

7949. Are you satisfied that a great number of the returns which you have to send in are accurate. You send all sorts of returns—vital statistics, crop statistics, and so on?—Yes, a great many are sent in. I think they are fairly accurate.

7950. Would there be a variation of some 10 per cent. from accuracy?—It is impossible to say; I have never accurately verified one down to the bottom.

7951. Perhaps I should not be far wrong in saying that there was 5 per cent. or 10 per cent. of inaccuracy?—At a guess, no.

7952. Then you tell us that within the last 10 or 12 years there have been no less than 11 local and 13 Imperial Acts which have added to the amount of your work?—Yes.

7953. You say also that the standard of administration has been greatly raised?—Yes.

7954. If you delegated powers to these local bodies would there be a great falling off in the standard of efficiency?—Powers in what direction?

7955. Suppose greater powers in regard to the spending of money; suppose they took over in the case of municipal and District Boards the whole responsibility of spending the funds, free from Government control?—I do not think there would be in the case of District Boards, because they are in charge of trained officers; I think there would be some falling off in the case of municipalities, which are often managed by amateurs.

7956. Would that right itself in time?—I should like to see it tried.

7957. It might be tried in certain selected cases perhaps?—Yes.

7958. Not necessarily a general delegation all over the Presidency, but in certain places in order to see how it works?—I would not delegate them absolute powers; I would delegate them more powers than they have at present.

7959. You are aware that there are a great many powers that might be delegated which are not so delegated at present?—Yes.

7960. I see that you suggest that the forest officer might be relieved very much in many ways from his dependence upon you?—I would transfer his dependence upon me to a dependence on the Conservator; that is what I meant to imply.

7961. Would that be merely a transference of this kind; that an over-worked Collector would transfer part of his burden to an already over-worked Conservator?—I do not think Conservators are over-worked.

7962. At all events not so over-worked as the Collector?—No.

7963. Then, might not more things be put on the forest officer?—Yes, I have proposed that too—that he should have more power of appointment and not be bound to refer everything to me.

7964. You think that the forest officer would be quite capable of taking up these things?—Perfectly, I think—the officers I have met.

7965. You suggest that that should be done principally with regard to the appointment of subordinates and small matters of consultation?—Yes, the appointment of subordinates and technical matters; he should have more power in regard to technical matters.

7966. And in regard to the general discipline of those under him he would occupy pretty much the position of the District Superintendent of Police?—That is the position I should like to see him in.

7967. (Mr. Meyer.) Before you took up your present post you had been for some years first Superintendent of Census in the provinces and then Superintendent of Gazetteer Operations?—Yes.

7968. During those years you toured through all the districts, and from beginning to end you spent considerable time in them?—Yes.

7969. Therefore you are in a position to look at matters from the point of view of the province generally. You have advocated a large increase in the number of districts. If that took place would it be possible to continue the direct control of the Collectors by the Board of Revenue?—I think so, I see no reason why it should not be done.

7970. You have been Secretary to the Board of Revenue yourself in one branch for some time?—Yes; for four months.

7971. You know that the Board now has to deal with 24 Collectors?—Yes.

7972. The last witness suggested that that number might be increased to 32, or so; would that be about your idea or would you go further?—I have never considered how many new districts would be necessary; I was talking from the point of view of my own district only.

7973. Only of Malabar?—Yes, I have not considered how many would be necessary throughout the whole Presidency.

7974. Upon this point of largely increasing the number of districts, have you considered that it would alter the system of control over the Collectors; if you have a large number of districts, say 30 or 40, they could not be adequately controlled by the Board of Revenue in regard to the Collectors' work as such, or by Government as regards magisterial work, and you must come to the system prevailing in other provinces of territorial Commissioners; have you thought of the matter from that point of view?—Yes, I have. I do not see that because the districts are increased the number of references would necessarily increase; where you have now one officer writing two letters you would have two writing one letter each; the number of points coming up would not necessarily largely increase.

7975. In all matters of Government references you would have 32 reports instead of 24?—Most of those are routine, and in cases where Government refers a question for the opinion of the Collectors it would be much better to select Collectors and District Magistrates than to refer them to every District Magistrate.

7976. You call the tabulation of statistics and so on routine matters?—Yes.

7977. You think you could increase the number of districts without any alteration of the present system?—I think so, if the number of references on routine and unnecessary matters were at the same time reduced.

7978. Do you think that a large number of new districts ought to be made, or do you confine your proposals to your own particular districts?—I have not considered it with regard to any other districts.

7979. You are aware that there is a scheme that has been sent up by the Government of India, the idea of which is that in the particular circumstances of Malabar it would be necessary to give the Collector a Special Sub-Collector as his Assistant at headquarters to relieve him of a large part of his work?—Yes.

7980. You would prefer to split the district up?—Yes.

7981. You spoke of the nominated members of the District Board; they are not appointed by you?—No, they are nominated by me and appointed by Government.

7982. On your nomination practically?—I have never known Government to over-rule a nomination.

7983. Might the power of appointment be given to you?—Perfectly well.

7984. And in regard to the taluk Boards also?—Yes, at the present time they are nominally appointed by Government but practically by me.

7985. Government still keeps that power in its own hands?—Yes.

7986. Do you think that the Collector might control the municipalities—take the place of Government in passing their budgets, and so on?—It would mean a great deal of extra work; he could do it, of course.

7987. Do not the papers pass through you now?—Not all of them. A municipality goes straight to Government in certain matters.

7988. For instance?—I think that in the Code there is a schedule of the matters on which they may go straight to Government.

7989. The more important matters pass through you?—Yes.

7990. It might be possible in a great many matters to give the municipality full power without reference to anybody?—Yes.

7991. And with regard to those that are left they would be of a character that would pass through you in any case?—Yes.

7992. Is it not just as easy for you to pass final orders without having to refer the matter on to Government for your remarks?—Not always. As to sanitary questions I am not in a position to advise; at present I refer to Government, and Government threshes them out with the Sanitary authority; if I have the final authority I must myself thresh them out with the Sanitary authority, and I must consider with much greater care than I now do the possibility of carrying them out.

Mr. W.

Mr. W.
Francis.

30 Nov., 1907.

7993. The last witness suggested that there should be no restriction of that sort on municipalities except in the case of plague; are you in agreement with that? He was for giving municipalities a free hand practically and letting them do what they liked. I put to him the possible case of pestilence arising in the municipality, which might spread; he said that in the case of plague he would intervene, but not otherwise. What is your idea as to that?—I would not go so far as that, but I think that the system under which the municipalities are kept in order by the Collectors and Government deadens their sense of responsibility; the Councillors regard the administration as a matter between the Chairman, the Collector and the Government, and as one that does not concern them.

7994. You spoke of the returns being possibly inaccurate to the extent of 10 per cent.; is that so in the case of all returns; you have a good many returns dealing with public monies; do you mean to say that they are inaccurate?—Oh no.

7995. I may take it that they are absolutely accurate?—Absolutely accurate, I think.

7996. And what would you say of vital statistics?—I was referring to vital statistics, cattle statistics, crop statistics and so on.

7997. And cultivation returns?—Yes.

7998. Are the cultivation returns from the ordinary raiya area very inaccurate?—In some respects they are inaccurate. In my district, for instance, I do not send out my returns with any confidence; they are not very accurate.

7999. You have spoken about the district forest officer; you desire that his position should be analogous to that of the District Superintendent of Police; would you say the same with regard to the Executive Engineer?—No.

8000. You would leave him independent as he is now?—May I say that I have never been in a district in which there has been any great quantity of irrigation, so that I have not seen anything of the matter which causes the greatest difficulty, that is to say the distribution of water in big irrigation schemes; I have not been in a district where that is done, and I have no personal knowledge of those particular difficulties.

8001. Is there not another consideration; might not the Collector require something to be done and the District Engineer decline to do it on the ground that he must spend his allotment otherwise?—I have not met such a case.

8002. So far as you are concerned you see no necessity?—I see no necessity in Malabar. In Malabar irrigation is really a very minor factor.

8003. (Sir Frederic Lely.) You were speaking of over-work as a great obstacle to more intercourse with the people. Does this over-work not result very often in mere mechanical routine? Take for instance the jamabandi; is that carried out according to the spirit of Government orders would you say?—In Malabar jamabandi is rather peculiar; none of the villagers ever attend the jamabandi at all.

8004. Why do they not attend?—I think it is because it is not the custom to attend; they never do.

8005. If the Divisional Officers sent for them they would attend?—Of course, they would come then because they were told to come, but I do not think they have any reason for being told. Matters which used to be disposed of at jamabandi only, are now disposed of by petition throughout the year; consequently, at jamabandi itself there is not the crop of petitions for disposal which there was in the old days.

8006. Then jamabandi no longer means what it did?—Not in Malabar.

8007. It does not mean a thorough enquiry into the condition of the villages—getting the people together and listening to what they have to say and enquiring into their general circumstances and their progress or retrogression during the year?—

Not in Malabar; it merely means that the accountant deals with their accounts and the heads of the village appear with their accounts; these are scrutinised by the officers and orders upon them are passed.

8008. It no longer means a link in intercourse between the Divisional Officer and the people?—I think not.

8009. It must be a great loss to the administration under a raiya system?—I think not, because I think that the matters which used to be brought up at jamabandi are now brought up when they occur throughout the year; instead of a crop of petitions to be disposed of at one part of the year, the disposal of them goes on throughout the year.

8010. But without personal contact with the people?—I think the Divisional Officer, instead of having a hundred petitions at one time, can better deal with them individually as the year goes on.

8011. But are the petitions then brought up to him personally?—Yes.

8012. Then you do not think there is much loss to administration by the change which has come about in jamabandi?—I do not think so.

8013. Have you any wards' estates in your district?—Two.

8014. Do you consider that you have sufficient personal power in the management of them?—I have not sufficient financial power; I mean there are financial matters on which I have to write what I consider unnecessary letters.

8015. You think that you ought to have more power?—Yes, larger financial power.

8016. We will not go into the actual financial powers; but is it your opinion that it would be for the good of the estates themselves if the Collector had more power of initiative?—No, I have ample power of initiative when I frame the budget, but the rules forbid me to sanction expenditure on unusual charges. "Unusual charges" on these estates are constantly occurring, and, therefore, I have to write letters to get small sums passed.

8017. If you wanted to make a small crop experiment you could not get the small sum you wanted without writing?—I have an experimental farm attached to one of my estates, so that that is one of the things I can do; there is a special allotment.

8018. You have personal supervision of the roads?—Yes.

8019. How many miles of road have you to look after?—About 1,300.

8020. Have you any sufficient staff for that purpose?—Yes, a Local Fund Engineer and three Assistant Engineers.

8021. You are able to trust them?—Yes.

8022. You do not feel that any special burden upon you?—I would not go so far as to say that.

8023. You have to sign all estimates?—I have to pass the estimates.

8024. As to the measuring up work you trust to the Engineers?—Yes, I must.

8025. Are you satisfied with them?—Yes; the only part of the work I would not trust to them is the general distribution of the funds which are put at their disposal; I do not think they would always allocate them wisely.

8026. Do you consider that you have any real personal control over this work or are you obliged to leave it practically to your Local Fund Engineer?—No, I consider that I have a very real control.

8027. Who does the criminal work mostly of your district?—In trying cases the Divisional Magistrates take the first-class work; the rest is done by the sub-magistrates.

8028. What class of officers are they; what is their salary?—Rs. 100 to Rs. 120 a month.

8029. Are they reliable; what sort of training have they had?—They are mostly promoted clerks.

8030. Except the first-class cases, they have all the magisterial work of the district?—Yes.

8031. They take all the second-class cases and sessions committal cases?—Yes.

8032. You receive the calendar of every case?—Yes.

8033. Do these calendars amount to some thousands in the year?—Yes.

8034. You are supposed to examine them?—I am supposed to read them all.

8035. Is that examination a real thing?—In practice, it is chiefly done by the Divisional Officers; I do not think any Collector of Malabar could possibly read all his second-class calendars; he reads his first-class calendars, and he very largely trusts to the Divisional Officers to scrutinise the others and refer to him if any case requires it.

8036. You take it from them?—Largely; I have not time to do it otherwise.

8037. The work is not done by clerks in your own office?—Oh no.

8038. Now, about income tax work; do you hear appeals?—Yes.

8039. Who are the original assessors against whom the appeal comes to you?—The tahsildars and Divisional Officers up to certain amounts, and myself in cases above Rs. 10,000.

8040. Most of the appellate work comes to you?—Yes, the Divisional Officers have some and I have some.

8041. Do you examine the accounts also yourself on appeal?—I examine all the English firms' accounts; the others are often in languages such as Gujarati and Mahrati which I cannot read.

8042. They go up further on appeal?—Now and then they go to the Board.

8043. Are you of opinion that the appeal should stop there?—I think so; there should be no second appeals from me in income tax matters.

8044. Is not a second appeal, if it involves going over the same ground again, waste of time?—I think so.

8045. Would a typewriter and shorthand-writer be of any practical use to the Collector in getting through his scriptory work?—No, I do not think so; I can use a typewriter, and have done so. As to a shorthand-writer, the Collector very seldom has any long proceedings to write. His work consists of notes down the margin of papers rather than orders written out at length on foolscap paper, and neither a shorthand-writer nor a typewriter is of much use.

8046. Then as to the Forest Department; when you say that you wish to transfer some of your connection with the forests to the Conservator, do you think the Collector should have less connection with forestry than he has?—Less connection with the technical side of forestry.

8047. But he has not much as it is?—A good deal; I am supposed, for example, to pass the budget.

8048. Now as to the Advisory Council. We are told that you might get a few men together to form the Collector's Council; as a matter of fact an average Collector does that now?—Yes.

8049. Do you think that to formalise, we will say, that advice into a Council would have any effect; would it make any difference either for good or for bad?—It depends upon what powers you propose to give the Council.

8050. It is not proposed to give them any powers; the Collector may summon them, and they come together and give him advice. Would it have a deteriorating effect on the intercourse of the Collector with the people or not to formalise it in that way?—Yes, I think it would.

8051. Would it be rather likely to dry up the personal feeling between the Collector and his people and make it less cordial and less personal?—Yes, I think it would.

8052. (Mr. Dutt.) You tell us that in very heavy districts now the Collectors are over-worked; would you suggest to us any way in which the Collector could devolve any of his work to the members of the District Board so as to relieve himself of his great burden of work—either to individual members or by the formation of committees to look after different departments of work?—No, I can think of no way in which they could be entirely entrusted with the work of any departments so as to take it entirely off the Collector's shoulders.

8053. You cannot suggest any way in which they could take a part of the heavy work that the Collector now has, other than what you have already suggested?—No; that and the delegation of powers is all I can think of.

8054. The Local Boards Act has been in operation for a good many years now?—It was passed in 1884.

8055. You do not think that the time has come for making any real advance in devolving powers on the people so as to relieve the officers?—It is the practical difficulties which I do not see how to overcome.

8056. Could the practical difficulties be overcome so as to take advantage of co-operation on the part of the people and thus relieve the over-worked Collectors?—I cannot think of any departments which they could take completely off a Collector.

8057. So you do not think it is possible now to make any advance in that direction?—No, I think not.

8058. I understand that under the Act it is possible to have the members of the taluk Boards elected; the Act provides for that?—Yes.

8059. Has that been done in any district or any taluk in this Presidency?—I believe not.

8060. Do you think the time has come when the experiment should be tried in some advanced taluks in this province?—Judging from the result of municipal elections, I should say not. In the Calicut municipality a Councillor was elected although only two votes were recorded; those were in his favour.

8061. I do not refer to such cases, but to some advanced districts where the conditions might be more suitable?—I have never thought it out.

8062. Is there much complaint about forest administration?—There is none in Malabar.

8063. Have you had much experience in other districts?—I have never had experience in any district in which forestry was a very burning question.

8064. You did not as a matter of fact in Malabar receive any complaints from the people about forest matters—the want of grazing fields, for instance?—No.

8065. Are you generally satisfied with your tahsildars; do you think their work is fairly well performed?—Yes.

8066. Are you of opinion that the class might be improved by requiring somewhat higher educational qualifications from them before they are appointed? Some witnesses have told us that latterly there have been more graduates appointed than in previous years?—I think some of the best tahsildars I have known have been men of the lowest educational qualifications.

8067. You do not think that to require higher qualifications before appointment would improve the class of tahsildars—that if we only or mainly appointed graduates the class of tahsildars would be more reliable and efficient?—I do not think so; I think the tahsildar's powers depend very much upon personal qualifications.

8068. You think it a healthy system to recruit them from clerkships?—I think so.

8069. Now about the assessment of income tax; does the tahsildar consult the panchayat or leading men before making assessments on income?—Not publicly; of course, it would be no use to consult them publicly, they would not speak out; but he consults them privately.

Mr. W.
Francis.

30 Nov., 1907.

Mr. W.
Francis.

30 Nov., 1907.

8070. From the appeals which you have decided in income tax matters, do you think the assessments are generally fair, or could you suggest any way of improving the method of assessment?—I think many unfair assessments occur, but I can think of no way of improving matters.

8071. It is one of those subjects which are very difficult to ascertain—the exact or approximate income of a man; it is more or less guess-work?—It is extremely difficult.

8073. But the second appeal is before a more experienced tribunal than the first and before an officer of riper judgment?—Experience I do not think would help it. The first Appellate Court has the accounts before it; it examines the man himself and examines the accounts, and has the power to see whether those accounts are trustworthy. The second Appellate Court proceeds on the mere record.

8074. Have you had experience how far second appeals result in modification of assessment?—I have no figures with me—it is difficult to answer; they are modified sometimes, no doubt.

8075. Seeing that that is so, would you still adhere to the opinion that second appeals ought to be abolished?—Yes, I think that one appeal is sufficient in income tax matters.

8076. (Mr. Hitchens.) Is there any local sentiment attaching to districts, which would require to be considered in any revision of the size of the districts that might be made?—Yes, it would be possible to go against local sentiment.

8077. Do the people look upon the district as something more than a fortuitous aggregation of persons?—In some cases they do; in the case of my own district they do, but that is an isolated district speaking its own language. I should not say that that is generally the case in the Tamil or in the Telugu country; I do not think the people would care at all if a taluk was transferred from one district to another.

8078. Are there any large divisions in the Presidency of Madras that you would say correspond to some local sentiment, divided either by language or some other definite consideration?—There is Malabar, South Canara, and perhaps the Uriya people in Ganjam—those are people who have a sentiment of that kind.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. J. W. BHOKE was called and examined.

Mr. J. W.
Bhore.

30 Nov., 1907.

8079. (Chairman.) You are a Sub-Collector?—I am Head Assistant Collector. I have been in the service five years. Before this I had temporary charge of a headquarters division in the Kistna District.

8080. So that you have only been in two districts during your five years?—Both charges were in the same district as I am in now.

8081. What vernacular languages are you acquainted with?—My own, which is Mahrati.

8082. I am speaking as far as this district is concerned?—Telugu and Tamil, but I know very little of the latter.

8083. Do you find as a fact that your not knowing the vernacular generally spoken in your district restricts your acquaintance with the people of the district?—I think to some extent it does.

8084. Can you from your own point of view suggest any means by which any greater vernacular acquirements could be obtained?—I think that the trouble comes from the Divisional Officers not having sufficient time to tour sufficiently in their districts; I think that is the reason why they do not get acquainted with the vernaculars. It is not merely a question of examinations. I notice that Civilian Settlement Officers who have passed practically the same educational examinations as the ordinary Divisional Officer, are almost without exception, as far as my knowledge goes, able to speak the vernacular with extreme fluency. They attribute it to the fact that they have very little office work to do, and that they are constantly moving about among the people. They say that that is the cause of the fluency with which they can speak the vernacular, and I think that there is a great deal in that.

8085. Do you, being a native of one part of India now serving in another part of India, find that the customs and social etiquette of the people in Madras are very different from those of your own native part?—They do differ.

8086. Differ very greatly?—To a large extent I think they do.

8087. Do you think the difference in these practices and social customs is so great that it would be very difficult to instruct British officers coming from England to this country, before they actually become officers, in knowledge of the practices and social customs and etiquette?—I think they could be given a general idea of these things in a very short time.

8088. At home?—I think so, or when they first come as Assistants in districts.

8089. Were you yourself given any such instruction?—No, I was not.

8090. Would it have been useful to you if you had?—I think it would.

8091. And it would not be difficult perhaps to put together some little work appropriate to each Government which would give new officers some insight into the social habits and customs of the people under that Government?—I should think not.

8092. Would that prevent difficulty and friction in many cases?—I think it would.

8093. Do such causes of friction occur now without any intention on the part of one side or the other?—I have never heard of them, but I can quite imagine cases in which friction might be caused.

8094. (Mr. Dutt.) You are a Christian?—Yes, I am.

8095. Does that fact make any difference in your mixing with the people?—I have not found it so.

8096. Barring your official work have you occasion to mix freely with the people?—When I go into camp I always mix with the people.

8097. And you are sufficiently acquainted with the language to be able to speak in Telugu to the people?—I speak with them in a fashion—not as well as I should like to.

8098. Can you suggest any way in which officers like yourself could have larger opportunities of mixing with the people?—I think by reducing their charges; the opportunities that an ordinary Divisional Officer has for moving about among the people are limited to a great extent; he is supposed to spend 5 months in the year in camp, but in fact the mere time he spends out of headquarters is no criterion. Much of the time of an officer away from headquarters is spent magisterially and in court matters, and he has very little time for mixing with people.

8099. You say that he has larger opportunities of moving about among the people when he is in camp than at headquarters?—Yes.

8100. Do you do jamabandi work?—Yes. I have dealt with two jamabandis.

8101. On those occasions did you mix with the people pretty freely—with any large numbers of them?—To the best of my knowledge I think on both occasions there were large numbers of petitioners; of course only a few centres are fixed in a single taluk, and it is not possible to go from village to village.

8102. But you found that you had a large number of petitions?—Yes.

8103. Then I suppose you had occasion to speak to large numbers of people; you discussed with them the points involved?—Nothing beyond their petitions; of course I instituted inquiries into their petitions and asked them questions, but I do not think, as far as I remember, anything beyond that.

8104. Do you find the tahsildars of your division experienced men and fairly able to do their work?—I think so.

8105. Are the tahsildars generally considered reliable?—All the tahsildars that I have had to serve under me I think were men who might be relied upon.

8106. Is there a fair proportion of graduates among them?—Yes.

8107. Do you find the graduates more reliable than men of the other class?—I should not like to commit myself to a statement as to that.

8108. Do you think that the class of tahsildars would be improved if a rule was made that generally only graduates should be appointed to the post of tahsildar?—If exceptions were allowed to be made, I should think so.

8109. (Mr. Meyer.) Are not most tahsildars graduates already?—A large proportion of them are graduates.

8110. An increasing proportion?—That I cannot say.

8111. At present a tahsildar begins in quite a low grade with a salary of say 15 or 20 rupees, and works his way up finally to tahsildar?—Yes.

8112. Possibly some men have acquired bad habits during their earlier stages; would it in your opinion improve the morale of the tahsildar service if, as happens in some other provinces, young men of good education and good family were appointed direct, beginning as tahsildars at 80 to 100 rupees a month?—I think so.

8113. You speak of the large amount of time that is taken up by a Divisional Officer in his work; is that not due to a certain extent to the immense facilities for appeal that exist?—To some extent it is.

8114. If appeals were curtailed, to that extent the Divisional Officer would be more free to mix with the people?—To a slight extent.

8115. Are you in favour of the curtailment of appeals?—Except in cases of very severe punishment, as for instance dismissal.

8116. I would like to divide it into two categories, first administrative action such as darkhast, revenue assessment and so on, and secondly, disciplinary measures against public servants. In the first place as regards administrative actions, are you in favour of a curtailment of appeal facilities?—I should think one appeal ought to be sufficient.

8117. And in regard to the second category, disciplinary actions against public servants?—I think in some cases officers ought to have summary powers of punishment; they might fine summarily up to a small limit and from such punishments there should be no appeal. Except in very severe cases one appeal only ought to be allowed, and in cases of dismissal possibly two appeals might be allowed.

8118. Would you apply that to the village servants also?—Yes.

8119. To all village servants or only to the village headman and karnam?—Not in the case of village servants; only in the case of village officers—the village headman and the karnam.

8120. By the village servants you mean the menial establishment, the watchman and so on?—Yes.

8121. (Sir Steynning Egerley.) As to court work, have you received a dispensation to do your work in English?—Not that I am aware of.

8122. Your language is the vernacular; is the record of your cases in the vernacular?—No, my record is in English. In my particular instance I have been allowed the power of taking down the evidence in English in my own hand; that power was granted by Government.

8123. Do you take evidence yourself direct from the witnesses, or is it all interpreted?—It is interpreted in order to make sure that no errors creep into it.

8124. Do you put your own questions in the vernacular?—Sometimes I do.

8125. Generally they are interpreted?—Yes.

8126. Does that system militate against facility in the vernacular?—Yes, to some extent it does.

8127. If you put your own questions in the vernacular to the witnesses, would that lead to much delay in the disposal of cases?—I certainly think it would.

8128. How would it lead to delay?—In this way: I do not think that in many cases a Magistrate who has learnt the language after coming to the Presidency would be able to express himself in the way in which the ordinary class of witnesses that he gets would understand; I mean to say he might possibly use language and words which the ordinary uneducated witness—and they form the bulk of the witnesses—might not be able to understand.

8129. How would that take longer than putting the questions through an interpreter and having them interpreted?—Because it would have to come back through the interpreter again.

8130. Your service is what?—Very nearly 5 years.

8131. When does Government give a dispensation about taking down evidence in English in your own hand?—After the second standard examination has been passed and after first class powers have been conferred.

8132. Does it come practically with the first class powers?—It comes with the charge of a division generally.

8133. Without any reference to whether you are thoroughly proficient in the language or not?—As far as I know; I do not know what reference is made to the Collector or to the District Magistrate.

8134. You spoke of having done two jamabandis?—Yes.

8135. About how many villages did you take the jamabandi of?—I should say about 400.

8136. Each time?—Two hundred on each occasion possibly, each year.

8137. Do you examine the criminal calendars of Magistrates' cases?—Every one.

8138. All those of the second-class Magistrates under you?—Yes, they pass through me to the District Magistrate.

8139. You examine them yourself?—I examine them myself.

8140. Have you passed the Higher Proficiency test?—No, I have not.

8141. How long ought it to take an officer before he is thoroughly proficient in the vernacular?—Counting from the time he first sets foot in the place, if he is not moved from the group of districts where the same vernacular is spoken, I think 6 or 7 years—say 6 years.

8142. And not until then is he really master of the language?—No, I should not call him a master of the language till then, but he certainly has a working knowledge of the language in 2 or 3 years' time.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. J. W. Shore.

30 Nov., 1907.

The Rev. LEWIS B. CHAMBERLAIN was called and examined.

The Rev.
L. B.
Chamberlain.

30 Nov., 1907.

8143. (Chairman.) Where do you live?—At Madanapalli in the Cuddapah District.

8144. Have you been there some time?—Yes, I have had my service of 16 years there in the main; I have been away a few years. I am an American Missionary.

8145. You have no doubt an intimate acquaintance with the locality?—Somewhat so.

8146. And you are in touch with most classes of the community there?—Yes, I have pleasant relations with them all.

8147. Have you served on any District Boards or taluk Boards?—I was on the Local Fund Board for a number of years, but dropped it and declined election to the District Board because I did not think it was worth while.

8148. You thought it was not worth while because there was really not enough for the Board to do?—Yes—that there was really no valuable work being done by the Boards as such, so far as I could judge from the Local Fund Board.

8149. Was it that the Board itself was not doing much good, or that while the work was being done in the name of the Board it was not done by the members of the Board?—It did not seem to be expected that the members should do much.

8150. But did the Board itself, although through the President, do good work; you see the distinction I wish to draw?—Yes; there was no fault to find with the work, so far as I think, at the time.

8151. There was plenty for the Board to do and you would have remained on if the work had been done through the members instead of being solely done by the President, is that your position?—Yes; I would not say that it was solely done by the President, but there were not enough real functions in the hands of the Board to make it worth my while to stay on.

8152. If the Government had, as it appears they have legislative power to do, delegated authority to the Board, would that have brought home to the members a larger sense of their responsibility?—I do not think the fault lay entirely with Government. I think the members themselves are at fault; they do not take the position as one involving responsibility; they have no authority which makes them feel any responsibility, and they take it as more an honorary position.

8153. Were the members of your Board gentlemen who commanded respect in the neighbourhood?—So far as I remember, at the time and since.

8154. Were they all the kind of members which you, as a resident in the locality, would have wished to see on a Board having authority?—No. I think they were very largely men who could afford the time or were perhaps free for that sort of function; I should like to see some who were more thoroughly representative of the rural community upon such Boards.

8155. Are you speaking of the municipality or the District Board?—I am speaking of the Local Board only, the taluk Board; we have no municipalities in our district.

8156. Were the country districts not represented on the taluk Board?—There was one representative of the country gentry as I may say, that I recall, on the Board—no other.

8157. Was that because of this absence—in the district covered by the Board's jurisdiction—of suitable members, or simply because the town members were of a more pushing disposition?—I cannot say, I do not know.

8158. You know the taluk Board pretty well?—I did at that time.

8159. Were there other gentlemen in the country districts who would have made suitable members of the Board?—I should think so.

8160. And would that be so now?—I think so, now more than then.

8161. (Sir Frederic Lely.) Do you mean to say that there are now gentlemen who would be suitable representatives of the rural population and who would be willing to act on the Board, but they do not do so because they are not asked, or why?—My impression is that there has not been enough emphasis laid on the advantage of these Boards to the community—on the one hand by the Government, and on the other hand the community at large itself does not appreciate the value of such functions as are given to the taluk Board, or as could be given; they do not appreciate the conditions.

8162. And, therefore, the seats fall to men who are most forward to get a seat for other reasons, rather than to the really representative people, is that so?—No, I think quite a large number of those who are on the Boards are representative, but that it would be more valuable if there were still a large number of those selected by the people themselves.

8163. I understood you to say just now that the majority of the members of the Board were not representative of the rural population?—I recall but one member who was.

8164. Do you think that during your 16 years of residence in India the relations between the people and the Government officers have improved or deteriorated, or have remained about the same?—About the same. I think that people appreciate their rights better—that they realise that they have been gaining. We see now for instance the use they make of the hospitals; formerly they were afraid to use the hospitals or to use them freely; then there is the use they make of appeals in litigation. All that shows that they know their rights and are more ready to call for them.

8165. Would you say that there is a cordial feeling between the people and British officers?—It depends very largely on the officer I should say.

8166. In what way?—The personal element is what I refer to. Our present Collector is, I think, rather well liked by the people and trusted; some of his predecessors have not been known much by the people nor did they feel sure about them.

8167. As a matter of fact they do not come into contact much with the Collector, do they?—They do not come into contact with him as much as they ought to.

8168. Do your own people ever have occasion to make petitions to Government or to lay statements before the authorities?—You refer to the Christian community?

8169. Yes?—They do slightly.

8170. Do they find any difficulty in getting access to the authorities?—No, I think not; they have a little more courage perhaps, because they are accustomed to deal with a foreigner.

8171. You live in a village where there is a village union. Has that been a success?—Relatively, yes.

8172. Does it do any public work?—I think largely under the guidance of higher officers—superior officers—the union has recently done a good deal, but it was subsequent to the plague and under distinct pressure from the Sub-Collector.

8173. Would you recommend a continuance of these unions?—Yes, I think so.

8174. Are they the best exponents of village feeling, or would you recommend entrusting powers to a village panchayat?—Well, I like the idea of resuscitating the panchayats in the villages, but we must remember that the union we already have there; some of the villages partake of the nature of a town, but in the smaller villages I think it would be well to revive the panchayat.

8175. Would it be possible?—Quite possible.

8176. Would a panchayat, for instance, deal fairly by native Christians?—I think that the panchayat, like most other forms of Government, would have to have its checks.

8177. What checks would you propose?—I should think there should be some opportunity for reviewing what they do, and if they are misusing their authority they should either forfeit it, or have it restricted for limited periods—not done away with altogether.

8178. You would give them power for a time and see if they misused it, and if they did misuse it, you would let them know it?—Yes.

8179. (Mr. Dutt.) Were the members of the Local Fund Board of which you were a member nominated by the Collector?—I cannot say positively; it was ten years ago; I presume so; I was so put in.

8180. Are the members of the taluk Board elected or are they nominated by the Collector and appointed by Government?—They are appointed I believe; there is a desire for election.

8181. Would you recommend the system of election?—I would have it with regard to a certain portion, say half to start with; I believe in experimenting.

8182. Have you any special reasons for recommending election?—I think it would greatly increase the interest in the work of the taluk Board; it would increase its sense of responsibility; the membership would be improved; no doubt some who were merely electioneering might get in until there were opportunities of putting in more thoroughly representative people.

8183. You think you would get better men?—I think we should in the end.

8184. You said that in small villages you would recommend the creation of panchayats. Can you indicate to me the kind of work you would entrust to these panchayats?—I am afraid I am not sufficiently acquainted with the various functions to answer that.

8185. Could not small public works—sinking of drinking-water wells in the village—be entrusted to the panchayat?—Yes.

8186. And the disposal of petty disputes in the village might be entrusted to it?—Yes.

8187. Would you entrust to it the settlement of civil cases?—To a limited extent; it depends on the amount involved.

8188. You say that you would have some one to review their work, now and then, and see that they were going on straight; how often would you propose that such a review should take place?—Records would, of course, be kept; those records would be open to any of the District or Government Officers, and experience would show how often it was necessary for some one to look into things.

8189. (Mr. Hitchens.) Do you mean that there should be a power of appeal from the panchayat, or do you mean that the Government should merely inform itself subsequently for its own information?—It seems to me that there might be some limit to the things in regard to which it might be worth while to have an appeal, but in the main there should be at least one appeal in every case, whether from the panchayat or the village magistrate, or any one else.

8190. Would you be prepared to grant them final powers in any case?—Not at first; let them prove their worthiness.

8191. But can you really teach them responsibility unless you give them responsibility; is not the way to make them give a sound decision to let them give a decision?—You have hit what I consider the weakness of the present taluk Board system; they have not authority at present; I would give them some; start with the little and go on to the more, and let them prove their fitness. In certain advanced villages let them have more power and authority than in the backward regions.

8192. (Mr. Meyer.) You spoke of the taluk Board being elected or a portion of it. Would you have the election by the village panchayat or would you have a direct constituency, or what?—I like the election by the constituency, limited in some such way as the municipal elections are by educational or property qualifications until the people prove themselves more generally competent to do the work; there are not many who would.

8193. Do you come from Madanapalli?—Yes.

8194. That is a large division, with 4 taluks?—Yes, it is a large district—too large.

8195. Do you think that direct election would work over such large areas?—With limitations of property and education; the numbers could be restricted. I doubt whether at first all who were voters would use their right, but I believe the right would be on the whole properly used.

8196. You prefer that to the village panchayat sending up delegates and their voting?—That would be cumbersome, I think.

8197. Has the Sub-Collector in Madanapalli been frequently transferred during your experience?—We have just had one for five years, and we have been so pleased with the result that we wish we could have more; we have had frequent transfers—eighteen in sixteen years.

8198. I suppose the gentleman who was there for five years was able to speak the language, and go round the villages and talk to the people, and to know the taluk?—He knew the division; he went round the villages, but he did not know the language specially well.

8199. Have you been present when a Divisional Officer has been going his round of the village and interviewing the people?—Yes, as our camps happened to cross; that is all; but I have been with various officers when they have been out in the country.

8200. It has been asserted by one of the witnesses that on several occasions a Divisional Officer will not hear a petitioner unless he presents a stamped petition; is that your experience?—I think it depends on the man; some of the officers are very accessible, others are not.

8201. You mean some would insist on the formalities of the law and require a stamped petition and all the rest of it, but others would speak to the people and not worry about formalities?—Yes.

8202. Which are the majority?—I think the emphasis has been so much on the clerical side, the office side, that the majority have perhaps erred in that way; they have not been accessible; but it is not the individual, it is the system, that is to blame.

8203. And if they were given more latitude, if their orders were less subject to constant appeal, would their administration not become less rigid?—I think so.

8204. It might become more sympathetic in that way through the officers feeling themselves less bound by cast-iron rules?—Yes.

8205. (Chairman.) You said that the district was too large. Were you thinking of the taluk, or of the division, or of the district?—I should say both. The Divisional Officer's charge is too large; it is about 3,000 square miles; and the district itself, Cuddapah, is too large; it is the size of Wales, I believe.

8206. And it is essential in a large district of that sort to keep an officer for a long time?—I should like to have it made smaller and to keep the officer longer—both.

8207. Supposing you could only get one of your desires, if the district has to be left at its present size, it is essential for its good government that the officer should stay a long time?—I think so, and I think we have results to prove it so. When officers have stayed longer they have left the district in better order and with a better name behind them in the minds of the people.

8208. With regard to the officer who did not know the language well in spite of his having been there five years in the district, do you know what has happened to that officer; has he gone on leave or has he been transferred to another district?—He was promoted to a Collectorate elsewhere.

8209. Do you know whether the Collectorate to which he was promoted is one in which the same language was spoken?—No, it was a different language.

8210. Have you any general suggestion within our reference which would make the path of Government, both provincial and local, work more smoothly than it does at present, speaking from your experience of a long residence here?—The most important thing to my mind is that emphasis should be laid on officers getting into closer touch with the people, developing a knowledge of the vernacular; that necessitates being relieved from considerable office and routine work, either by the staff being increased or by the amount of work being cut down; then, the impression should be removed, that I am afraid exists, that the administration is for Government and not for the people; that revenue matters rule rather than the needs or the condition of the people. That is often mistaken, but where there is so much smoke there must be some fire, to my mind.

8211. Is that an idea which is very prevalent in the minds of the people of your district?—Very prevalent, and it could be removed by a few little concessions to show that it is not the intention of Government to put one in front of the other.

8212. What sort of concessions would you suggest?—A large authority being given to Divisional and District Officers, say, in regard to remissions on dry lands. The mere hard-and-fast rule is interpreted unfavourably to Government by the raiyats and by the people at large. There should be some liberty by which the personal element can come into play more, by which the officers can show favours in their personal relations.

8213. Have you seen among the officers with whom you have been brought into touch, officers of Government of all ranks, any discourtesy towards the people amongst whom they lived and worked—intentional discourtesy I mean?—Not necessarily as officers; just as men, yes.

8214. But not as officers?—I think not; it is merely human nature, just as we have discourtesy among people of our own nation.

8215. You have never seen any discourtesy or anything of that sort?—I think not; there are some who are impatient of interruption in their offices, and rather rough or abrupt when people come to the wrong place. The machinery is all right, but it needs a little re-adjustment.

*Mr. H. E.
Clerk.*

2 Dec., 1907.

8216. (Chairman.) You are a Joint Secretary to the Government of Madras and Officiating Chief Engineer for Irrigation?—Yes.

8217. Will you state briefly the organisation of your department and the nature of your duties?—The Chief Engineer for Irrigation and Joint Secretary to Government is assisted in the management of his office work by the Assistant Chief Engineer for Irrigation who is generally an officer of the rank of the Executive Engineer. The entire Engineering staff of the Presidency, which also looks after irrigation works, is generally placed under the control of the Chief Engineer, Public Works Department. The main duty of the Chief Engineer for Irrigation and Joint Secretary to Government is to scrutinise thoroughly every irrigation project as it is received from Superintending Engineers, and place it before Government with such a review of it by himself, in all its details, as will assist the Government in arriving at a decision regarding its character both from a professional and fiscal point of view. He exercises supervision over the investigation and execution of all irrigation works in the Presidency and controls expenditure over them. He also prepares the irrigation budget and the Administration and the Triennial Reports, and exercises all other powers referred to in paragraphs 251 to 272 of the Public Works Department Code in respect of irrigation matters.

Irrigation works in this Presidency are divided as follows:—

Class.	Fund.
I. { Protective ...	Imperial.
Major (Productive)	Imperial.
II. Minor Works and Navigation.	Provincial. Works for which capital and revenue accounts are kept.
III. Minor Works and Navigation.	Provincial. Works for which neither capital nor revenue accounts are kept, but for which continuous records of expenditure are maintained individually.
IVa. Minor Works and Navigation.	Provincial. Works for which capital and revenue accounts are not kept, in charge of the Public Works Department.
IVb. Minor Works and Navigation.	Provincial. Works for which capital and revenue accounts are not kept, in charge of the Revenue Department.
V. Minor Works and Navigation.	Provincial. Agricultural works.

Funds for the construction and maintenance of Class I works are provided by the Imperial Government and for all the remaining classes by the provincial Government.

The following are the areas irrigated and the revenue derived from the various classes of works. The figures are taken from the last Triennial Report for the three years ending 1904-05:—

	Capital cost. Rs.	Area irrigated. Acres. Average of 3 years.	Net revenue. Rs. Average of 3 years.
Class I. { Productive	7,18,66,138	2,865,273	36,38,350
Class I. { Protective	50,05,836	93,596	34,032
Class II.	1,15,10,888	568,617	6,75,358
Class III.	—	222,784	7,52,644*
Class IV.	—	3,100,398	76,50,917

* After paying interest charges. The net revenue before deducting this is Rs. 62,61,450.

Paragraphs 2206 and 2207, Public Works Department Code, lay down that capital and revenue accounts should be kept for all new minor irrigation works, the estimated capital outlay of which is more than Rs. 50,000, but that if for any reason a project costing more than that sum is considered of insufficient importance to justify the maintenance of a capital account it may, with the approval of the Government of India, be classed as a work for which only revenue accounts are kept, or as a work for which neither capital nor revenue accounts are kept. I consider that more latitude and discretionary power should be vested in the Local Government to remove works from the list of capital and revenue account works, when they consider no useful purpose is served by keeping their accounts in such detail.

The only Inspector-General with whom this Department has any dealings is the Inspector-General of Irrigation, whose duties are confined to the scrutiny of projects and designs for works carried out from Imperial funds. He would also advise when necessary regarding the execution and maintenance of works of this class. I do not consider that there is any tendency on the part of this officer to acquire administrative authority. There is a tendency to impose too rigid rules based on experience gathered in other parts of India when the local conditions render the application of these rules unsuitable and unnecessary. Business would be greatly facilitated were the responsible opinion of local officers in matters of detail more readily accepted. The Inspector-General performs a very useful function in bringing to the notice of the various provinces the best practice existing elsewhere, thereby increasing the general standard of efficiency. This purpose could not be equally well attained by conferences or consultation between local Heads of Departments. The advantages conferred by the Inspector-General of Irrigation decidedly outweigh the disadvantages likely to be connected with such an office.

The powers of Superintending Engineers are very unequal at present; they are summarised in paragraph 311, Public Works Code. I would recommend that all Superintending Engineers should be empowered to sanction up to Rs. 2,500 and selected officers up to Rs. 10,000 (at present in Madras powers beyond Rs. 2,500 are not given). The sanction here referred to is the actual sanction of estimates. Administrative sanction to any scheme would first be given by the Local Government for all works costing above a certain sum.

At present Superintending Engineers have no powers to appoint temporary establishment chargeable to work. Executive Engineers have powers to appoint temporary work-establishment for which provision has been made in a sanctioned estimate up to Rs. 99. I would give Superintending Engineers similar powers up to Rs. 250, the limit now imposed on the Local Government in this respect.

I would increase the limit of powers for the purchase of furniture to Rs. 300 in each case and allow the purchase of live stock to the same limit.

8218. You tell us that one of your chief duties is to scrutinise every irrigation project as it is received from the Superintending Engineers. I think we have had it that the Superintending Engineers can dispose of all cases up to a value of Rs. 2,500?—That is the case for all estimates paid for from provincial funds; as to estimates charged to capital accounts for major productive works they have no powers. Such estimates come to me.

8219. Have you any limit or are you obliged to send on all imperial works?—The Madras Government limit for productive works is Rs. 25,000. I have practically no powers of sanction as Chief Engineer.

8220. Suppose a major irrigation work comes up which has already been sanctioned in principle by the Government, can you sanction the estimates?—Up to the limit of Rs. 25,000. Above that, it has to go to the Government of India.

8221. Who is the Government of India in those cases?—The Government of India is the Secretary to Government in the Public Works Department.

8222. Having obtained the sanction of the Government of India to the principle of the creation of a particular productive work, might your powers of sanction to the detailed estimates reasonably be raised to above the Rs. 25,000 limit, or do you think that it is necessary that the Government of India should keep the control?—The limit might be slightly raised, not very largely.

8223. How high might it go up to?—I think it might be doubled; it might be Rs. 50,000.

8224. What are the triennial reports that you speak of?—I have one here; we publish these every three years, giving the results of the operations of the Department for those periods, comparing them with the previous triennium.

8225. The administration report is annual?—Yes.

8226. Is it necessary every three years to summarise the administration reports; as an Executive Officer is it necessary to have what apparently is a summary every third year of the annual administration reports?—I think we could do without the triennial reports if we amplified our annual administration report. At present our annual administration report is very meagre.

8227. Too meagre?—It is not too meagre if you have a triennial report.

8228. Which would be most advantageous, to do away with the annual report or to amplify the triennial report?—Personally I would prefer to revert to the custom which we had previously in this province of having an ample administration report every year and not having a triennial report at all.

8229. Would that lessen the clerical work?—Not appreciably.

8230. To a certain extent?—I do not regard it from that point of view; I was considering which would be the more useful work for reference.

8231. When was the triennial report instituted?—Speaking from memory, about 6 years ago.

8232. I understand that a modification has been suggested of the rules with regard to the construction and maintenance of Class I. works; who proposed that modification?—It was proposed by the Government of India in connection with the provincial contract.

8233. What is the arrangement now proposed, briefly?—The arrangement is that instead of the Government of India paying for all major works, the Madras Government should share the cost with them; but it is connected with the financial settlement.

8234. It is a financial re-arrangement and not a Public Works Department re-arrangement?—I think I may say so.

8235. What sort of accounts are kept for works for which neither revenue nor capital accounts are kept?—They are lumped together under provincial minor works; accounts are kept for the estimates as sanctioned, but no continuous record of them is kept; there is no separation between capital and revenue.

Mr. H. E.
Clerk.

2 Dec., 1907.

8236. You consider that more latitude should be given to the provincial Government to remove works from the list of these capital and revenue account works with a view to saving a certain amount of clerical labour?—Yes, and also to prevent our returns becoming very bulky. We have 40 works now in our list, and they are being added to year by year as small projects are sanctioned.

8237. How many major productive works have you?—Eight.

8238. And protective works?—One, in operation.

8239. How many minor works have you?—Thirty-four.

8240. With regard to the Director-General, you think he is a useful officer?—Yes, I do.

8241. Does he, as a matter of fact, now advise regarding the execution of works in progress?—So far as I am aware he has not done so, because no occasion has arisen for him to do so.

8242. No occasion has yet arisen for his coming to Madras?—He has come to Madras several times, but his investigations have been confined to the scrutiny of large projects, which have been under investigation in Madras.

8243. You say that there has been no attempt on his part to assume administrative importance?—No.

8244. Are the officers of your department at all inclined to look to him as their professional head rather than to yourself?—Not at all.

8245. You say there is a tendency to impose too rigid rules. Who imposes the rigid rules?—The Inspector-General.

8246. Then is that not a tendency towards assuming administrative importance?—He mostly advises with regard to the design for projects submitted to the Government.

8247. What you mean is that he does not interfere with the interior economy and discipline of your subordinates, but he is rather too fond of uniformity in design?—Exactly.

8248. That you think is detrimental to your department?—I think it delays the sanctioning of useful projects.

8250. However, you think that, balancing the good with the bad, the Government of India have done right to create such an appointment?—I might explain that there has always been an Inspector-General of Irrigation, but his office was combined with that of Secretary to the Government, and when he was Secretary to Government he had very little time for the detailed scrutiny of estimates that now takes place. Of recent years, owing to a large number of projects having been prepared all over India for irrigation works, a special officer has been appointed as Inspector-General.

8251. Have you submitted any large schemes of late years to the Government of India?—We have submitted several very large schemes.

8252. Have the estimates which you have submitted originally been very largely exceeded when the total cost has been reckoned up?—No estimate which has been submitted of recent years to the Government of India has been carried out.

8253. When was the last time that you submitted estimates for the carrying out of a large work in Madras?—We have submitted several within the last three or four years, or say five or six years.

8254. Have they been carried through?—They have nearly all been returned.

8255. For what reason?—For reconsideration and alteration.

8256. Reconsideration of design, or of cost?—Of both.

8257. When was your last work completed?—The completion estimates were sent in for the Periyar project, say, ten years ago.

8258. Do you recollect the original estimates for those?—I am afraid not, but I know the original estimate was considerably exceeded.

8259. Do you know by what percentage?—36 per cent.

8260. Do you recollect whether in that particular work the original estimates of the Government of Madras were much smaller than the estimates subsequently sanctioned by the Government of India?—I do not think they were; I do not think there was any material difference.

8261. You say the powers of sanction of Superintending Engineers might be increased up to Rs. 10,000? Has the Government of Madras power to do this now?—Yes.

8262. It has not done it?—It has not done it.

8263. When either a Collector, or a municipality, or a District Board, desires an irrigation project, what is the process by which that finally reaches the provincial Government?—If the local officers propose any but the most insignificant irrigation projects, they send up a preliminary report to the Chief Engineer for Irrigation.

8264. Do those projects spring from them, or from the District Board Officers?—Nominally from the District Board Officers. A preliminary report is sent up giving very roughly what the probable cost will be; the question is submitted by the Chief Engineer for Irrigation for the orders of the Local Government.

8265. Which branch of the Local Government?—It is sent to the Member in charge of the Revenue Department, and afterwards to the Member in charge of the Public Works Department. If the investigation is sanctioned, an estimate is then sent up, and when that is sanctioned, the detailed investigation is carried out.

8266. Is it in your office or is it in the Superintending Engineer's office that the estimates are finally framed?—In the case of large projects they are framed by a special establishment detailed for the purpose; in the case of moderately small projects they are framed by the local officers, the Executive and Superintending Engineers.

8267. Then comes in the process of sanctioning up to Rs. 20,000 or Rs. 25,000, as the case may be?—Yes.

8268. You wish to say something regarding the relations between the Collector and the Executive Engineer?—Yes. I understand that witnesses have suggested that Collectors should be empowered to issue orders directly to Executive Engineers, mainly in matters connected with irrigation, in order that their wishes may be promptly carried out. One witness (if reported aright) considers that not only should this power be given, but its bestowal would connote the power of the Revenue Divisional Officers to issue orders to subordinate officers of the Public Works Department.

Such a proposal would be subversive of discipline, in that an Executive Engineer would have two masters who would not improbably take very different views of the right course of action in various circumstances. If an Executive Engineer for any reason quarrelled with his departmental superior he could at once shelter himself behind the Collector. The position of the Superintending Engineer would thereby be rendered analogous to that occupied by a Conservator of Forests, viz., he would become an advising and consulting officer with no power to enforce his orders if his Executive Engineer wished to oppose them and could persuade the Collector to agree with him. In this respect the proposal is a thoroughly retrograde one, and runs counter to the policy now being adopted by the Government of India of giving greater powers and responsibilities to Superintending Engineers.

The points on which Collectors wish to issue orders are ones on which they are not competent to speak. They are, broadly speaking—

- (a) Distribution from irrigation works.
- (b) Repairs to irrigation works.

As regards (a), distribution from small works is already in the hands of the Revenue Department, and it is only distribution from large works where Collectors want enhanced powers. For the purpose of distribution of water in large systems we have a special staff, whose sole duty during the irrigation season is the distribution of water. They are, in practice, never transferred to other duties, and are kept in one place unless special reasons arise for their transfer. They are well acquainted with the needs of the people. I do not believe that they are more dishonest than revenue inspectors and other comparatively low paid officials with such opportunities would be. The officers of the Public Works Department, generally speaking, inspect regularly, and succeed in seeing that water is equitably distributed. The Collectors do not often interfere. When they do, their requests are, generally speaking, not the result of their personal knowledge, but are based on the recommendations of a tahsildar or the complaints of an influential raiyat. If complied with, they would be liable to upset a well-thought-out scheme of distribution and inflict hardship on other landholders who were not lucky or influential enough to be able to bring their claims forward. Occasionally there may be delays in setting right real grievances. The reason of this is that the tahsildar receives a complaint. He forwards it to the Revenue Divisional Officer, who sends it on to the Collector, who transmits it to the Executive Engineer, who has to send it to his sub-Divisional Officer, who enquires into the matter or even passes it on to a subordinate. This is very unsatisfactory.

With rapidly rising prices the economical use of water becomes yearly more important. This has until quite recent years been greatly neglected in this Presidency. A great deal of thought and trouble is now being devoted to this important object, which can only be attained by well-thought-out arrangements, founded on a scientific basis and steadily adhered to. If Collectors were empowered to issue such orders as they please on the subject, it would be impossible to introduce any improvements in this respect. Many Collectors fail to understand and grasp the importance of our aims in the matter of equitable and scientific distribution of water.

As to repairs, a Collector is always consulted in the preparation of the budget estimate of repairs of irrigation works, and any work which he thought required repair would certainly be put into the budget and pushed on if he regarded it as urgent.

Certain repairs which Collectors sometimes consider urgent are not only not urgent but absolutely useless. A frequent demand is for clearing sand from irrigation channels. It is in most cases impossible to tell by inspection whether a channel requires clearing in this way or not. In many cases where there have been loud demands for clearance, running a line of levels revealed the fact that, far from wanting clearing, the channel bed was in many places too low. A very great deal of the clearance of sand in minor works in charge of the Revenue Department is not only useless but harmful. Similarly, suggestions are often made that scouring sluices should be constructed in places where flood levels show that they would be absolutely ineffective, and such works as deepening tanks, the cost of which is absolutely prohibitive, embanking rivers and streams which increase the evils they are designed to prevent, &c., are often asked for.

Any wishes Collectors have in the matter of irrigation works can only be the result of representations from their subordinates. The idea that improvements would take place under their control is a natural one but illusory. The Public Works Department is not perfect, but, broadly speaking, it does its best, and that best is not likely to be improved in any way by the alteration suggested. To be frank, the motive which has given rise to the proposal under discussion is really a sentimental one, viz., that the Collector dislikes the idea that there should be in his district any officer to whom he has not the power to issue direct orders.

The preparation of an estimate for the improvement of an irrigation work or the device of a method to end an irrigation dispute is not always a simple matter. It involves taking many levels and the collection of revenue particulars, so that the time taken in disposing of a reference of this kind is really only reasonable although it may seem to a layman excessive. Revenue Officers are very much inclined to accept the opinions of the officers of their own department in defiance of the opinions of Engineers, and the grant of increased powers to Collectors in this respect would be likely to lead to serious injury to existing works and the waste of money by the execution of small projects which are technically unsound.

It has been suggested that Collectors should only be empowered to issue orders on non-technical matters. It is almost impossible to discriminate between technical and non-technical matters, and the distribution of water from our large irrigation systems with regard to which especially enhanced powers are demanded in the Revenue Department is an eminently technical matter of extreme difficulty. Originally all water distribution was in the hands of the Revenue Department, and although it is some time since my department undertook the distribution of water, the raiyats still look to the Revenue Department to remedy any grievance. That department undoubtedly has greater prestige with the raiyat, and has the advantage of being the department that assesses the revenue. Many of the delays complained of would be obviated, were the raiyat educated to apply in the first instance to the right person, i.e., the nearest Public Works Department Officer with sufficient authority to decide on the question. I believe that had the Officers of the Revenue Department taken that view, and had instructions been issued to the subordinate officials of that Department to refer petitioners in the first instance to the proper Public Works Department Officers, the vast majority of real grievances would have at once been set right.

I believe that wherever Collectors take a sympathetic interest in the aims of the department there is now little or no friction, and I would only plead for a little more trust and sympathy, without which it is unfair to lay the blame for disagreements on Executive Engineers. It has always been held that the officers of the Public Works Department must thoroughly recognize that the Collector is head of his district, that his wishes are in every respect to be carried out unless there are real reasons why this cannot be done, and in such cases the reasons must be clearly explained to him. Similarly, the Executive Engineer must always be prepared to give every assistance in his power to the Collector when required to do so. There are recognized rules and they are, I believe, almost universally acted up to, but it is generally difficult to get a Collector with sufficient knowledge of his district and time at his disposal to discuss engineering matters.

8269-70. Really your case in brief is this, that the distribution of water is a technical matter and that the interference with your subordinates in the distribution of water raises questions which no Collector can have real knowledge of; is not that it?—That is so as regards the distribution of water.

8271. And also with regard to repairs to irrigation works; do you hold that as strongly?—Yes, I hold it quite as strongly, because I believe that every attention is given to any wishes that the Collectors express.

8272. Do Collectors, as a rule, get their ideas upon all these subjects not from their own personal observation, but from representations made to them by their subordinates, the tahsildars, and so on?—That is so.

8273. Very possibly if the Collector had seen the matter in question, he would have formed a different opinion from that which he represents to you as his opinion?—Yes, if he had seen it in consultation with the officer of the Public Works Department, who could explain to him the facts of the case.

8274. Suppose the question of the distribution of water arises; it is very necessary if you are to give the supply of water to give it at once?—That is so.

8275. The Executive Engineer is not always at hand, whereas the Collector may perhaps be passing through the district at the time?—The Sub-Divisional Officer is always at hand.

8276. But he has no power of himself to do anything?—Yes, he has powers.

8277. Would he not have to refer to the Executive Engineer?—No. There are various arrangements in the various districts, but it is always so arranged that an officer on the spot can make any modification if it is necessary.

8278. Does it not in fact have to go to the Executive Engineer?—I do not think so.

8279. Therefore, what you feel is that, while the Collector should not have power to order the Sub-Divisional Officer, as a matter of fact the Sub-Divisional Officer is always at hand to give advice to the Collector?—Yes.

8280. And that being so, you desire no alteration in the present position?—That is so.

8281. (Sir Frederic Lely.) What is the position of the Sub-Divisional Officer; what is his pay?—It varies enormously—anything from an Assistant Engineer on Rs. 500 a month, down to an Overseer on Rs. 100 a month.

8282. He might be then even inferior to a tahsildar?—As a matter of fact, in the large districts, where distribution is of importance, the Sub-Divisional Officer is almost always an Assistant Engineer, or a very senior upper subordinate.

8283. Generally a native officer?—More often a native than a European.

8284. He would be presumably as ignorant of the conditions of the people and the state of things from the revenue point of view as the Collectors' subordinates would be of the state of things from the Public Works point of view?—I do not think so; I think he mixes with the people; he goes about and he sees what is going on, and he inspects the fields.

8285. At what stage does the Government of India Inspector-General of Irrigation intervene in case of major irrigation works?—All original ideas hitherto have been originated by the Madras Government.

8286. Would the preliminary working out of the project be done by the Madras Government without communication with the Government of India?—Yes, when the investigation is completed the projects are sent up, but the Inspector-General also makes tours, when, if convenient, he inspects the project which is in course of investigation and gives advice and instruction.

8287. As a general rule the complete project would not be taken in hand until the Inspector-General had visited the place and given an opinion upon it?—As a matter of practice hitherto, the projects have been previously completed, because the appointment of Inspector-General dates from such a short time back that, so far, he has not had time to investigate the projects.

8289. But the intervention of the Inspector-General of the Government of India does not become absolutely necessary under the present system until the project is completed and sent up for examination?—Not necessarily.

8290. It merely comes to the supervision of one high engineering expert of the work done by another, that is to say, by the provincial expert?—That is so.

8291. Do you think that in the case of most works the provincial experts would not be competent to deal with them?—I think they would be competent in the case of most works.

8292. Is the delay of a reference to the Government of India sufficiently compensated for by the additional security that is given by expert advice and supervision?—The Government of India provide the funds, and I think they have the right to exercise all supervision.

8293. Did you say that your Sub-Divisional Officer has as good means of knowing the condition of crops and the wishes of the people as the Collector?—He certainly has as good means of knowing the condition of the crops; I will not say that he has as good means of knowing the wishes of the people.

8294. If they wanted anything the people would more naturally go to the tahsildar or the Collector than to the officers of the Public Works Department?—They do so, and that is exactly what I wish altered.

8295. But the Collector is the authority who has to consider cases of remission when the crops fail or water is not supplied?—Yes.

8296. That being so, suppose the Collector expresses a wish about letting in water, or stopping water, would you not devise some way in which his wishes should be carefully considered, and, if possible, carried out by the Sub-Divisional Officer?—I believe such is the case now—that every consideration is given to his wishes and it is always done if possible.

8297. And where there is a disagreement in opinion what is the result?—I fancy the result is that things go on as they are, and there is acrimonious correspondence afterwards.

8298. Has the Sub-Divisional Officer to refer the matter to the Executive Engineer?—If the Sub-Divisional Officer had reasons for not complying with the Collector's wishes he would report the matter to the Executive Engineer.

8299. Would he send a copy of his report to the Collector?—That I do not know.

8300. Would you have any objection to his doing so?—Not the slightest.

8301. You spoke about the rigid rules which have been framed for the consideration of schemes submitted to the Government of India. Do you not think that those rules are necessary for the sake of securing uniformity in all schemes which go up from different provinces to the Government of India?—The rules which I allude to are the rules with regard to the designs of engineering works, and conditions vary so in various parts of India that rules which are suitable for one province are unsuitable for another.

8302. Has this been suggested to the Government of India?—It has. When I say it has been suggested, I mean that the Government of Madras in dealing with individual cases have suggested that greater latitude should be given to local officers to settle details.

8303. But on general principles you agree that in those schemes which are to be submitted to the Government of India, the Inspector-General must have some sort of scrutiny?—Yes.

8304. And they must proceed on certain rules with a view to uniformity in all the different provinces as far as possible?—I have perhaps used the word "rules" wrongly; it is hardly the word I should use; I would substitute "principles of design" for the word "rules."

*Mr. H. E.
Clerk.*

2 Dec., 1907.

8305. With regard to principles of design, would not the Inspector-General be justified in laying down certain principles as far as possible with a view to uniformity in all the provinces?—No, certainly not.

8306. (Mr. Hichens.) Have you got a large number of major productive projects on hand for which you can get no funds from the Government of India?—No, generally speaking, we get all the money we want.

8307. Does the provincial Government have to pay interest on the capital sums advanced prior to the completion of the work?—The works for which we get a grant from the Government of India are at present financed by the Government of India entirely.

8308. (Mr. Meyer.) You said that the Government of India, as far as your department is concerned, was the Secretary of the Public Works Department of the Government of India; is that correct?—I think I am right.

8309. Is there not a member of Council in charge of Public Works?—Yes, there is a Member of Council.

8310. Are you aware also that in any case in which it is proposed to overrule the provincial Government the special sanction of the Viceroy must be obtained?—No, I was not aware of that.

8311. You said that the limit of the provincial Government in regard to sanctioning estimates for productive public works was only Rs. 25,000; there you refer to supplementary works undertaken after the original project had been more or less completed?—That is so.

8312. But the estimate for the original project must go up to the Government of India, although the Government of India had approved of it generally?—Yes.

8313. The estimates for productive works are generally pretty large amounts?—Yes; generally a good many lakhs.

8314. You said there were 8 productive works in this Presidency; you meant 8 large systems?—Yes.

8315. For instance, you would call all the works in connection with the great Godavari system one work?—Yes.

8316. Productive works are constructed entirely by the Government of India from loan funds?—Yes.

8317. The amount the Government of India can raise for this purpose is limited?—Yes.

8318. And it has to be distributed over the whole of India?—Yes.

8319. As regards protective works, can you tell us how they are financed?—Protective works are financed by a proportion set apart from the Famine Insurance Fund.

8320. Which is also imperial?—Quite so.

8321. And the Government of India again has rather limited means, which it has to dispose of throughout the whole of India?—Yes.

8322. From that point of view is it not desirable that there should be an Inspector-General who should go round and compare one scheme with another and deal with each on its merits?—I think it is.

8323. And in dealing with the merits there may be a question of whether the estimate is possibly extravagant or not?—There may be.

8324. You have a big protective project here in connection with the Tungabhadra, have you not?—Yes.

8325. The Inspector-General came down about that?—Yes, two years ago.

8326. Did you find his advice was of value?—Yes.

8327. You spoke of rigid rules and you explained what you meant. Are there not a great many rigid rules in the Public Works Codes?—Yes.

8328. Rules that unduly hamper the discretion of officers?—I do not think there are very many; I am not prepared to recommend modifications off-hand.

8329. What power has your Executive Engineer, who is your chief officer in a district, to sanction works from provincial funds?—Up to Rs. 200, which may be extended to Rs. 500 in the case of selected officers.

8330. Up to what service may an officer be an Executive Engineer?—Up to 25 years' service.

8331. Do you think that these powers might not reasonably be extended?—They might well be extended to selected officers. Not to all.

8332. You spoke of giving additional powers to Superintending Engineers. Their powers are very limited, too, are they not?—Yes.

8333. Are they not supposed to be selected senior officers in the department—the best men next to the Chief Engineers?—Yes.

8334. Might they not have much larger powers?—I have made recommendations that they should.

8335. There was a letter the other day from the Government of India on the subject; were their suggestions the same as yours, or have they gone beyond them?—They have gone far beyond mine; I think they go up to a lakh.

8336. Are you prepared to go as far as that?—Not at once.

8338. Your present position is that of adviser to the Government of Madras in respect of all large schemes?—Yes.

8339. Does it not militate against your usefulness in that capacity to have your time taken up by the constant scrutiny of petty projects?—Yes.

8340. You spoke just now of making a discrimination between certain Executive Engineers and certain others as to powers; is not that rather an invidious matter?—The distinction is now made in that respect.

8341. How is the distinction made; is it on the ground of seniority?—It is generally on the ground of seniority.

8342. Not of personal ability?—As soon as the Executive Engineer has a certain amount of experience as Executive Engineer, unless he has shown that he is not likely to prove competent, he is invested with additional powers.

8343. Your idea is that an Executive Engineer should serve an apprenticeship in that grade and then get larger powers?—Exactly.

8344. But you do not favour the idea of discriminating between officers of the same grade and saying that A shall have the power and B shall not?—It would depend very much on the extent to which the powers were given; if they were given very large powers I might even extend my discrimination as far as you suggest.

8345. As far as the Executive Engineers are concerned, you might extend their very small powers considerably simply on the ground of seniority—you might give it to them after they had served a few years, is that your position?—Yes.

8346. You say that if the Collector had the control over the Executive Engineer in matters affecting the people, that would amount to a divided control over the Executive Engineer himself and would be unsatisfactory. That is the system that is carried out in the Forest Department?—I believe it is.

8347. Suppose the Executive Engineer retained his present power of control in technical matters, in all estimates and construction, and that the control of the Collector was merely as regards what works should be undertaken and what was the best time to repair certain works having regard to the needs of the raiyats, would you object to the Executive Engineer being under the Collector so far?—I should, certainly.

Mr. H. F.
Clerk.
2 Dec., 1907

8348. You say you recognize the Collector as head of the district?—Certainly.

8349. Is that always the position taken up in your department?—I think it is almost always.

8350. You speak in your memorandum for instance of the Collector and his people as "the Revenue Department"; does that not imply that the Collector is merely concerned with the collection of revenue and that he is on an equality with the Public Works Department?—I am sorry if I have given a wrong idea; I fully recognize that the Collector is the head of his district.

8351. And that he has many things to consider besides mere revenue matters?—Quite so.

8352. You say that under the present system the Collector has a full opportunity of seeing the budget allotment for his district and making his remarks thereon?—Yes.

8353. Was that system always in vogue?—Always so far as I know.

8354. Was it not introduced about the year 1892?—I cannot say; I am under the impression that it was always in force; however, that would be since 15 years.

8355. On one occasion when I was serving in this Presidency, the Superintending Engineer omitted to send the budget to the Collector at all; would you consider that proper?—Certainly not.

8356. You spoke of the Collector being able to correct matters in conjunction with the Executive Engineer; if the Executive Engineer said he could not come, would you consider that proper?—Not unless there were very urgent reasons.

8357. If a Collector says that he finds that a particular tank might be repaired with advantage, or that a certain weir is out of order, or something of that sort, and the Executive Engineer says that there are no funds, would you consider that a proper disposal of the case?—He should put it in his budget the next time.

8358. You implied that the Collector is a purely sedentary officer who could only act on reports from his subordinates?—I wished to imply that the Collector is a very hard-worked officer and that he has no time to go into details.

8359. Does he not travel about the district?—Yes.

8360. Does he not do the jamabandi for a large portion of the district every year?—Yes.

8361. Has he not to deal with remissions for irrigation?—Yes.

8362. And does he not find out in that way whether the irrigation is in good order or bad order?—Yes.

8363. Do you know the Godavari district?—I have not known it for a long while.

8364. The distribution of water to the villages there rests with a class called channel superintendents, officers of your department, a low paid class of men?—Yes.

8365. Has it been alleged that they have been bribed?—Yes.

8366. Do you think that there is any truth in that?—Yes.

8367. It is an allegation frequently made in the district that if a certain channel superintendent did not receive a sufficient douceur from the raiyat he would close the channel leading from that village; is that so?—It would depend whether he thought he could do it with impunity.

8368. Then it would all depend on the degree of supervision exercised over him by the Executive Engineer?—Yes.

8369. And the Executive Engineer has a large range?—Yes; he has a Sub-Divisional Officer under him.

8370. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) As regards the Inspector-General of Irrigation, you are glad of his advice, and you think that the dissemination of information from other provinces which he facilitates is a very good thing?—Yes.

8371. You say here: "Business would be greatly facilitated were the responsible opinion of local officers in matters of detail more readily accepted." You attribute that to the Inspector-General's tendency not to accept them?—Yes.

8372. In so far you would say he is entering a sphere where he is injurious?—In that respect, yes.

8373. You say you have had 5 or 6 works as the result of the Irrigation Commission which have been sent up to the Government of India and have come back?—Yes.

8374. They have come back with memoranda by the Inspector-General?—Yes.

8375. A single memorandum or two memoranda?—One project at least has come back more than once.

8376. But I mean, one memorandum or two memoranda together?—Only one so far as I am aware.

8377. On technical matters?—Yes.

8378. Solely?—No; there are also discussions on revenue matters.

8379. That is to say, the Inspector-General after visiting a work takes up the revenue aspects of the work and so on?—Yes.

8380. Before the project goes up to the Government of India and comes back to you, has the Board of Revenue had an opportunity of reporting upon it?—Yes, before it goes to the Government of Madras.

8381. Before it goes to the Government of India at any rate?—Yes. At some period in the course of the project the Board of Revenue submits a report on the revenue aspects of the project.

8382. Do you consider that the Inspector-General's criticism is useful in that regard?—It is a point which goes rather beyond my sphere of work, but I should say on the whole it is.

8383. Suppose the Inspector-General certifies that a project is sound and desirable, do you think that he might usefully further enter into the revenue results?—It does not come within my sphere of work to give an expression of opinion on that point.

8384. If it does not come within your sphere of work, would you feel competent yourself to criticise for the Government of Madras?—No, I would not.

8385. Then do you see any reason why the Inspector-General of Irrigation should feel competent to discuss that with the Government of India?—No; on the whole I should say he is not.

8386. You think he is going outside the sphere of an Inspector-General in that sort of thing?—Yes.

8387. And that the opinion of the Local Government based on that of the Board of Revenue is probably the more valuable of the two?—Yes.

8388. That is assuming the soundness of the project technically?—Yes.

8389. (Chairman.) Have these 5 or 6 schemes that have come down from the Government of India come down on general points or on technical points?—Mainly on technical points.

8390. You see a very large number of small schemes that come up to you?—Yes.

8391. Have you laid down for yourself certain general principles which you apply to these schemes?—Yes.

8392. Do you think there is any chance, in the view of your subordinates, of these principles which you have laid down as applicable to different parts of the Presidency being too rigid?—I do not think so.

8393. You think there is sufficient likeness throughout all parts of the Presidency to enable you to apply these principles generally?—I think I have sufficient knowledge of various parts of the Presidency to modify my principles in accordance with local conditions.

8394. Do you modify your principles?—Principles of design, yes.

8395. You do not think you apply in the case of your subordinates the view which the Inspector-General of the Government of India applies to you?—No.

8396. Is your department very much tied up by office work?—I think it is on the whole.

8397. Have you any general recommendations with regard to small matters that you think might be left to the decision of subordinates?—The only thing I can think of in connection with that is that there are a large number of small rules framed by the provincial Government, which are individually so insignificant that I do not think it worth while to bring them to notice, but which collectively do delay business.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. H. E. Clerk.

2 Dec., 1907.

M. R. Ry. P. VENKATAPPAYYA was called and examined.

8398. (Chairman.) You are the Vice-President of the District Board of Kistna?—I have been so for six years. I am a pleader, a native of Masulipatam, and I was also a municipal Chairman for seven years.

8399. Are you also a member of the taluk Board?—I am a member of the District Board and I am a member of the municipal Council.

8400. Do you as a matter of fact have handed to you by the President of the Board all the details of the budget?—Yes, I look into the budget.

8401. Do you, under the general control of the President of the Board, practically arrange all the work of the Board?—Yes.

8402. And you have a pretty free hand in doing that?—Yes, so far as office work is concerned I have a pretty free hand; in the matter of administration certain powers have been delegated to me.

8403. What sort of powers?—Powers of overlooking the work of certain subordinates in certain departments and so on.

8404. Is there any pay attached to your office?—None whatever.

8405. How many hours a day of your time do you find that the work occupies?—About three hours every day, sometimes more. I happen to be a pleader also, and if any questions connected with the law arise that have to be decided by the Board I generally look into them; when such questions come up a trifle more time is occupied.

8406. Do you get any of your colleagues to assist you in your work?—No. No doubt there are provisions in the Local Boards Act that committees could be formed of the members of District Boards, or partly of such members and partly outsiders, in order to supervise certain branches of the work. Such committees do not exist; the Act is not put into force. If these provisions were put into force and committees of a few members were entrusted with looking after certain branches of the work, the President would be a good deal relieved. The President, as it is now, looks after the whole of the executive business, barring that which he has delegated to the Vice-President. This is not as ample as it might have been. In several districts of the Presidency it is only official members who are Vice-Presidents. There are men in every district who would willingly take up a large amount of work, and if these non-official gentlemen were entrusted with the work it would relieve the President from a great deal that otherwise he has to do. So long as it is simply a matter of honour to sit with the Collector as President and simply say yes or no, the members look upon it from the honour point of view, but if the members of the Board are given real work to do, the choice of members would be more careful on the one hand, and the members themselves would be unwilling to accept such a position unless they thought themselves equal for it. The improvement of the constitution of these Boards would have a wholesome effect all round. In municipalities this is done now to a certain extent.

8407. May I take it that there is a general power of delegation under the Act of 1884 which has not been exercised?—Not exercised fully except in the case of the Vice-President, where, too, it has been exercised very sparingly; that is the point.

8408. You would like to see a much larger exercise of these powers of delegation than at present is practised?—Yes. Then, in the case of municipalities, there is no doubt that under the ward system the members do take some part, but there too there is much room for improvement and much greater scope for members being invested with further powers and further duties. The sanction of Government has to be obtained upon a great many points in connection even with minor matters. I think that the necessity for reference in regard to some of those points might be dispensed with, with advantage to the Government as well as to the Board.

8409. Do you desire to say anything about Advisory Councils?—There ought to be an Advisory Council in the district, not only to advise the Collector as the head of the district, but also to advise the Executive Engineer (especially as to irrigation and the distribution of water) and the Forest Officer and the District Superintendent of Police. It is very necessary to have Advisory Councils for these purposes. Such Councils might be constituted in one of two alternative ways; one method is by the election of competent men from various parts of the district to represent the various classes and interests of their parts of the district. There are already well-constituted and well-conducted District Associations, taluk Associations, and People's Associations; representatives from these might also be chosen to be members of the Advisory Council. At least a large proportion of the members should be taken by means of election; a few of them might be nominated by the Collector also. Constituting them in that way, we might have Advisory Councils for the District Boards and Advisory Councils for the taluk Boards also, sitting side by side with those Boards. Or if this is open to the objection that there will be a multiplicity of assemblies and a multiplicity of correspondence, I think there is a way of converting gradually, in course of time, the District Boards and taluk Boards themselves into Advisory Councils, by changing the constitution of those Boards. This is an alternative method.

8410. Of how many members do you think the Advisory Council should consist?—About twenty persons.

8411. Would it be difficult to find twenty responsible persons to represent all the different interests of a district?—I do not think so.

8412. How many members are there on your District Board?—About forty.

8413. How many different interests are represented between those forty; how many lawyers are there?—There are five lawyers.

8414. How many landowners?—Some seventeen or eighteen.

8415. Are there any traders on the Board?—Two.

8416. Are there any raiyats on the Board?—Yes.

8417. How many?—Some 10 or 12, included in the seventeen or eighteen landowners.

8418. You think it would be perfectly easy, in addition to those who now sit on the District and taluk Boards, to find twenty other men who would represent these classes on the Advisory Council?—Some of the members of the District Boards may sit on the Advisory Councils also.

M. R. Ry. P. Venkatappayya.

2 Dec., 1907.

M. R. Ry.
P. Venkatap-
payya.

2 Dec., 1907.

8419. You want them to re-appear on the Advisory Councils?—I do not see any objection to that. I think there are many other persons also who are equal to the task.

8420. Do you think that the District Boards do good work now?—Yes, according to the rules and regulations under the Act.

8421. We had a native gentleman here the other day who told us that he thought that District Boards ought to be abolished; do you agree with that?—I think there ought to be some central Board for the whole district.

8422. You think it would not do to change a more or less small District Board into a large number of more powerful taluk Boards?—There would be a lack of central power and a want of uniformity; there would be some difficulties.

8423. You think it would make more work?—Yes. I want to see the District Boards gradually converted into Advisory Councils.

8424. In addition to the District Boards and taluk Boards, what you want to see is about twenty people besides those forming an Advisory Council to the Collector of the district?—Yes.

8425. And, from your point of view, to the Engineer of the district and also to the Forest Officer of the district?—Yes, and also to the Superintendent of Police if necessary.

8426. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) About your system of having sub-committees in the District Boards; how long have you held these views?—A long time.

8427. I suppose you are trusted by your Collector?—Yes.

8428. Have you ever put a scheme before him?—No.

8429. Do you not think it would be a good thing to work it out and put it before him and try to introduce it in your district and see if it would work?—I should think so.

8430. You are in favour of election to taluk Boards?—Yes, to some extent.

8431. Have you ever tried to work out a scheme for the Kistna district?—There has been a scheme in force; I have not myself brought it out.

8432. Is there election in force?—Yes, from taluk Boards to District Boards.

8433. But there is no system of election to taluk Boards?—No.

8434. Would that be a good thing?—Yes.

8435. Have you ever tried to put forward such a scheme?—No.

8436. I suppose, as you have been Vice-President six years and have had various powers delegated to you, we may take it that you are thoroughly trusted by your Collector?—I am, I believe.

8437. Would he not consider a suggestion of that sort if you make it?—I think so, yes.

8438. Might you not carry it out in your own district if you tried?—I have not tried it.

8439. But there is ample power under the Act to try it?—Yes, but then there must be better members in the Board before I do that.

8440. Whether you got better members would depend on what scheme of qualification for election of members you propounded?—Of course all selected members are qualified according to the rules, but they should be elected according to their competency. Some of the members are competent, but others are not up to the task.

8441. Would those be likely to be elected by the people?—I think the people would elect competent men.

8442. If you have a system of election you think that that difficulty would be lessened?—If you have a system of election on the one hand, and if you have also the system of letting these members do substantial work.

8443. (Mr. Meyer.) Although the Act permits the election of a portion of the members of the taluk Board, it would be necessary to get the sanction of Government to the application of that section in your district?—Yes.

8444. You wish that the Collector should remain President of the District Board, though there should be a non-official Vice-President?—At least for some years to come, perhaps for many years to come.

8445. He should keep only important matters in his own hands and delegate routine work?—Not only routine work; he might delegate other matters, such as the management of roads.

8446. But when it comes, for instance, to a scheme of roads, he must deal with the matter?—Yes, he must have general control.

8447. It has been suggested to us that if the District Boards received a freer hand, of which I understand you are in favour, it might be of advantage to give such outside control as is necessary to a member of the Board of Revenue instead of to the Government direct; would you be in favour of that?—I have not thought out the matter.

8448. Would you be in favour of giving the Collector control over the lesser municipalities in the district, instead of making them go up to Government?—I think matters must go up to Government as they now do.

8449. You spoke of Advisory Councils for several officers, the Forest Officer, and so on; do you mean that each should have a separate Advisory Council, or that there should be a committee of the general Advisory Council?—Only one Advisory Council for the whole district.

8450. With committees for forests, public works, and so on?—Yes, either with committees or without them; all the members might be consulted.

8451. (Mr. Dutt.) Are there many other non-official Vice-Presidents of District Boards in the Madras Presidency?—I fear that there are only three or four others in the whole province.

8452. You say that under section 34 of the Act it is allowable to have committees for the performance of particular branches of work?—I think that is in clause 5 of that section.

8453. That section speaks of the management of educational institutions, hospitals and dispensaries, and other institutions maintained by the Board?—Yes.

8454. That section does not permit of a budget sub-committee, for instance, being formed, or of committees for any other work besides those mentioned?—No.

8455. So that if it was necessary to form a budget sub-committee it would be necessary to modify this Act?—Yes. I should also submit that it should be so modified, if it should be modified at all, as to include power on the part of the sub-committees to superintend the carrying out of public works, for instance, roads; there are many things with regard to roads and communications that they might undertake when the President or the Engineer are absent in other parts of the district.

8456. With regard to Advisory Councils, you have suggested that the Advisory Council should not only advise in revenue matters, but give advice in police, irrigation, and forest matters?—Yes; it might be through the Collector.

8457. The District Superintendent is under the Collector?—Yes.

8458. And therefore you suggest that the advice should be conveyed through the Collector?—Yes.

8459. And the same with regard to forests?—Yes. As to the Engineer, I suggest that he be placed under the Collector in connection with the distribution of water. I know something about the distribution of water, because there is plenty of irrigation in my district, and I myself have wet land.

8460. Have you any idea as to how many members of the Advisory Council ought to be elected and how many ought to be nominated?—I think two-thirds ought to be elected and one-third nominated.

8461. Besides these suggestions have you any others to make?—I should submit that it is not desirable to increase the number of districts, which would involve a very large expenditure; there are now very good roads in the districts, so that touring is not very difficult.

8462. Is not the area of some districts at present very large as compared with the area of the average Madras district?—Yes, one or two may be so.

8463. In those cases could not the districts with advantage be divided?—Perhaps a bit might be taken off some of the larger ones and put on to smaller ones; there might be some adjustment of that sort.

8464. Have you anything further to say?—I think it is very desirable to have village panchayats, at least for some of the larger villages at first, and gradually extend them to smaller villages. They would be of great use in inspecting crops along with the karnam and seeing whether remissions were necessary; they would be useful generally in matters like sanitation, watching, education and so forth.

8465. Would you organise these panchayats in those villages where there are already unions, or only in places where there are no unions?—I think they are quite a different body from the village unions; I would originate them in all places.

8466. Have you any idea as to how funds may be supplied for the carrying out of the duties imposed upon them?—That might be done by the transfer of some funds from the taluk Boards or District Boards; also in course of time, as the people came to appreciate the benefits of self-government, it might be done by some small taxation, and they might be trusted with the spending of the money.

8467. You would not recommend that now?—Not the taxation.

8468. Is there any other subject that you desire to touch upon?—I think the rights of appeal now granted are not too liberal, and they should be allowed to stand as they are. A careful reading of the rules shows that they are already curtailed to the extent to which they may be legitimately curtailed. Then, in the matter of remissions, the rules are very stringent and extremely rigid. Only on the loss of the total crop are remissions permissible. I think the extent of the loss of crop should be taken into consideration; account should be taken of the portion of crop recoverable, and the value of that portion, and if that value does not exceed the cost of cultivation of the whole, remission should be granted. At present the rules are so rigid that very little discretion is left to the local officers, and consequently there is a great deal of hardship.

8469. (Sir Frederic Lely.) You say that two-thirds of the Advisory Council should be elected. I want you to tell me, as an Indian gentleman, whether it is, or is not, true that the soliciting of the votes of inferiors is altogether repugnant to the best classes of Indians in the rural districts?—There is no doubt some degree of repugnance about it, but gradually, in course of time, the need for such sort of soliciting would disappear; the system will not be worse than it is now.

8470. I am speaking now not of the urban population, but of people of better social position in the rural areas. Do you think that, as a matter of fact, they would stand as candidates at an election?—I think they would.

8471. Do you think, as a matter of fact (I am not saying whether the feeling is right or not) that they would think that they could not do so without loss of self-respect in the eyes of their neighbours and of themselves?—I think not, because the people themselves will try to elect men who are capable of doing the work, if the bodies are entrusted with real duties.

8472. But do you think these men would stand?—Yes; they would hope to be elected upon such a body.

8473. Suppose their election was doubtful, do you think they would stand?—I think there will be no great difficulty about that.

8474. (Chairman.) Having been Vice-President of a District Board for some six years, have you found any delay arising in settling questions as between the District Board and the taluk Board? I understand for instance that the budget of the taluk Board comes up through the District Board, and therefore there must be questions which are referred from the taluk Board to the District Board. Is there any undue delay in settling these questions?—There is not any very great delay.

8475. Is there any removable delay?—I do not think there is any removable delay; the delay so far as it takes place is unavoidable.

8476. You are familiar with all the accounts of the taluk Board?—To some extent.

8477. Are there too many forms which you have to fill up?—I do not think so, except that I wanted to mention this. There is some correspondence with the Government that might be cut down if greater power were conferred on Boards, but so far as the forms are concerned I think they are not too complicated. May I add that in case the Collector has to be relieved of his burden of work it might be done by a larger employment of tahsildars and Deputy Collectors on the one hand, and also by the separation of executive and judicial functions on the other.

M. R. Ry. VEERASAMI IYENGAR was called and examined.

8478. (Chairman.) You are a landowner in Tanjore?—Yes. As for extending the powers of the District Officers in matters concerning the collection of revenue, I should suggest that the kist must be made to be collected within a period of four months from the 1st of March to the end of June. This system of collection would fetch high price for the raiyats' produce. If anyone fails to pay the kist within a period of 30 days after the expiry of the time, the land becomes the property of Government, and it might be sold in auction. This system would save much trouble.

The number of officers may be increased, inasmuch as the officers at present very often complain of want of time to attend personally to many important cases. The area of districts may be curtailed or the number of officers may be increased.

Officers connected with the Irrigation Department ought not to be transferred very often, but they may be transferred once in five years.

The municipal Councils and District Boards are not doing good work, inasmuch as the members happen to dispose of most of the matters not personally understanding them. Until they take to division of labour among themselves no improvement can be made, as it is now.

Such Councils must be organised. Selection of members ought to be made among those who belong to the middle class and who would be prepared to go out, and learn matters and give good and useful counsels.

It is possible and quite necessary to have councils in village communities, but such committees are not in existence, in the absence of which the loss is inevitably occurring to the Government and to the raiyats, to a very large extent, in each village. The selection of the village Council members must be made in accordance to the amount of kist paid by them individually. The village munsiffship must be made honorary and that post must be given to the Presidents of such committees. The village karnams, manigars, and thoties may be (as they are now) Government servants, under the guidance of these Councils. The Council should see that the revenues are properly collected and matters referred to them by civil and revenue officials properly disposed of. Any advice that the Council may ask must be given by the district officials. Power to enforce the Kudimaramat Act must be given to the Council. Everything pertaining to the safety of the villagers should be managed by the Council having funds collected if the villagers were prepared to give voluntarily. Power to spend one-sixth of the Local Fund Cess Fund collected in the village must be given to them wherever access to the main roads is impossible.

8479. You wish to say something about the frequent transfer of officers who are connected with the Irrigation Department?—Some works which are to be sanctioned and executed at once have been delayed for 30 years on account of these transfers. When a scheme is projected the officer in charge frames an estimate; before the scheme that is projected is carried out another officer comes along with entirely different views. There are irrigation works in respect of which very considerable loss would be caused to two or three villages if a channel was left unopened, and matters of that kind.

8480. You say that owing to the change of Public Works Officers necessary irrigation works have been delayed?—Yes, involving a loss of several lakhs to the people, both to the cultivators and to the Government.

8481. Do you live in a country district?—I live half my time in Tanjore and the other half in my own village.

8482. Besides being a landowner have you any other occupation?—Not now; sometimes I am engaged as an expert witness to give advice on irrigation points as to the distribution of water and so on.

8483. Do you suggest that if there was transfer of authority from the Executive Engineer to the Collector, the distribution of water would be more satisfactory or easier?—At present the authority is supposed to be in the Collector and in the Engineer. There are principles already laid down—that such and such channels shall be made and that such and such places shall receive so much water when there is so much in the river; distribution rules are laid down and the Collector acts according to them; if the Engineer and the Collector agree they may extend the boundaries of an area or alter the distribution of water.

8484. You live in a small village?—There are two or three villages together, with one irrigation channel for 8,000 people.

8485. Do you think that in such a village, or group of villages, you could usefully get a village panchayat?—Yes.

8486. You speak of your being employed as an expert; have you been in the Irrigation Department of Government?—Yes, as a supervisor.

8487. Have you had many years of Public Works experience?—From 1870 to 1903 I served in the Public Works Department in various capacities up to supervisor. I should like to say that in my opinion there is no safety for life or property in the villages at the present time. I have been in a village for six consecutive months and have never seen a policeman; a policeman has never come unless somebody has sent for him, or brought him.

(The witness withdrew.)

The Rev. Dr. D. DOWNIE was called and examined.

The Rev. Dr.
D. Downie.

2 Dec., 1907.

8488. (Chairman.) You have been some time in India?—Thirty-four years as a Missionary.

8489. During that time you have mixed, as I understand, with all classes of the community out here?—Yes. I have been a resident of Nellore since 1873 and have travelled extensively over the district both as missionary and as Chairman of the Primary School Examination. I have been for many years a member of the District Board and the municipal Council and for some years a member of the taluk Board.

I do not know of any distrust of, or of opposition to, the Government on the part of the mass of the people. The recent disturbances in Bengal and the visits of one or two agitators to Nellore have caused some little "unrest" among a few of the educated and professional classes, but even that has not been of a serious nature. But there is less contact and sympathy between the officials and the people now than there used to be. I have known of a Collector who at the end of a year's residence in Nellore did not know where the oldest high school in the district was located, although it is situated in a prominent part of the town, and he never saw the largest girls' school in the district. This may be due partly to the press of office work, but my impression is that it is due more to a want of real sympathy with the people and their welfare. The frequent changes of Government officials, especially Collectors, has much to do with this want of sympathy between the Government and the people. In my time I think we have had at least 20 Collectors, of whom I think 12 were permanent Collectors. That would give little more than one and-a-half years as the average term. Collectors cannot get sufficiently acquainted with their districts or the people in that time. It frequently happens that the Collector is not sufficiently acquainted with the Telugu language to communicate with the people. This is a serious barrier between the Collector and the people. If they approach the Collector at all, it must be through the mediation of some subordinate, and it will depend largely on the latter whether the case be correctly represented or not. If the intermediary happens to be a Brahman, as is very likely to be the case, and the petitioner a non-caste man, the latter's chances of a fair hearing or a fair reply would, or at least might, be rather slight.

The District Board consists of 32 members, of whom five are members ex-officio and three are really ex-officio though appointed by the Collector, making eight ex-officio members. Sixteen are elected by the taluk Boards, but there is nothing to hinder every one of them being officials, and, as a matter of fact, many of them are. The other eight are nominated by the Collector and appointed by Government. They are non-officials. The Board, therefore, is largely official and is controlled by a very small number of the members. It is safe to say that the work of the Board is done by not more than half a dozen out of the 32. The average attendance is about 20, and the most of them do little more than vote. The official members, such as tahsildars, draw double travelling allowance of non-official members. I know at least one tahsildar who draws some Rs. 35 travelling allowance while his actual travel can hardly cost more than five or six. A much smaller Board and greater care in the selection of the members would contribute to its efficiency.

An Advisory Committee or Council, composed, it may be, of members of the Board, but representing the different communities who would be consulted as to the budget and other important matters, would be an advantage. At present the budget is prepared by the President and a few of his subordinates, and the Board does little more than approve what is done.

I do not think the town of Nellore has improved in any respect since it became a municipality. The Council consists of 18 members. Six of these are elected and 12 are appointed by Government. The Collector nominates these 12 members, but he is guided largely by the headquarter Deputy Collector, who is a member of the Council. The Chairman is usually a Brahman and often a vakil. When matters of importance are to be discussed, there is usually evidence of rivalry between the Brahmans and other castes. The Chairman ought to be a European, either a non-official or the Assistant Collector. Encroachments are frequent, and I know of some that have existed for 18 years which are known to be encroachments and yet are allowed to stand. The sanitation of the town is far from satisfactory, and the roads are frequently in very bad condition. Neither the roads of the district nor the municipality have ever been in as good condition since they were taken over by the local bodies. My opinion is that the people are not prepared for local self-government.

The new education rules are no doubt intended and calculated to improve education. With the scheme for elementary education I have no complaint to make, except that it puts too much power into the hands of the inspectors. All that Government now promise in the way of ordinary grants-in-aid is one-half the excess expenditure over the fee income. It seems to me that the policy of the Government in regard to secondary schools is to increase the restriction and decrease the aid. The effect will be to close up many private schools and restrict higher education to the well-to-do classes. If the Government are prepared to undertake the entire primary and secondary education of the country, I for one would have no objection. It would be in accord with what I regard as the best public school educational system in the world. In that case Government ought to allow Mission and other private schools to follow their own schemes and be permitted to send up candidates for Matriculation on their own merits, irrespective of where or how they were prepared. But I seriously question whether the people are able to bear the additional taxation that this additional burden would involve. In any case Mission schools will probably continue, but in view of the large amount of aid given to Government in its educational work by the Missions, it seems to me they deserve more generous treatment at the hands of Government.

If the partnership between the Government and private school managers is to be continued, I think there ought to be some sort of Advisory Council, composed of representatives of the Educational Department and a proportionate number of educational experts from representative educational institutions. Though its powers would only be advisory, it should be understood that the advice of such a body should be heeded, and not simply one to hear and approve what had already been determined upon.

8490. You are of opinion that the Collectors, and, I suppose, the Divisional Officers, do not mix as much as they could, or as they ought to, with the people amongst whom they reside, and over whom they have jurisdiction?—Yes.

8491. That is partly because they are deficient in knowledge of the vernaculars?—It is very largely owing to the brevity of service in a given district; it is owing to the frequency of changes of officers.

8492. Have you noticed any improvement as to the length of term lately?—No, changes are more numerous. In the early part of my residence in Nellore the terms of service for Collectors, for example, were much longer. Mr. J. Grose was there for two terms—five years the first time and two years the next time—before he went to the Board of Revenue. Mr. Vans Agnew, who was Collector when I came, was, I think, some five or six years in the district; Dr. McLeane was some five years, I think, in the district; since then the term has been less.

8493. It has been less within the last 10 years, shall we say?—It has been less since Mr. Grose left; that was ten years ago, I should think.

8494. Owing to the factions amongst the people in a district is it difficult for them to approach the Collector?—It is difficult for the ordinary or common people to get near the Collector; I do not think difference of caste or religion is the only reason. The Collector usually receives such people through the intermediary of some of his subordinates; it is difficult for an ordinary raiyat, for instance—for a non-caste man or a Christian—to approach the Collector except through these intermediaries.

8495. Does that obtain in the case of the Sub-Divisional Officer?—I think so.

8496. And in the case of the tahsildar?—Of course, it decreases as you get lower in the scale, but I think in the case of a tahsildar, for instance, it would be very difficult for a Pariah to get near him.

8497. Practically impossible?—I would not say that.

8498. Possible if he paid enough?—Well—.

8499. You have been for some time a member of the District Board. As a member had you sufficient opportunities of taking part in the work of the Board?—In all the meetings of the Board I have ample freedom.

8500. Ample freedom of criticism and speech?—Yes.

8501. But you have not ample executive freedom?—In the preparation of budgets and that sort of thing we have nothing to do except to approve what has been done. We can criticise, of course, and budgets are prepared and brought before the Board; but as a rule they are passed as they are presented.

8502. Are you consulted before the budget is framed?—No.

8503. Is it desirable that you should be so consulted?—I think that in the preparation of budgets and other important matters there should be a Committee or a Council.

8504. And they should help the Collector in drawing up the local budget?—They should have some part in drawing up the local budget.

8505. May I take it that the very fact that you have been unconsulted in the preparation of your budgets causes you to be ignorant of the way in which your financial resources are arrived at?—Yes, that is largely the case.

8506. Do you think the District Board should be abolished and that taluk Boards with rather larger powers could take their place?—I do not think so, I would not advise it.

8507. You regard the District Board as an essential part of the framework of Government?—I think so.

8508. But you think that it ought to have larger powers, or, at all events, shall I say that it ought to exercise its powers through its members instead of through its Chairman?—That is right.

8509. You do not think the powers should be increased?—No, I do not.

8510. Do you get a fairly satisfactory class of members on the District Board?—I do not think so; it is a fairly satisfactory class; but I do not think they are sufficiently representative.

8511. Take your own Board, for instance; what classes are represented on it?—It is largely official and very largely Brahman.

8512. Are there many Christians in the Nellore district or represented by your Board?—About 15,000.

8513. What is the population of the district?—It was a million and a quarter; I am not sure about the present population; the district was divided two or three years ago.

8514. Are there Muhammadans?—Yes, there are a good many Muhammadans.

8515. Is there either a Christian or a Muhammadan member of the Board?—Both; that is to say, there is no native Christian member, but there are Missionaries representing the native Christian population.

8516. Is the Hindu representation fairly divided as between caste and caste?—I should think not; I should think the Brahmans predominated.

8517. If, as some witnesses have suggested, election took the place of selection, would the composition of the Board differ greatly?—I do not think that it would be an improvement, but, of course, it would differ.

8518. Would there be a greater representation of different castes?—If the selection was left to the people I do not think you would get so fair a distribution as there is now.

8519. Would the higher caste element shut out the lower castes?—Yes, it would very largely, I think, consist of Brahmans and merchants.

8520. You think that the composition of the Board, although, perhaps, not perfect, is pretty fair?—It is fair, but there is room for improvement. I think the majority of the members of the Board take no part whatever in the work of the Board. They are members and they attend the meetings and they draw their travelling allowance, but that is the end of it; I do not think they have any interest in the work of the Board; I am speaking of the majority. Of the 32, half a dozen members of the Board do the work.

8521. Have you any experience of either American or British representation; have you ever been a member of a District Council in England or a member of whatever the corresponding body would be in America?—No.

8522. Are you aware that in nearly every municipal district in England, at any rate, there are only about half a dozen members of the body who do the work of the body?—I presume that is true.

8523. So that what happens in one country happens in another?—What I mean to say is that if the District Board was smaller and a more careful selection was made of its members, the work would be done more satisfactorily.

8524. Do you think it would be well to have sub-committees?—I do.

8525. To sum it all up, you think that the Madras Government would do well to delegate some of the powers which under the Act of 1884 it can delegate?—Yes.

8526. (Mr. Hichens.) I understand you to say that you advocate committees of the Board?—Yes.

8527. Have not many members of the Board to come from a good distance?—Yes.

8528. Would there not be any difficulty in getting them to come for committee meetings as well as for Board meetings?—No, except that it would cost something, that is all.

8529. If you had, for instance, a budget committee, that would want to sit a good long time?—No doubt.

8530. You think they would be prepared to give up their time to it?—Yes, I do not think there would be any difficulty about that.

8531. When the budget is before the Board, does the discussion usually end at one sitting?—There is some little discussion now and then, but usually it passes as it is presented to us.

8532. You do not take each item separately and discuss it?—Yes, we do.

8533. Are the estimates presented in some detail?—Yes.

8534. For example do they specify how much is going to be spent on individual roads?—Yes. One-half of the budget goes to roads; that is divided into individual roads, and we decide what roads shall be made, or what provision shall be made for a given road.

8535. Are you in favour of panchayats being formed?—Yes.

8536. (Mr. Dutt.) Would you have nomination or election?—I would have nomination there, too, rather than election.

8537. You do not think it would be safe in that case, where you have got a definite unit, to have the elective principle?—No.

8538. You have suggested that there ought to be a committee for the preparation of the budget. Do you think that it would be also useful to have similar committees for superintending some other departments of the Board's work, like public works or schools?—Yes, I agree with that.

8539. You have mentioned that at present the Brahman element and the merchant element predominate in the District Board?—No, I do not think I said that.

8540. You said that many members were Brahmans and merchants?—I think that is the case in the municipal Council, but I do not think it is the case in the District Board.

8541. Can you suggest any reason why the Brahman element predominates?—I do not know unless it is this; I am inclined to think that the selection is usually made nominally by the Collector, but practically by his sherishtadar or his head Deputy Collector—some one of his officers—who are usually Brahmans.

8542. You think the Collector is influenced by his subordinates?—I think he is.

8543. Is it the fact in this province that Brahmans are generally intellectually superior to the other castes?—I think so.

8544. And if other castes had the right of returning a member, would they sometimes prefer a Brahman to a member of their own community as their spokesman?—No, I do not think so; I think that their caste is stronger than their intellect.

8545. You said you are in favour of the creation of panchayats in rural villages?—Yes.

8546. Consisting of a few nominated men?—I mean a "panchayat"—a body of five.

8547. What kind of duties would you entrust to them?—The supply of irrigation water, minor criminal cases, petty civil disputes.

8548. Would they be of any use in representing village grievances about forest matters?—Yes.

8549. And generally in small village concerns?—Yes.

8550. Do you think that a little supervision on the part of the officers would be useful?—Very useful indeed and necessary.

8551. But subject to that supervision you would allow these panchayats a free hand in their own work?—Yes.

8552. And you think that that system is likely to succeed, judging from your experience of Madras villages?—I think it is well worth a trial.

8553. (Sir Frederic Lely.) Has the tahsildar also become more out of touch with the people than he used to be?—I could not speak so strongly on that point.

8554. If a Pariah comes to present a petition is he allowed in the verandah or in the room?—No.

8555. Not even in the verandah?—No.

8556. You have 15,000 Christians in the Nellore district?—Since the division of the district I am not quite sure; we have 54,000 altogether in the Mission, but that covers several districts.

8557. Are any of them cultivators?—Most of them.

8558. Do you find from your knowledge of them and their concerns, that they have any difficulty in approaching Government if there is anything they want?—They have difficulty.

8559. In what way?—In getting to the Collector.

8560. But they do not attempt to get to the Collector in the first instance?—They do not as a rule: they used to in the old days; now they have to go to somebody else to intercede for them.

8561. That is to say the Missionary?—No—some lower official.

8562. What would a man do if he wanted to lay a statement before Government?—If he could get the ear of the tahsildar he would go to him; before that perhaps he would have to go to the munsiff, or some influential villager who would intercede with the tahsildar; the tahsildar if he approved would intercede with the Collector; the Deputy Collector would present the matter to the Collector.

8563. Are there any cases within your knowledge of persons who had a grievance (for instance, that they have not been able to get a takavi loan or something of that kind) and have not been able to get it attended to?—I cannot think of any instance.

8564. Do you consider that under any system of election men of social influence in the rural tracts would stand—would solicit votes from their neighbours and inferiors?—I think so.

8565. They would not consider that it lost them self-respect?—No.

8566. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) As to elections to the District Boards. Could not the objections which you have mentioned be met by the style of franchise that you introduced into the sub-division of the district for purposes of election?—Yes, it might.

8567. Do you think that any system of election by communities instead of by purely territorial limits would be successful?—I have not very much faith in the election principle at all; I do not think the people are in a condition to intelligently participate in the election of a member to any District Board.

8568. You think that it is an exotic and not an indigenous system?—I am afraid that is so. I am in favour of it; I wish to be distinctly understood that I am in favour of the elective system; I am in favour of local self-government, but I am sorry to say that the people apparently are not prepared for it. That is the position I hold in regard to that.

8569. Do you think they are more prepared for it than they were when you came to the country?—Yes, I do; I think there has been progress.

8570. May we look forward to a time when they will be fit for it?—Yes, most assuredly.

8571. It is a question of when?—Exactly.

8572. Do you think it is time to make a beginning?—I do most emphatically.

8573. What beginning would you make?—I think we might give them the power gradually of electing their panchayats, but I think it should be done under supervision.

8574. You would not begin with elections to the taluk Boards?—I am afraid they are not quite prepared for that; I wish they were.

8575. What scheme of election would you think suitable for a panchayat? Have you formed any ideas?—I think that the different communities ought to be represented on the panchayat, I would give the raiyat one place, I would give the Brahman another, and I think in most of our villages in the Nellore district there should be a Christian on the panchayat.

8576. (Mr. Meyer.) Assuming there to be this system of election by communities, I suppose if there was a large Pariah population, a non-Christian population I mean, they should have a representative?—I think so.

8577. Would the Brahman and the other castes allow them to sit in the panchayat?—I think they would.

8578. Or would they have to stand outside?—I do not think that attitude would be adopted in this case.

8579. You think that if a Panchama came there as a member of the panchayat he would be allowed to attend?—Yes, I do.

8580. You spoke of the large number of changes there have been of late years of Collectors; has it been the same with regard to Divisional Officers and Sub-Collectors and Head Assistants?—Yes, just the same.

8581. There has been no improvement so far as you know?—I do not think so.

8582. You mentioned the absence of District Board committees; has that always been so?—No; during one Collectorate—I think it was your own—there was a system of committees adopted, but since you were transferred from the district the thing collapsed; nothing has been done since then.

8583. It worked satisfactorily for a time?—It did, while you were there.

8584. Was there anything to prevent the Collectors who succeeded me continuing it?—I do not know if there was: the fact is that those rules which you established when you were there have become a dead letter.

8585. In those days my recollection is that we did meet in committees to discuss roads and budgets, and so on?—Yes, and that is what we should have now.

8586. When the budget is presented, is it not accompanied by a schedule of the roads to be made and repaired?—Yes.

8587. So that any member who is interested in a particular road can ask why it is not included in the schedule and so on?—Yes.

8588. You spoke of the "intercession" of the tahsildar with the Deputy Collector and so on; did you not mean rather the system of official reports?—I mean if a person wanted to get to the Collector he would have to get what I call the intercession—that is, to get the goodwill of somebody who has the Collector's ear.

8589. But the district is 8,000 or 9,000 square miles?—Yes.

8590. The Collector could not possibly do everything in a district of that size?—No.

8591. There must be a chain; is not the obvious principle for the man with a grievance to go to the tahsildar—or would you have him sent on to the district headquarters?—If he could not get redress with the tahsildar, I would have him go to the Collector.

8592. It still stands that there must be a chain from the tahsildar through to the Collector?—I suppose so, but in the old days a Pariah or a Christian or a Sudra or anybody could go to the Collector in person; the Collector knew the language; a man could go to him and tell him his grievance and he would say, "To-morrow at six o'clock in the morning I will be at your village and I will see to your affair."

8593. The Collector to-day might do it if he was on tour?—If he had long enough acquaintance with the district and knew the Telugu language he could and probably would, but the difficulty is that he has not got the language, he cannot speak with the people—I am speaking ordinarily—and he does not stay long enough in the district to get familiar with the people or their needs.

Khan Bahadur MUHAMMAD HABIBULLAH SAHIB was called and examined.

8594. (Chairman.) You have been a member of the taluk Board and the District Board of Vellore?—Yes. I have also been Vice-President of the taluk Board and an honorary Chairman and a paid Chairman of the Vellore municipal Council.

8595. Therefore we may take it that you are well acquainted with the working of local self-government?—I hope so. In 1891 I was appointed as a member of the Vellore taluk Board and elected by that body as a member of the District Board. In 1894 I was nominated as Vice-President of the former Board and continue as such up to date. In 1895 I was elected as a member of the Vellore municipality and as its Honorary Chairman, which office I vacated in 1898. In 1901 I was appointed as paid Secretary of the same municipality, and in 1905 as its paid Chairman. People are now generally taking greater interest in the working of these civic organisations than in the past, and there is an appreciable improvement in the morale of the members. The two most essential matters in which efficiency of administration should be insisted upon and which conduce to public convenience and safeguard public health, are roads and sanitation, and yet most of the municipal Councils find themselves financially handicapped to provide enough therefor. Local Boards receive substantial aid out of provincial funds every year for these and similar purposes, but in the case of municipalities, except the annual subsidy in aid of elementary education, such grants are not made unless a municipality launches itself into a big sanitary scheme such as water works or drainage. I would, therefore, plead on behalf of the municipalities that they may also be permitted to share in the annual grant which the Government of India makes to the Local Government for aiding Local Boards.

I fully recognise the need which exists at present for Government to exercise the necessary control over municipalities in financial and other matters, and do not suggest that it should be completely withdrawn, but a portion at least of such control may safely be relaxed and municipalities allowed more freedom in minor matters. Government has recently delegated to Collectors of districts some of the powers exercised until then by them; some others which relate to expenditure of an almost trivial nature may be delegated to municipal Councils.

The rule which obtains at present that all municipal budgets must be so framed as to leave a balance of 10 per cent. of the year's revenue deprives the Councils of a large portion of the receipts which might otherwise have been utilised for some objects of public utility during that year. This may fairly be reduced to 5 per cent. Municipalities might also be empowered to incur expenditure out of their balances on necessary sanitary reforms, provided such reforms have met with the approval of the District Medical and Sanitary Officer, without regard to the fact that a budget provision exists therefor or not, provided the working balance of the year is not reduced below a certain per cent. of the year's revenue. The lapsing of unspent allotments at the end of a year is not desirable. It leads to hasty and oftentimes imperfect execution of works or injudicious expenditure. Such allotments should be permitted to be carried over, as a matter of course, to the budget of the next year, without the necessity for a fresh sanction from the authority which sanctioned the original allotment, unless the need for such expenditure has since ceased. The present tendency to insist upon previous sanctions of Government even in the case of expenditure of small items may safely be relaxed.

Another matter in which the powers of the municipalities might be extended is the revision of the rules regarding the execution of sanitary works. At present all original works of a sanitary nature or repairs of sanitary works costing Rs. 500 and above have to be submitted to the Sanitary Engineer for professional sanction. It would lead to prompt execution and stimulate Councils to initiate such works if the minimum is raised to Rs. 1,000. In such cases it would, I think, suffice if the necessary professional scrutiny is exercised by the District Medical and Sanitary Officer and the Executive Engineer of the division. Both these officers generally happen to be members of municipalities.

Of all branches of administration with which municipalities deal, municipal elementary schools are the only ones in which they serve as mere paymasters without any direct control over the institutions. Excepting the periodical inspections of these schools by the Educational Officers of Government, their entire management and control should vest in the municipalities. It is competent for these officers to make suggestions from time to time for their improvement.

I consider that District Boards fulfil a useful purpose and constitute an inevitable link in the chain of local bodies. Their abolition would throw very large work and heavy responsibility on the shoulders of the Collector and add immensely to the supervisory and other work of Government. Their abolition would lead to absence of co-ordination in the working of the taluk Boards even in the same district. The appointment of sub-committees to be in charge of separate branches of administration, will tend to the exhibition of greater interest on the part of individual members.

I am of opinion that besides the re-nomination of old members, which Presidents of District Boards at present do, it will be well if power to appoint all members of the taluk Board is delegated to him.

Except in rare and exceptional cases and for good cause shown, taluk Board budgets should not be mutilated by District Boards. I would give power to the Presidents of taluk Boards to appoint members of union panchayats.

Taking into consideration the large area included under the jurisdiction of the taluk Boards and the varieties of interests which have to be represented thereon, the number of members fixed at present is infinitesimally small. I would also allow the union panchayats, at least the larger and more important ones, to elect a panchayatdar from among themselves to represent them on these Boards.

As regards village panchayats, I think they may be started in such villages where persons of sufficient intelligence and public spirit may be forthcoming and to them entrusted the duty of looking after sanitation, water supply, and rural schools to begin with.

Village Bench Courts may also be tried in some such villages as those indicated above, and power given to them to try cases of public nuisance, thefts of property not exceeding in value Rs. 5, and civil suits not exceeding in value Rs. 25. Village magistrates may be given concurrent jurisdiction and aggrieved parties allowed option to elect their own tribunal, until their fitness for the exercise of these powers is assured.

I do not consider it necessary to create either Advisory Councils or Administrative Councils as it would tend to a rapid duplication of institutions. The existing District and taluk Boards, with the modifications that I have suggested above, ought to be sufficient to enable the District and Divisional Officers to obtain the necessary advice on matters of general interest. What, in my opinion, is really needed, is not additional sources of consultation, but the rendering of the existing sources more potent and efficacious. Further, it seems to me that some of the functions of the proposed Advisory Councils might clash with those of the District or taluk Boards.

I would therefore venture to suggest that a Collector should not be moved from a district within three years, and a Divisional Officer within two years. Further it would tend to promotion of harmony and better feelings if Collectors would hold periodical darbars in important centres of the district or division as the case may be, at which the grievances of the people should be heard and answered on the spot. These proceedings should, as far as possible, be conducted in the vernacular. These darbars might also be utilized for ascertaining the trend of public opinion on any questions of general importance which might be proposed in any district or part of a district.

8596. If a grant-in-aid was made by the provincial Government to a municipality, that would carry with it, not smaller, but larger control by the Government over the finances of the municipality?—I do not think it would carry any greater control in matters of finance than I would be willing to agree to, eliminating a few minor details.

8597. If the Government gives you hereafter a grant for municipal expenditure which it does not now make, would it not be entitled, a priori, to have a greater control than it now possesses?—It would be so entitled.

8598. You desire that Government should loosen its control over municipal administration and expenditure?—In certain matters only.

8599. Therefore it might be a danger to you if you shared this provincial expenditure that Government would not relax its control?—We should be prepared to face that danger provided we could enhance our financial possibilities.

8600. You would not therefore accept the theory advanced by one of the witnesses, that in order to teach both District Boards and municipalities it would be advisable to make them absolutely responsible for their actions, while exercising over them hardly any control over their expenditure?—I cannot subscribe to that idea at all.

8601. Do you think that speaking generally the composition of the District Boards and municipalities is satisfactory at the present moment?—They are far better now than they were some years ago.

8602. What is the reason of that?—I think people are beginning to take greater interest in these institutions, and education is also advancing.

8603. You are getting gradually a better class of men on the District Boards?—Yes, even on the District Boards.

8604. Does that mean that the Collector has a larger field of selection?—He has also now better instruments by which he can get more accurate information than he did in the past. The tahsildars and Divisional Officers are now of the educated class, and it is through them that the Collector makes his selection. So that one may safely think that individuals recommended by the tahsildars and Divisional Officers for seats on the Local Board would be better than in the olden days when the officers themselves were not half so educated as they are at present.

8605. In your judgment therefore the local bodies are more fit for administration now than they were 10 or 20 years ago?—Decidedly.

8606. For what reason do you say that Government must retain some control over the proceedings of local bodies?—I think it will take a few years more before Government can safely relax all its control over all local bodies and municipalities. Even as it is, from my own knowledge I find that with this control and this introduction of the educated element there are here and there a few instances which point to the fact that local self-government is not yet advanced to that stage when it can be left to take care of itself, and that Government control and Government interference is absolutely necessary.

8607. In what language are the proceedings of the District Board conducted?—Mostly in English.

8608. Is that because the members know English or because the Collector, who is the Chairman, does not know the vernacular?—I should attribute it to both reasons—partly to this and partly to that.

8609. It would be a handicap to the presence on the Board of any member who was not acquainted with the language?—There is invariably an interpreter standing by the side of the President.

8610. Does he invariably interpret every remark?—No, only important matters are interpreted, not the general routine matters.

8611. You are not in favour of the disappearance of District Boards?—I am not.

8612. Have you ever known a municipality produce a scheme of sanitary reform on its own initiative?—My own municipality has done it on two occasions.

8613. Have you ever known a District Board to make such a proposal on its own initiative?—The District Board is very largely dependent on the Medical and Sanitary Officer in matters of sanitary reform.

8614. But have you ever known a District Board to make such a proposal on its own initiative?—I have not.

8615. Have you ever known a municipality desire to abolish the Officer of Health?—No.

8616. That has never come within your knowledge?—No; on the other hand municipalities in these days are paying particular attention to sanitation and would be very glad to welcome any suggestions from Sanitary Officers.

8617. You say that the District Boards ought to have less control over the taluk Boards, particularly in regard to their budgets?—Yes.

8618. Suppose that were so, who would look after the taluk Board budget?—The President and the Vice-President.

8619. Does the taluk Board raise a cess?—It does, it shares in the cess which the District Board raises, and it has also got its independent sources of revenue besides the District Board contribution.

8620. Do you think the District Boards and the taluk Boards are large enough?—I think the taluk Boards are not large enough. The District Boards are sufficiently large at present.

8621. Do you think that taking the District Boards and the taluk Boards together there is any need to add to the number of Boards by starting an Advisory Council?—I do not think an Advisory Council is advisable at all.

8622. Do you think there would be difficulty in getting satisfactory members?—Not only that, but what the Advisory Council is expected to do the District Boards and taluk Boards and municipalities in a district might very well be asked to do.

8623. What you would like to see is not the creation of a new Advisory Council, but the extension of powers to the existing Boards?—Yes, and utilising them more largely than they are utilised at present in gauging public opinion on any given subject.

8624. Do you think that speaking generally there is sufficient touch between the people in the district and the Collector and the Divisional Officers?—Not as much as one would desire.

8625. Is it easy to make it closer and more effective?—I think we could improve matters at any rate.

8626. In what sort of way and by what means?—I do not think the constant transfers of District Officers and Divisional Officers really gives them an opportunity of knowing those people whom they ought to know in the interests of administration. The moment an officer, be he a Divisional Officer or a Collector, comes to know his own range, he is moved out of the district, so that the experience which he has gained either in his division or in his district is lost entirely. Further, most of the officers are not sufficiently conversant with the vernacular. No doubt they know something of it, but an ordinary raiyat or a villager who hopes to lay his grievances before these officers is fully aware that he cannot talk to them directly, but will have to talk through the medium of an interpreter, and will have to depend on the good graces of the interpreter for rendering correctly and honestly what the raiyat may have to lay before his officer, so that many a raiyat I suppose prefers not to go at all to the officer under such circumstances.

8627. He very possibly thinks that he will have to buy the good-will of the interpreter?—Yes. So also in the case of the vernacular petitions laid before an officer; even there translations have to be made, and they have to be made by ordinary petty clerks whose salaries are so small that one could not be trusted to make an official true rendering of the grievance which might be contained in the particular petition. So that I think an improvement of the knowledge of the vernacular would be a very great advance in the matter of bringing the ruler and the ruled more closely together.

8628. The constant changing of officers not only has the effect of preventing the officer knowing the district; it also has the effect of getting the raiyat increasingly into the habit of not going near the District Officer?—Yes, it has that double effect.

8629. (Mr. Meyer.) Are you an official or a non-official?—I am a paid Chairman.

8630. Before you were Chairman, what were you?—I was a non-official; I am a member of the Bar, resident in Vellore.

8631. Has the history of the Vellore municipality been altogether satisfactory?—No, it had a dark spot on its career in 1899, when the Government had to interfere and disfranchise the municipality.

8632. For what?—For maladministration in certain matters.

8633. At that time what was the constitution of the municipality?—Three-fourths of the members were elected and one-fourth nominated.

8634. The members elected their own Chairman?—Yes.

8635. What is the state of things now?—The Council has lost the power of electing its own Chairman, and they have now a paid Chairman instead of an Honorary Chairman, as formerly.

8636. But how far are the members elected?—We now allow the Council to elect only seven out of the 20; 13 are nominated.

8637. Do you attribute the improvement in administration to that?—The improvement has been since 1899.

8638. You attribute the improvement to the fact that the elective system has been circumscribed?—Yes, and to the absence of a factious spirit.

8639. In that particular municipality there were factions, but would you allow the elective system in municipalities generally?—Not generally; I would only allow it in those municipalities where the elective system could be safely worked.

8640. There are now about 60 municipalities; can you say how many you would allow to elect their own Chairman and to elect their own members?—There are a few municipalities which have been also under such baneful influence and Government has consequently interfered.

8641. But does the fact that every now and then a municipality breaks down under the elective system make the elective system vicious, or would you go on nevertheless?—I would go on nevertheless, applying the necessary corrective here and there.

8642. You elect by wards at present?—We do.

8643. Would you think it better to have a system of election by castes and creeds, the Muhammadans electing Muhammadans, the Brahmans electing Brahmans, and so on?—That would be more representative and more desirable.

8644. You would get a better body in that way?—Yes.

8645. You desire larger powers for the members?—I do.

8646. But there must be some powers of control still to be exercised from outside?—I do not deny that.

8647. Might it be well to give those powers to the Collectors instead of the matter having to go up constantly to Government?—Of late the Collectors have certain powers delegated to them by Government, but what I asked for was that in regard to administrative matters executive powers might be delegated to the Municipal Councils.

8648. Take the budget; you think the Municipal Councils' budgets must be approved by some outside authority?—It has to be approved by Government.

8649. Would you allow the Collector to approve the budget?—No, I would not.

8650. (Sir Frederic Lely.) Your knowledge of the people, I suppose, is very great, because you have lived in the district all your life?—About 20 years.

8651. And you know the people thoroughly?—I do.

8652. Would you say that this isolation of the Collector of which you are speaking, and of English officers generally, leads to any distinctly bad results?—No; excepting that it alienates the rulers and the ruled, there is nothing very vicious about it.

8653. For instance, do you think it results in the creation of false rumours and a misunderstanding of what the English officer really is?—It certainly leads to misunderstanding of certain policies.

8654. But as to persons; do they think the Collector a very terrible person?—Well, I do not suppose that is generally the case, but as regards policies there are little misunderstandings.

8655. (Mr. Dutt.) In order to utilise the existing District Board as an Advisory Board, would it be necessary in your opinion to slightly alter the present Act so as to invest District Boards with fresh duties?—I do not think it is necessary.

8656. In questions in which the Collector is likely to ask advice from the Advisory Board, has the Collector power, or has the District Board Chairman power, under the existing Act, to convene a meeting to obtain advice on these questions?—In the Act there is no specific provision, but I do not think that that would in any way prohibit the Collector, as Collector, from taking the advice of the District Board members.

8658. The object of this Act is to enable the Board to perform certain specific duties?—Yes.

8659. If certain other duties were imposed on that body, would it not be in accordance with the usual practice to add mention of those duties in the Act itself?—I see no objection to that.

8661. Is the Vellore municipality one of those?—Yes, it has a revenue of Rs. 90,000.

8662. Under the law the Secretary has certain duties, and is invested with suitable powers for the performance of those duties?—Yes.

8663. Practically the budget is prepared by the Chairman and the Secretary?—Yes.

8664. And the Collector can also have any work executed in the municipality?—Yes, out of the municipal fund.

8665. You say you would like to continue the system of election and trying to give power to elective bodies?—Yes.

8666. Would you in selected municipalities give them the power to select their own Chairman when the conditions are suitable?—I have not the slightest objection.

8667. And in these cases you would keep in the hands of the Collector the powers now vested in him by law?—Yes.

(The witness withdrew.)

Adjourned.

TENTH DAY.

MADRAS, Tuesday, the 3rd December, 1907.

PRESENT :

C. E. H. HOBHOUSE, Esq., M.P., Under Secretary of State for India, Chairman.

Sir FREDERIC LELY, K.C.I.E., C.S.I.

Sir STEYNING EDGERLEY, K.C.V.O., C.I.E., I.C.S.

R. C. DUTT, Esq., C.I.E.

W. S. MEYER, Esq., C.I.E., I.C.S.

W. L. HICHENS, Esq.

The Hon. Mr. G. S. FORBES, C.S.I., was called and examined.

8668. (Chairman.) You are a Member of the Governor's Council in Madras, are you not?—Yes.

8669. What portfolios fall to you?—At the present moment, Public, Judicial, Education, and Local and Municipal.

8671. Then you tell us that you think that “means should be found to enable the provincial Government to obtain money”; would you kindly amplify that slightly?—What is meant is means to obtain money by way of loan. The question is how loans should be raised by the Local Government. The whole revenues of India are vested in the Secretary of State, and for any loan raised by a provincial Government the security would be the revenues of India. I suppose the provincial Government could not raise these loans without the sanction either of the Government of India or the Secretary of State. At the same time, it is a question whether a provincial Government should not, in some sort of way, have greater freedom in raising a loan; for instance, the onus might be on the Government of India to show why they cannot allow us to have a loan, instead of the onus being on the provincial Government to justify the application. If we said we wanted so much money for famine expenditure, they would wish to go into the whole thing and ask us why we wanted the money. On the other hand, if we are satisfied that the money ought to be raised, and if the Government of India cannot see any reasons which would affect their loan powers or the security, we do not see why we should not get the loan without any more ado.

8673. What limits do you propose to put to the power of allotment that you refer to?—I do not know that that has been worked out; it would depend on whether we have a large provincial balance; of course, if we have not any provincial balance the maximum will not affect it.

8674. Your balances fluctuate from year to year, and any serious depletion of your balance in one year might lead to your having a deficit in a subsequent year?—The provincial Government would understand that.

8675. But Governments in all countries are from time to time extravagant; to provide against that, ought there not to be some limit put to the spending of the balance?—At present there is a limit put; at least the balance must be kept up to a certain amount. The difficulty arises in respect of cases of widespread calamity, when the provincial Government would have to consider the whole of the circumstances of the situation.

8676. The Government of India come to your aid in the case of widespread calamities?—They do not, unless our funds are depleted as far as they can be.

8677. But still, if you have already depleted your balance in one year, and you then apply to the Government of India to meet demands, which otherwise you would have met out of your own balance, you might very seriously disturb the balances of the Government of India?—Yes.

8678. And therefore it would be necessary to put some limit to the spending of your balance? You agree that there should be some restriction?—Yes.

8679. Are you generally in favour of the policy which has created the appointments of Inspectors-General and all that they connote?—That policy is more for the Government of India. As I understand, these Directors-General and Inspectors-General are wanted as advisers to the Government of India rather than as Directors-General and Inspectors-General with authority over the different provinces; I think it has been a mistake to call them Directors-General. The Director-General of Education does not “direct,” in the true sense of the term, education in the different provinces; he is an adviser to the Government of India about education, so as to co-ordinate and collect information for them. If the term “Director-General” were avoided I think there would probably be less objection. It is the fear that they may, behind the backs of the provincial Government, interfere with the local officers of that Government.

8681. You put a case in which the Director-General did interfere, and a copy of that case was handed in by Mr. Bradley?—It has been more the fear that they will get behind the backs of the provincial Government than, I think, any case which has actually occurred.

8682. One witness certainly told us that the correspondence direct between him and the Director-General of the Indian Medical Service had saved

*The Hon. Mr.
G. S. Forbes.*

*The Hon. Mr.

a great deal of time?—The Director-General of the Medical Department is in a different position from that of the Directors-General of these other Departments, because the Indian Medical Service, being a military department, must have a Director-General; that cannot be avoided, and there must be a considerable amount of correspondence about matters which, although affecting the medical officers as civil officers, indirectly affect them in their military position.

8683. Therefore, any view that you may hold with regard to the position of other Inspectors-General is modified in the case of the Director-General of the Indian Medical Service?—Yes.

8684. In paragraph 25 you tell us that the Government propose to appoint a small committee to consider further delegations; without in any way impugning the activity of the Madras Government, may we take it that this committee is rather the outcome of this Commission now sitting?—Every year there has been some delegation; the last two years we have delegated to the Director of Public Instruction and to the local and municipal bodies large powers, and also to the Board of Revenue and Collectors. I think the policy might be more actively pursued at different times, but that policy has always been kept in view here, and certainly more or less since the delegations of 1897, when Mr. Meyer was put on special duty and made proposals.

8685. You would suggest therefore that the appointment of this committee which you refer to is not especially connected with the enquiry of the Royal Commission?—Perhaps so far as it is a committee.

8686. Then with regard to paragraph 26, when they were making this recommendation about the Public Works Department, was the Public Works Department of the Government of Madras in any way consulted?—I am not aware whether the Chief Engineer was consulted by the Member in charge of Public Works.

8687. Two of the Members of the Council are Civilians, without technical engineering knowledge?—Yes.

8688. You tell us here that transfers are less frequent; such evidence as we have taken leads us to doubt whether they are so much less frequent than they were?—I do not know whether that impression was given by those who really knew or not, but as a matter of fact, since the officers below the Collectors were graded in one list, the effect has been to diminish the number of transfers very largely. In former days there were two grades of Divisional Officers called Sub-Collectors and Head Assistant Collectors; if the Sub-Collector went on leave the next senior Assistant Collector was moved into the Sub-Collector's place. Now under the new system this need not occur, and a Head Assistant may receive the higher pay without changing his division. Another statement I noticed, which I think was rather inaccurate, was that when a Collector went on short leave or privilege leave another officer of similar standing was put in his place. That is not so; ordinarily the Head Assistant Collector or Sub-Collector in the district is put in charge. Sometimes, of course, that officer may be so very junior that even for two or three months it might be unsafe to leave him in charge, or there may be other reasons, but ordinarily that is the rule.

8689. Does the rule which forbids the provincial Government to appoint an officer to a position carrying an increase of more than one-fifth of his salary interfere in any way with your appointment of Assistants to these places?—No.

8690. You have not told us whether you have worked out any scheme yet which would still further reduce the number of transfers?—Transfers of officers in this country really cannot be avoided, because men get ill and go home on leave. It is the system of leave that practically causes all the transfers—at least the bulk of the transfers.

8691. Have you worked out any scheme by which it could still further be reduced?—I do not think it is possible.

8692. You think that the necessity of change, following upon the present leave rules and the provision for sick absence, causes too frequent removals?—Yes, and I do not think that they can be diminished in any way; it must go on as long as men are entitled to leave.

8693. I think you will agree that it is most undesirable to transfer officers from district to district?—Certainly, but, as long as men get ill and are allowed to go on leave, there must be transfers, and now that all the Indian Civil Service officers below the Collector have been graded so as to avoid transfers between divisions, I do not think that there is any method by which transfers can be further reduced.

8694. What is the longest time a Civilian is, in practice, away from his charge on leave?—That depends upon what leave he takes; the leave rules allow him so much leave.

8695. What is the longest period of leave that a Civilian, in practice, takes?—One year is a very common time; two years is the longest.

8696. In practice?—A man goes for any time from one year to two years.

8697. According to the latest rules, what in practice would the absence amount to, would it be 12 months or 18 months, or what?—I should say 18 months would be a fair average absence.

8698. When you bring your officers back from leave do you pay any attention, in deciding where they are to go, to the language which they are most accustomed to speak?—We do so, so far as we can, without making unnecessary disturbance. Suppose an officer comes back who knows Tamil better than Telugu, it would not be desirable perhaps to disturb the officers in a Tamil district, and if there is no other place for him he might have to go to a Telugu district.

8699. At all events, you do take it very much into account?—We certainly do take into account what his language qualification is, so far as we can.

8700. Do you find that officers are less able to speak the vernacular than they used to be?—I have heard it stated, but I doubt very much whether it is correct. In the last few years the Government have insisted upon the tests in languages being more practical.

8701. And more severe?—More severe from the practical point of view. My own personal opinion is that the result of the alteration of the system of recruitment under which a man remained two years at home on probation instead of one year as now, during which time he was taught the languages thoroughly from a theoretical point of view, has been that an officer does not master the language nearly so well as used to be the case; not perhaps that that has very much effect on his ordinary colloquial talks with the natives, but it certainly does, I think, affect his thorough grasp of the language and of the proper use and connotation of words.

8702. With regard to the posting of Divisional Officers, who is that done by?—Civilian Officers are posted by the Government.

8703. Do you think it would be possible that they should be posted by the Collectors?—I mean distributed by the Collectors?—I do not see very much objection to that.

8704. You see no objection?—Speaking without consideration, I see no very serious objection, provided the posting is to a division where suitable accommodation has been provided.

8705. On the whole you think it would be a good thing to do?—Yes, just the same as the posting of native Divisional Officers.

8706. Can the Collector post his subordinates?—He cannot post them to a division which is occupied by a Civilian, but I think he can post them to other divisions which are not occupied by Civilian Officers.

8707. With regard to the grading of tahsildars, have you anything to say to us?—This Government object to putting them on a provincial list—that is, a list for the whole province—on the ground that that would be centralizing instead of decentralizing. If you put the tahsildars on a provincial list for the whole Presidency, then their appointment and movement would fall on the Board of Revenue. What I favour is that the tahsildars should be graded personally in their own district; so that they may be kept ordinarily to their own district, and then the Collector can move them about, and they will get their grade pay independently of what particular taluk they are in charge of.

8708. Could the Collector do that now?—At present their pay is localised, and though a man may continue to do duty in that taluk even with the higher pay to which he would be entitled if he was moved, this cannot be done without the special sanction of the Board of Revenue. Of course that is a very cumbrous method, and a Collector naturally does not care to write up about things more than he can help. If the tahsildars were graded personally within the district that would be a great improvement.

8709. But the Collector now can move the tahsildar if he wants to do so without reference to higher authority?—The pay being localised, if a tahsildar rises by seniority to such a position that he is entitled to a higher grade pay, he must be posted to a taluk to which that pay is attached.

8710. By the Collector?—Yes, the Collector can do it, but if he wants to keep him in the taluk in which he is serving on a higher pay than is attached to that taluk, then he has to go to the Board of Revenue for special sanction.

8711. Then you say that in a certain number of cases of delegation an amendment of the law would be required; you mean amendment of the Indian law?—Yes.

8712. So that any movement by the Madras Government would be impossible?—Only by amending our own law. We have the Regulation or Act VII. of 1828, in which there is the fullest power to delegate. Every Divisional Officer in this Presidency has exactly the same powers as the Divisional Collector ex-officio, and every other Assistant Collector or Deputy Collector may be vested with those powers, if he is not in full charge of a division, subject to the control of the Collector. The Collector has the fullest power of delegation under the Regulation, and in all our Acts the word "Collector" does not mean District Collector necessarily; if it stands alone it may mean any Divisional Officer; every Divisional Officer has exactly the same power as the Collector in his own division under the Regulation of 1828.

8713. Then as to paragraph 31; would you tell us whether these references about alienations cause considerable delay?—I do not know that they cause any particular delay.

8714. It is only the necessity of reference that you object to?—That is all; I do not know that it is very important, but still a reference is required to the Government of India if a piece of waste land over a certain value is alienated.

8715. Have you considered what the pecuniary effect of this might be if you alienated land in growing cities; you might desire to help some particular industry and to give them a piece of what is now waste land, but which 20 years hence would turn out to be a very valuable gift?—If it were a gift of land which was not actually in a town it would be subject to assessment, and that assessment is revised every 30 years. If it is town land, it would be liable to town duty, and that is revisable in the same way.

8716. Then in paragraph 32 you say you consider that all restrictions on the powers of Local Governments in the matter of the alienation of land revenues should be removed; would that mean the removal of a great number of references?—There are a good many references to the Government of India under that, but the conditions under which grants are made are very strict and specific, and there is the right of resumption if the conditions are not fulfilled; really there is very little necessity for any further reference.

8717. Under your system of the Board of Revenue each member has to tour over the whole Presidency?—He may do so, but I imagine the Board of Revenue more or less divide the Presidency amongst themselves every year.

8718. But each member, having a great number of duties to perform, instead of touring in one particular territorial area, in order to get through the work, now has to tour over the whole Presidency?—Yes, his jurisdiction is over the whole Presidency.

8719. And therefore, he has to visit the whole Presidency?—Yes, at some time or other; of course, he may be particularly concerned with some districts more than others.

8720. You say that if the Board of Revenue were replaced by Divisional Commissioners, six Commissioners would be required. Upon what principle are you fixing the number six?—That is only a rough estimate; perhaps more would be required. Taking the standard of Bombay, which is roughly half the area and half the population, we should require six here, because they require three in Bombay. In Bengal they have not got the same revenue duties, but I imagine that the standard there would make it probably at least six; taking the standard of Bombay, exclusive of Sind, we might require more than six.

8721. Or less?—I do not think we could possibly do with less, having regard to the extent of the jurisdiction.

8722. You say that every district of the Presidency is visited by at least one member of the Board at least once in a year?—That I take it is their standard.

8723. That would mean, there being four members of the Board, that each district had one-fourth of its requirements attended to every year?—By the Board as a Board, but then the Board are not Commissioners.

8724. But the requirements of each district of the province will be about equal in the different spheres of influence which the Board exercise?—That might be so. Then the Board of Revenue are confined entirely to revenue duties; they do not exercise the duties of a Commissioner, for instance, in connection with other departments of the administration, neither local and municipal, nor judicial, nor public.

8725. But with regard to those functions which the Board of Revenue exercise, only one-fourth of the requirements of each district can be attended to in any one year?—I understand what you mean; I do not know that you can go by any arithmetical proportion. When the member concerned with agriculture visits a district, his primary duties have reference to agriculture alone. There are only two Land Revenue Members.

8726. As I understand, the practice now obtains in the Board of Revenue, when they go into the district, of not doing the whole work of the Board of Revenue, but doing the work which is allotted to the member under the portfolio system?—The Government issued instructions some years ago that when a member of the Board of Revenue visited a district, though his primary duty was with reference to his own department, he should inquire into any general matters which might come up before the other members of the Board, and I think there is a system of making a note which is given to any member who is going down to a district of anything that has arisen in any other department of a special character, so that he may go into it.

8727. Have you made inquiries at all as to this?—No, but I understand that to be the practice.

8728. You think at all events that under the present arrangements the land revenue system works very smoothly?—Yes.

8729. Then you say that the Government are prepared to authorise Local Boards to incur expenditure from their balances, but you are not prepared at present to authorise them to spend the money within their budgets without the control of Government?—Within their budget as passed by Government.

8730. I understand that you would relax the control of Government upon the balances but not upon the budget?—What is meant is that Local Boards might be enabled to take money out of their balances for a sanctioned scheme.

8731. Only for a sanctioned scheme?—Yes, not for an unsanctioned scheme.

8732. What proportion to income must be the limit of the balance?—It is 10 per cent. In some cases we have reduced it to 8, and in some cases we have reduced it still lower; there is a minimum balance that they are bound to keep, but they often have balances much in excess of that.

8733. Would you reduce the balance which they are bound to keep?—No, I would not reduce their working balance.

8734. But if they have a large balance you would be prepared to say, "Well, the scheme is a good one and we will give you sanction"?—Yes. The scheme probably has been sanctioned, and they want a reappropriation. They might do that themselves.

8735. Would that be much of an increase of power?—They ordinarily settle their own schemes themselves; they are sanctioned by Government, and the sanctions are mostly formal; the Government do not go into the details of the ordinary schemes that come up, affecting the construction of roads, sanitary improvements, hospitals, and so on, unless the cost exceeds an amount which requires sanction under the rules.

8736. You think that the present powers enjoyed by district municipalities are sufficient?—As a matter of fact we delegate from time to time extra powers; for instance only last year we delegated considerable powers to municipalities.

8737. To the municipalities or the Chairman?—To the Chairman I think. I do not know any case in which it has been given to the municipality itself. The Chairman is the executive head.

8738. Can you develop a sense of responsibility unless you allow people to run the chance of making serious mistakes, and even, if you like, abusing their powers?—Is that, may I ask, as to establishments or generally?

8739. Generally?—The passing of the budget by Government, that is the sanctioning of the expenditure of a municipality, will I think always be necessary, because all these municipalities are more or less in debt; I think their aggregate debt is probably 30 or 35 lakhs now.

8740. Has the Government guaranteed that debt?—Most of these loans have been given by Government; a few have been raised privately, but those who lend money to a municipality lend it (and they will, I hope, lend more freely in the future) because they know that the financial control is in the hands of Government; the municipalities would not get any loan at all, I think, if the budget did not go to Government and was passed by them; not that the Government interfere in details, but they see that the financial position is fairly maintained.

8741. Would those persons whose money is necessary for the development of municipal schemes lend that money unless the Government maintained its present control?—Certainly not.

8742. And therefore you think it would be unwise to grant further powers to municipalities?—I think it would be unwise to relax financial control; otherwise, the Government interfere very little with the schemes of the municipalities. In large schemes where they come for a loan, such as a large water supply scheme, the municipal finances are more thoroughly overhauled, and the municipality has got to show how it is going to liquidate the loan.

8743. You say, "Owing to the great likelihood of abuse of the power of appointment, the Government consider it desirable to retain this control in their hands." What do you mean by "in their hands"; is it in the hands of the Board of Revenue or of the Collector or of the Government?—That is in the hands of Government whether exercised by the Collector or not.

8744. It might make a difference?—No, I think not from the point of view of the municipality. The power of appointment is with the municipality; all that the Government does is to sanction the pay of the post.

8745. Could that be done by a Collector or an officer subordinate to him?—Certainly, there would be no objection to that.

8746. (Sir Frederic Lely.) Has not the tendency of recent years been to discourage collective action by the Board of Revenue?—I do not think there has been any special discussion as to the merits of collective action; that is a matter entirely for the Board themselves.

8747. You say that the result of the reorganisation of the Board of Revenue effected in 1884 was "to convert the Board into a body composed of four Heads of Departments, capable indeed of collective action, but ordinarily acting singly, each having charge of branches of work with which the other members have no concern"?—That was the object of the Statute of 1884.

8748. Would you be prepared rather to go back upon that? Do you not think that that joint action tends to counteract what has been complained of in other parts of India, namely, departmentalism—that each department goes off on its own lines?—In principle, the Government in cases of that sort would be the controlling force, but the Board have the power in all large matters to consult together and come to a decision.

8749. The tendency in these later days is not to consult together except on some very special occasion. What would you say to a system under which the scope of the Board was widened so as to include the other branches of the administration which are not at present included, and combine with that more mobility—by insisting that members of the Board should spend a considerable portion of each year visiting the districts, each member being expected, when visiting a district, to take a general interest in matters not within his own department?—The Board as at present constituted could not possibly do it.

8750. Could you not, if necessary, add another member?—I do not think another member would overtake those duties; as it is, they complain that they have more work than they can do.

8751. You think that even with the addition of another member the Board would not be strong enough?—I do not think so.

8752. Even supposing that Government delegated a great deal more powers to local bodies than they now possess, that would relieve the Local and Municipal Department of a certain amount of work; even so you think the Board would be overloaded?—I think so, as long as they are a collective body sitting at headquarters in Madras.

8753. But you admit that there would be a considerable gain by the joint action of a body which would also on its other side be in considerable touch with the people?—As a theoretical proposition, yes.

8754. But you do not think it would work?—I do not think it would be practical.

8755. As to your paragraph 41, do you not think that as compared with what you ask the Government of India, the concessions that you propose to the local bodies are, shall we say, a little bit grudging, or perhaps I should say meagre?—In what respect?

8756. You do not propose to give the municipalities very much power?—They have large powers now.

8757. I am speaking now particularly of power over their budgets?—They frame their own budget, and it is very rarely that the Government interfere.

8758. But the Government retains the full power of doing so?—Yes, but unless the thing is outside the provisions of the law or anything of that sort, then if they have the money the Government do not interfere; the main thing for the Government is to see that their budget is covered.

8759. They retain the final responsibility for the budget?—They retain it, but in practice they do not interfere.

8760. What would you say to a compromise by which the Government should concede to the municipalities full power over their budgets, but should recognise in a more formal way than they do at present the position of the Collector as their official adviser? For instance, suppose they proposed to incur some wasteful expenditure on establishment, they would require the Collector to issue to them a formal and official protest recording his opinion and requiring them to reconsider it; I am speaking now of the better class of municipalities?—I am afraid the Collector could not possibly do the work; local and municipal administration is very specialised.

8761. Would that be your only objection to it—that the Collector would not find time; do you not think the experiment would be worth trying in the better municipalities?—From that point of view I do not know that they would think there was any difference between the Collector and the Government.

8762. I am not speaking of giving the Collector any absolute power—only the power of giving formal and official advice and requiring the municipality to re-consider their decision?—That is what is done now; the Government do not carry out proposals which they make to a municipal Council unless there is a resolution of the Council approving the proposal when it is sent back.

8763. You think an arrangement of that sort would not materially differ from the present arrangement?—I think not, and besides that you would not have the advice of a specialised department trained in this particular branch of administration.

8764. (Mr. Dutt.) Under the law a Secretary has to be appointed to each municipality and approved by the Government, and the law vests the Secretary with all power to act in consultation with the Chairman. Do you think it would develop a greater sense of responsibility in the members if the duties were distributed to small sub-committees of the municipality instead of being all vested in the Secretary?—I think so; I do not regard the system of the Secretary as a very desirable one.

8765. With regard to the other proposal, have you any objection to form small sub-committees, and entrust them with different departments of the municipal work, and let members do their own work themselves?—I do not know that they cannot do that at present.

8766. They can do it only with regard to a few things according to the law. Under section 38 they can only look after the schools and hospitals and choultries, and nothing else. Have you any objection to extend that section to other matters?—I do not think there would be any objection to that.

8767. Then about the District Boards. Under the present law there can be sub-committees only to look after those institutions, not to prepare the budget or to look after public works, or anything else. Would there be any objection to extend that section so as to devolve those duties on sub-committees formed of District Board members—of course, under the supervision of the Chairman?—No, I think there would be no objection.

8768. You think that that would be an improvement in the right direction?—Yes, I do not think there could be any harm in that; the only thing is, they have had this power for years, it has been before them, and they have never used it. That might show that it is not in accordance with their own ideas. Both the Municipal and District Board Acts authorise these local authorities not only to form sub-committees, but to join with them the respectable inhabitants of the area and form a kind of consultative body in regard to these matters. I do not know any districts in which there are such bodies even with regard to education, but there would be no objection to extending the power.

8769. From the evidence we have had before us we have learnt that such sub-committees are not formed, but sometimes the duties are entrusted to single members. You would have no objection to trying the experiment of forming such sub-committees and seeing how they work?—Not at all.

8770. (Mr. Hichens.) Am I to understand from what is said in this memorandum that what the Madras Government intend to convey is that they recognise the evil of transfers, but are not prepared to make any specific recommendations to the Commission?—They recognise that transfers, as a matter of fact, like other incidents of life, are evils, but they do not know of any remedy.

8771. Has any specific enquiry been made into the question of transfers by a committee or otherwise of recent years?—The question has been under consideration at different times for years and years.

8772. But there has been no committee considering it?—There has been no committee. As to the grading of officers below a Collector, one of the main objects was to lessen transfers.

8773. But there has been no specific enquiry?—There has been no committee appointed; the question has been constantly thought of.

8774. With regard to the Board of Revenue, do you think it is more desirable to have a second deliberative body in the case of revenue matters, than in the case of local and municipal matters? As I understand, the Board of Revenue is a deliberative body with regard to certain matters; would you think it more important to have a deliberative body in regard to those than to have one in regard to local and municipal matters?—In the one case it affects the imperial revenues; in the other case these affairs are supposed to be entrusted to the people themselves.

8775. I understand your answer is that you do think it is more important in the case of revenue matters?—I do not know that the question could be answered in that way; of course, the more deliberation you have about anything the better; but the question is whether there can be any practical scheme for carrying it out.

8776. Would you say, for example, that it is desirable to have a second deliberative body in regard to revenue matters, but that it is not nearly so important to have a deliberative body in regard to the other departments of Government?—I do not think I could answer that question either yes or no. As to the local and municipal matters, no doubt, the more deliberation the better; such a body would give orders with more authority and probably better work would be done.

8777. There is no special reason, that you know of, why there should be a deliberative body in regard to revenue matters any more than with regard to other matters?—I am prepared to say yes to that.

8778. Then you say: "The Government are strongly of opinion that to hand over the control of these matters to a specialist, brought up in the traditions of an expert department, would be fraught with the gravest danger to the well-being and content of the Presidency." Suppose you had the Forest Officers and others in the province subject to the authority of the Collector in executive matters, but, where they differed from one another, the matter had to be referred, not to the specialist Head of a Department, but to the Government; would your objection to a specialist, as Head of his Department, cease?—That is the present position.

8779. But you have some one over him?—The Board of Revenue and the Collector are over the specialists; the Conservator of Forests is under the Board of Revenue.

8780. But you would not leave him with the powers he has now, or, perhaps, a little amplified

The Hon. Mr.

The Hon. Mr.
G. S. Forbes,

in regard to technical and special matters, and make any reference as to policy direct to the Government?—You mean to the Government as opposed to the Board of Revenue?

8781. Yes?—I do not think it matters very much whether it goes to the Board of Revenue or to the Government, so long as it does not go to a department. The Collector is head of the Forest Department in his own district. His Forest Officer is his scientific adviser, who is also responsible for all the technical forestry; but whether the appeal went to the Board of Revenue or to the Government is, more or less, a matter of which has most time for it.

8782. (Mr. Meyer.) You were for some time Under-Secretary to the Government in the Home Department about 20 years ago?—Yes.

8783. In that capacity you saw a great deal of the work from the different provinces. Comparing that time with the present, should you say that there had been an increase in centralization, or a decrease?—Of course I can only speak so far as regards the effects with reference to this Presidency. Except, perhaps, within very recent years, I think there has been no increase in centralization, so far as I know, unless it be in the appointment of these Inspectors-General and Directors-General, and the effect of those is, perhaps, more in anticipated, than actual, interference.

8784. It is very often stated in the papers that the Government of India is constantly encroaching on the functions of provincial Governments and grabbing power from them; do you consider there is any foundation for that statement?—I do not think so, so far as regards the Madras Presidency.

8785. On the contrary have powers been delegated from time to time?—Yes.

8786. Then, so far as things have gone, there has been some devolution, though, of course, it is a matter of opinion whether it is sufficient or not, but as compared with 20 years ago, there have been larger powers granted to the provincial Governments—to the Madras Government, at any rate?—I do not think there has been much interference with this Presidency; the interference of the Home Department with the Governments under the Lieutenant-Governors is of quite a different character and degree.

8787. You have spoken of the Imperial Inspectors-General as being primarily of use as the advising officers to the Government of India. Might not the provincial Governments make use of them as advisers to themselves?—Certainly, and with the Directors-General I have had most instructive conversations; I do not think there is any objection on that score.

8788. But, as a matter of expediency, might not the provincial Government derive a great deal of benefit by asking the Inspectors-General as to what was being done in other provinces and so on?—No doubt they might.

8789. In your experience have reforms been initiated by the Government of India to a considerable extent—general reforms in administration?—Yes, undoubtedly.

8790. More so than by the provincial Government?—No, I should not say that.

8791. Both have done the work?—The provincial Government are more or less every day doing something in the way of reform—or trying to.

8792. You mentioned that it was a general rule in the case of privilege leave vacancies (which may last up to three months) whenever a Collector takes leave, to appoint the successor on the spot as far as possible; does that apply in the case of a longer vacancy—a six months' vacancy, for instance?—No, it is not generally adopted in that case, because when a man goes on long leave, some senior man generally thinks that he ought to be put in to act.

8793. You think it goes by seniority?—Yes.

8794. Might that not be relaxed in the case of acting officers?—There is no doubt it could be done; of course, there would be an outcry from those who were deprived of pay.

8795. But I mean in the interests of the State?—Yes, I should not mind its being done.

8796. You spoke of objection to transfers by the personal grading of Divisional Officers. Can you tell me to whom that measure was due; did the Government of India order it, or did the Madras Government order it?—I think the Government of India ordered it.

8797. The Madras Government having previously declined it?—Yes; a former Government.

8798. The question has been raised as to whether there should not be some greater selection in regard to Collectors; do you think there should, or are the Collectors all satisfactory at present?—The Government, of course, try to select as Collectors the best men they can; no doubt there are some who are unsatisfactory; there must always be some who are unsatisfactory, because the whole body of Collectors is about 30. One reason why they are trusted with powers is the control and supervision under which they work; you cannot trust every Collector, but as there is the Board of Revenue and Government above them, you can give them large powers.

8799. Would you be in favour of the more rigid rejection of men who are unfit to be Collectors when the time arrived at which they were to be selected?—Yes, I think I would.

8800. And of getting rid of them on proportionate pensions?—Yes I have suggested that more than once. The Government of India only grants them proportionate pensions on the ground of ill-health.

8801. As to restrictions on land alienation. You said that if a piece of land was given in a growing town it would still pay taxes, whether municipal or Government taxes; but might not the land possibly be required for Government offices?—Then it would be taken up under the Land Acquisition Act.

8802. And the Government would have to pay heavily for what they had previously given as a free gift?—The question, I understand, is whether the Government of India, or the Local Government, would better anticipate any matter of that sort.

8804. But the Collector may sometimes be precluded departmentally from doing what he might do legally?—Yes, but still there is no legal disability requiring to be removed by legislation.

8805. Do you consider that there might be any reduction in the number of cases assigned to the full Board by the rules of business, or to the two Land Revenue Members?—I am not sufficiently acquainted with the Board's work to say.

8806. May I follow up a question that was asked as to these land revenue matters that are dealt with by the Board of Revenue; do they not affect the whole province?—Yes.

8807. Whereas questions relating to a Local Board or a municipality would affect only that particular area usually?—Yes.

8808. I gather that you consider that under the present system of administration in Madras the Collector has practically become, in many matters, a Commissioner?—He is practically so, on account of the size of his district; the Divisional Officers practically exercise all the powers of a Collector.

8809. Would you be in favour of recognising that position still further by giving him some of the powers that the Board of Revenue possess, and by letting him in turn devolve larger powers on his Divisional Officers—speaking generally, of course?—Speaking generally, no doubt, one would say yes; but in the first place the question crops up, whether the Collector can do very much more than he is doing, if you devolve very much more power upon him; and, in the second place, as I said before, you must have regard to the fact that all Collectors are not men you can trust in the same degree. Under no system could you get 30 men of an equal trustworthiness.

8810. There must be some general power of control, but you do not think that with regard to details their power of control could be expediently relaxed?—I do not think so, with that number of Collectors.

8811. May I put it that your committee is going to consider what general control is necessary, and how far Collectors may get larger powers in points of detail?—Yes.

8812. As regards the local and municipal work, it has been suggested to us by some witnesses that there is a certain amount of interference by departments in the work of Boards and municipalities—that they have to spend so much on education at the dictation of the Director of Public Instruction, so much on sanitation at the dictation of the sanitary authorities; is that your view?—In that sphere, of course, the Government intervenes and regulates; the Sanitary Commissioner and Sanitary Engineer are very keen to have their schemes carried out; the education people want more schools; it is a question how the finances are to be distributed amongst these competing objects. But, of course, the municipality have the whip hand; if they say, "We are not going to sanction it," and they do not sanction it, the Sanitary Engineer cannot insist.

8813. But may not the Government insert Rs. 10,000 in the budget for some project that the Sanitary Commissioner has advocated—assuming that the municipality has a balance to pay for it?—I do not know any case in which the Government have done that. They send it down to the municipality and say, "This recommendation has been made, will you pass a resolution?" I do not think we ever put anything of that sort into the budget without having a previous resolution of the municipality.

8814. Two or three witnesses have told us that the Sanitary Board as at present constituted is unnecessary; is that your view?—The Sanitary Board was constituted primarily as a sort of Board of Appeal; when it was first constituted there were differences between the Sanitary Engineer and the Sanitary Commissioner; the Engineer said some improvement ought to be carried out in a particular way; the Commissioner said he did not agree; then as referees the Surgeon-General, who was a sort of superior to the Sanitary Commissioner, and the Chief Engineer, who was superior to the Sanitary Engineer, were formed into a Board, with a Civilian as a third party to represent district interests—a man who knew district work. The Local and Municipal Secretary on that Board does not represent the Local and Municipal Department; he represents the District Officer. It was a Collector who was appointed at first; there were difficulties in obtaining the services of a Collector, so the Secretary of the Local and Municipal Department was put on ex-officio as representing, not the Local and Municipal Department, so much as the District Officer. Of course, it was also convenient, because it saved him time when the cases came before the department afterwards.

8815. The system has been in vogue for 20 years?—Yes.

8816. Now that it is well established, is this check—this sort of Appellate Court as you have described it—necessary?—No, I think it is quite possible to re-model the Sanitary Board, and to raise the limit of the cost of the work for which the sanction of the Sanitary Board is required, and perhaps to make the Sanitary Board consist of the Sanitary Commissioner and the Sanitary Engineer. The difficulty would be when they differed in opinion.

8817. You spoke of the necessity of keeping a fairly tight hand over the budgets of the ordinary municipalities, on the ground that they borrowed money and so forth. Would that apply to the Presidency Municipality, or would you consider that that was on a different footing?—The Corporation of Madras is on a different footing.

8818. Is it necessary there for the Government to control the budget and to appoint a number of the municipal staff?—I certainly think it is absolutely necessary for the Government to control the budget, because of the enormous amount of money that we are constantly lending to the Corporation.

8819. Certain witnesses have spoken of the unsatisfactory morale of the tahsildar; do you think that the tahsildar is a much less pure person than the district munsiff?—I do not think that comparison can be made; they are very much the same class; if there is misconduct among the tahsildars, I should say that there was some amount amongst the district munsiffs.

8820. The tahsildar begins as a Rs. 15 or Rs. 20 clerk, as a rule; do you consider that that is quite satisfactory?—No, I have been trying to work out a scheme which would separate, as they do in England, the lower from the higher subordinate staff. A person who enters the Collector's office at the present day looks forward to rising to be a Deputy Collector and Magistrate, and he should get there after being a tahsildar, and with experience gathered in the Collector's and the District Magistrate's offices. What I should like (I do not know whether it could be done) is to have a lower establishment, simply a clerical establishment, going up to Rs. 60 or Rs. 70 and stopping there, and to recruit as a superior establishment graduates and so on, beginning at Rs. 50 or Rs. 60, who would be the men from whom our tahsildars and Deputy Collectors would be chosen afterwards.

8821. (Sir Steyning Ederley.) In this Presidency you have very wide delegating Acts; have you ever heard any sort of public complaint against them—that they give too much power to the Executive, and so on?—No; when the Legislature are considering a Bill they always understand that the "Collector" means a Divisional Officer, and therefore, when a provision in the Bill is under consideration, that point is kept in mind.

8822. For instance, the Court of Wards Act has got a similar section, section 8. When that was passed would a similar consideration also be present?—Yes.

8823. It is obvious on the schedules that there will be a good deal of legislation if much delegation is to be made, and it is also obvious from your saying that these are only models, that it cannot be final—that it will go on continuously?—Quite so.

8824. In paragraph 24 you say that the Government are "inclined to think" that it would require specific legislation to delegate powers or to withdraw any delegation of powers. Is that a final opinion, or do you keep a certain amount of open mind about it?—No; personally I think it is not open. Without specific legislation it is impossible to avoid breaking faith with the legislatures. Every single Act that is passed was considered carefully, and the Legislature considered whether it was the Collector or the District Collector who should be given certain powers. Now to give a general power of delegation would sweep the whole of that way.

8825. Then you say that we may take this as a very definite expression of opinion?—It certainly is in my view.

8826. The difference of pay between a Sub-Collector and a Collector is Rs. 600 or Rs. 700?—Rs. 700 or Rs. 800 a month difference.

8827. So that a transfer in such a case would involve a considerable loss?—Yes.

8828. You spoke in answer to a question of the interests of the State. Do you think that the public advantage involved is sufficiently great to justify any sort of system of allowance to officers that you do not promote in order to avoid a transfer? There is a system in vogue on a very small scale elsewhere by which, if an officer is entitled to promotion, and he cannot be moved for reasons of State, a compensation allowance is given to that particular officer. Do you think that the amount of public interests involved here would justify something of that sort?—I should think it would in some circumstances.

8829. Is it a great loss to the encouragement of Local Government, and so on, that the whole of this work should come direct into the Secretariat and not be under the control of a touring superior officer who can go round and see exactly what is required?—I do not think so. All that work passes through the Collector and the District Collector; they can make any remark they please upon it and it then goes up to the Local and Municipal Secretariat, where they are constantly dealing with problems of the kind all over the Presidency.

8830. Let us assume the hypothesis for the moment that it should come to be a choice whether the Board of Revenue should continue, or whether you should enlarge the Board so as to take in these outside departments which it does not at present administer. Which system would you prefer?—Well, I have no experience of the other system, it is difficult to say.

8831. (Chairman.) Do the members of the Council here go down to the Secretariat or work at their own residences?—They work at their own residences; there is no accommodation for them here.

8832. The Civil Surgeon of a district is both the Medical and Sanitary Officer?—He is the District Medical and Sanitary Officer.

8833. A Civil Surgeon is therefore serving two masters, whose powers, so far as he is concerned, are equal?—Yes.

8834. Is that a satisfactory system?—I do not think that in practice there has been any or very much friction. The Surgeon-General inspects the hospitals of the Civil Surgeon who as Medical and Sanitary Officer is responsible for sanitary improvements.

8835. Is that establishment, so far as the head is concerned, worth keeping separate from the medical establishment?—If you mean that there should be a Sanitary Commissioner as distinct from the Surgeon-General, I think so distinctly.

The Hon. Mr. G. STOKES was called and examined.

*The Hon.
Mr. G. Stokes.*
3 Dec., 1907.

8840. (Chairman.) You are Senior Member of the Governor's Council?—Yes.

8841. What portfolios do you hold in the Government?—I hold the Revenue, the Financial, and Pensions.

8842. In the statement that "the Government are generally satisfied with the principles underlying the scheme of the revised provincial settlement recently forwarded for their opinion by the Government of India," what are we to understand you to mean by the word "principles"?—Perhaps I could define it better by saying what it is not; it does not mean limits. The principles of the settlement, so far as they go, are right, but the settlement itself is not complete. In all its principles it is not fully defined. I consider that the income of the Local Government should be its own; that its power over its expenditure should be much more complete. So far as they go, the principles of the settlement are correct, and a very vast improvement on what existed before. The settlement now is more or less certain and fixed; formerly it was subject to frequent revision in all its details. The principle of division of heads of revenue is carried out much further and more completely in this settlement than it ever has been before. Those are two enormous advantages over the original system. But what I mean is that I do not think fixity has gone far enough yet.

8843. What do you mean by saying, "Means should be found to enable the Local Government 8836. In your judgment, should some discretionary power be given to remit dry revenue—you will observe that I say "discretionary power"?—I do not quite understand what would be served by the proposed delegation. It is a general principle that anything which is exceptional in the constitution should not be left to local officers, but should be determined by some superior authority. The whole of the imperial land revenue is fixed on the understanding that there are no dry remissions. Dry remissions are only given in the case of grievous calamity. So far as any raiyat is concerned, it does not matter to him whether the remission is given to him by the Collector or whether it is sanctioned afterwards by superior authority. The rules distinctly lay down that if a Collector thinks there is a case for dry remission he is to suspend the collection at once, and notify the fact in every village, and then refer for orders, and if he does not get the orders from the Board of Revenue in time he can extend the period of suspension, so that no one suffers. The raiyat does not suffer on account of the Collector's not having himself the power of dry remission. The power of dry remission, like the power of dealing with other people's money, is so very liable to abuse, that with a variety of Collectors, with all sorts of sympathies, or want of sympathies, it is a matter which the Government has not so far thought of allowing a Collector to control finally. As I say, nobody suffers, because any Collector may at once suspend the collection of the land revenue.

8837. Therefore, from your point of view, the power of suspension is equal to a power of temporary remission?—Absolutely. The question of dry remission does not arise in any sudden sort of way; before the question can ever arise, the districts have been going from bad to worse, and they have been inspected, and the Famine Commissioner has probably come down. There is no question of sudden calamity which is not fully covered.

8838. The Famine Commissioner only comes down in case of widespread calamity?—But those are the cases in which dry remission is granted.

8839. I am talking of what could be possible in an exceptional case?—If a man's field is actually swept away by a flood, the Collector has full power to grant him the necessary relief. It must be remembered that this is imperial revenue.

(The witness withdrew.) to obtain money for large public undertakings," and so on; that is I suppose that the Local Government should have liberty to borrow?—Whether the Government of India should borrow, or whether it should be the Local Government, may be a matter of discussion; it may be that it is cheaper for the Government of India to obtain the money for the Local Government in every case. Provided the Local Government gets the money, it does not seem to be of any very great importance whether it is the Local Government that borrows or the Government of India. If the Local Government were, so to speak, more autonomous, it should have the power of borrowing.

8844. Upon what authority?—As far as I can understand the law, the whole revenues of India vest in the Secretary of State, and it would be under the orders of the Secretary of State in very much the same way that the Government of India borrows now.

8845. Do you suggest that upon questions of borrowing the provincial Government should correspond direct with the Secretary of State?—I see no reason why it should not.

8846. Is that the pith of these words?—It is not the pith of these words, but it is a consequent arrangement, or it is a possible consequent arrangement.

8847. But what are the means, and who is to find them?—It says: "The interest and sinking fund needed to extinguish such loans being met from their share of the revenues of the province." It is not proposed that the Local Government should have the power of borrowing unless it can meet the loan from its own resources. I mean, if the Local Government can show that from its own resources it can not only pay the interest, but also provide a sinking fund on the sums required, I do not see why it should not be open for it to borrow, or have the money found for it. For example, take the Local Fund Board railways. The position we are in at the present moment is that we cannot make those railways because we cannot get the money; the cess is being levied, it is being accumulated, in time the railway will be made from the accumulated cess; but meanwhile the country is losing the advantage of the railway, and the cess is piling up for nothing. There is a further objection and that is this. If the cess is piled up in this way, the Local Board will possess a property acquired from the investment of local funds. I do not think a Local Board should be allowed to acquire any property of its own.

8848. In paragraph 3 you say: "Powers should be delegated to the Local Government in respect of loans granted by the Government themselves, and powers should be delegated to the Local Government to sanction the raising of loans by local bodies in the open market." Would you propose to guarantee these loans?—That turns upon the existing law.

8849. But what is your proposal?—The proposal is this. At present the local bodies must borrow from the Local Government, and the Local Government must obtain the money from the Government of India. If the latter cannot give them the money, the local bodies have to go into the local market, but the Local Government cannot sanction their going into the local market; the Government of India must sanction that. The meaning of this is that there is no reason why that power should not be delegated to the Local Government.

8850. Who is going to guarantee those loans?—The loans are guaranteed by the local body against the cess in any case.

8851. You think that the Local Government is a better judge of the financial standing of the local body than the Government of India could be?—I think it is.

8852. In paragraph 4 you say: "As regards provincial and divided heads of expenditure the Local Government should be granted as free a hand as possible" ?—What that really means, as I understand it as a member of the Government, is that the finances of the Local Government should be freed as far as possible from restrictions which are not necessary for the general safety of the country. The Government of India interfere—necessarily, I suppose—I do not know about that, but, at any rate, it does interfere—and enforces in the case of famine, for example, much reduction of expenditure. The Local Government is forced to reduce the standing machinery of the administration to an extent which is very injurious subsequently. I think the Local Government should be the judge, as far as possible, how far that reduction should go. If they have to go very much beyond what they can do from the saving of revenue, they should be able to borrow.

8853. With regard to these provincial and divided heads of expenditure, do you want to spend the money as you please without control?—No, there is a certain amount of control necessary, but that control should be as little as possible. I do not say that a Local Government should be free from all control, any more than I should say that a local body should be free from all control. There is a necessary control arising from circumstances which are outside the Local Government's knowledge and experience altogether.

8854. Are the Government of India to say: "The object is a good object," or are they to say: "We assume your object to be good, but we think your expenditure in details is too extravagant"?—I think if the Government of India admits that the object is good, it should be for the Local Government to spend the money.

8855. You think that when a scheme is sanctioned it would be unnecessary for the Local Government to submit estimates?—No, I do not say that, because the Local Government must submit estimates for other purposes; I mean for ways and means and purposes of that kind. Those are things outside the ken and outside the control of the Local Government, and therefore it should submit estimates; but the tendency is to override the Local Government in matters which are within its local knowledge.

8856. Do you think that all expenditure on divided heads should be provincial and not divided also? For instance, upon stamps or excise the expenditure is now partly provincial and partly imperial?—I do not think it makes very much difference, provided that the arrangement is a permanent one, not subject to alteration either at the wish of the Government of India, or at the wish of the Local Government. If these shares were guaranteed either by law, or by the Secretary of State, or by some solemn assurance, I do not think it matters much whether the revenue is an undivided head, or a shared head. So far as revenue is concerned, I am inclined to think that it would be better to share it, but the thing is that the income which the Local Government has to spend must be previously ascertained and known to it, and not be subjected to arbitrary curtailment by the Government of India; I will not say without consulting the Government of Madras, but without the consent of the Government of Madras.

8857. Then you say: "The provincial Government should have power to allot during the course of the year from the provincial balances." You would agree that some limit, as well as some immediate report to the Government of India, is necessary?—Certainly, the difficulty is this. As the system of budget estimates is prepared at present, there is no reserve at all in the Financial Department from which to meet emergent expenditure that arises during the year; the only way in which that expenditure can be met now, except from balances, is by resumption and re-allotment; it might become necessary in the course of the year to allot from provincial balances; in the course of my experience here, the reserve with the Financial Department to run the Presidency was Rs. 6,000. That is a very small sum in sterling—about £400. That was all we could lay our hands on; the balance was there, but the sum which we could obtain by re-allotment was only Rs. 6,000.

8858. You would agree that you must not deplete your balance too much?—Certainly.

8859. The balances are used by the Government of India for the purposes of loan, and therefore any undue exhaustion of the balances would seriously disturb the financial equilibrium of the Government of India?—That is so, certainly. It is "subject to immediate report to the Government of India."

8860. You do not propose any definite percentage of sum which could not be disturbed?—No, but I can quite understand that such an arrangement would be advantageous.

8861. It has been suggested to us that both the District Boards and the municipalities should be allowed to keep their lapses without fresh budget allotments; it has also been suggested to us that they should be allowed emergency expenditure, very much on the lines that you would have emergency expenditure for the provincial Government?—You mean that they should be allowed to keep their lapses, that is to say, that they should be able to re-appropriate without report; that is what it comes to?

8862. Yes. Would you think you could safely do that in the case of the District Boards and municipalities?—Yes, I do not see why you should not.

8863. Would you agree to allow the District Boards and municipalities to incur emergency expenditure within limits well defined?—I think that that had better, perhaps, be kept under control. Re-appropriation within their budget allotment for the year might be allowed, but you cannot allow them to deplete the balances; their balances are very small, and generally they are pledged up to the utmost possible point, and the next year you may find that the Boards are insolvent; that is the difficulty.

*The Hon.
Mr. G. Stokes.*

8864. You do not think that the same difficulty which you urge against the District Boards and municipalities, the Government of India would have any need to urge against a provincial Government?—I do not think so, because the sums dealt with are so very much larger, and the Government of Madras is not an actual executive body carrying out works and paying for them, whereas the District Board is.

8865. To return to the District Boards; do you think that the Government of Madras indirectly causes some extravagance on the part of the District Boards or municipalities by saying: "Well, you have got this money, you must spend it"?—I have no reason to think so. I think the Boards are only too ready to spend it if they can get it. The lapses occur not owing to the action of Government, but owing to the action of the Boards themselves; they propose to have some scheme or other which they cannot carry out.

8866. Might it not be that the lapses are caused by Government not informing the local authorities that the schemes have been sanctioned, thereby giving the local bodies too short a time in which to spend the money?—Very often these lapses occur in the following way. Suppose provision is made in the Local Board's budget under "Education" in order that a certain scheme of primary education may be sanctioned. The starting of the scheme is delayed from some cause or another, either to get the sanction of the Government of India, or because the Government of India raise some objection after the beginning of the year, and so on. That sum will lapse. Then, of course, that sum might be re-allotted and spent, we will say, upon a bridge or a road, or something of that sort; but I do not see that these lapses occur in any way other than through difficulties in working out some general scheme, or something of that sort, so far as the Board is concerned.

8867. With reference to these delays that you have mentioned, you do not think the provincial Government say "You have got this money, you must hurry up and spend it, otherwise it will lapse," and then the local body does hurry up and spends it; you do not think that that is so?—I have no reason to think so.

8868. May I take it generally with regard to paragraphs 10, 11, 12 and 13, that you would be content that the Government of India should give you these delegations subject to general rules being laid down?—Of course, they would be subject to rules very similar to those above.

8869. With regard to paragraph 14, we quite understand that transfers for service in Native States should be under your own control, but why do you want powers as to transfers for foreign service out of India? Would it not be very advisable that for anything of that kind outside India, the Government of India should be consulted?—I think it should be consulted.

8870. Would it not be very desirable on the whole to restrict the Local Government to dealing with these cases in India?—The point about it is that the Local Government should have power to refuse to let their men go.

8871. You want this power in order that you may refuse to the Government of India the right to transfer out of India?—The power to refuse is the most important thing from the point of view of the Local Government.

8872. With regard to paragraph 18 you would agree that Heads of Departments should be left to make permanent pensionable appointments up to Rs. 15?—You mean not to make appointments, but to create posts? They cannot create appointments at present. The difficulty is this. The whole question is a financial one; I do not think on the whole there would be any objection to it; the difficulty is that a recurring appointment bearing the salary of Rs. 15 a month means a very large charge on the capital of the country, so to speak; though the Rs. 15 means only Rs. 180 a year, it means 25 times that of capital, because every recurring appointment that is made is an annual recurring charge, and you must take the capitalised value of the annual recurring charge to estimate the value of that appointment. For example, to create a Rs. 15 appointment is as large a power as to enable a Superintending Engineer to carry out a work costing Rs. 5,000.

8873. Altogether you are not quite clear that you think the Heads of Departments ought to have this power?—I think I should prefer to say that they might have.

8875. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) Though you may not think it necessary, yet would you be prepared to accept the provincialisation of all expenditure in order to get a position of financial independence?—Certainly.

8876. As regards the word "principles" in the opening sentence of paragraph 1, you are very anxious to go on to a position in which the Madras Government should have some revenues actually of its own?—Certainly.

8877. That is to say, practically a separation of provincial and imperial finance?—Within limits, yes.

8878. With regard to paragraph 24, obviously, if there is to be very much delegation there must be legislation, and a good deal of legislation. Does this phrase "The Government are inclined to think" mean that it is a very deliberate opinion, politely put, or that it is an opinion upon which you have rather an open mind?—I think it means that the Government of Madras on that point is rather open. The difficulty is that to make a general Act of delegation is contrary to all the principles of law. It is desirable, but it violates very important principles of legislation, because in regard to each of these Acts, when the Act was passed and it was laid down that the Local Government should do a certain thing, it was so laid down in the vast majority of instances because it was thought that the Board of Revenue, or the Collector, could not do it, or ought not to do it; therefore, a general Act authorising the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government to delegate any powers which were given to it by law will, to a great extent, offend against that principle of legislation. In practical working, perhaps, it would be worked all right, but there is also to be considered the propriety of the delegation; that is the matter upon which the Legislature in legislating has pronounced an opinion, and a general Act of delegation would give the Local Government the power of setting aside that deliberate expression of opinion. That is the objection, to my mind, to a general Act of delegation, and the difficulty in regard to it.

8879. That is, of course, the argument against it. Do you consider that that is an absolutely decisive argument against it?—I rather think it is.

8880. Then when you say "The Government are inclined to think" you mean that that is their deliberate opinion?—Yes; there ought to be an Act of deliberate delegation after consideration of the particular delegation proposed; that would be free from all objection.

8881. Except the objection of considerable delay and trouble?—Yes, and, of course, an examination of the various delegations and the various Acts.

8882. It is obvious that these Acts would be very frequently before the Council and would take a long time?—Yes, that is the great objection, of course.

8883. You do not think that the objection you have stated could be met, at any rate in part, by requiring previous publication and investigation of objections?—I doubt if it would be successfully met.

8884. (Mr. Meyer.) I want to be clear about the divided heads, and so forth. At present the general principle of the financial settlement is that you get half of the land revenue, excise, and so forth, and that you bear the whole of the land revenue expenditure and half of other heads. Did you say that you would prefer—if you could get about as much as you get now—to have, say, half of the land revenue, and have nothing to do with excise or stamps?—Do they have anything to do with expenditure?

8885. At present you share your revenue with the Government of India over a variety of certain heads; there are some minor heads that you do not share, but I am speaking of various heads, such as excise, stamps, and so on. I did not quite understand whether you were quite content with that system, or whether you would not prefer some system under which you got the whole of the revenue under heads A and B, letting the Government of India take the whole of the revenue under heads C and D, and so on?—I do not think that that matters very much if the share of the land revenue which we get, or the share of the excise, is a fixed share, not alterable by anybody.

8886. And as regards expenditure?—As regards expenditure, I think it would be just as well that the whole of it was provincialised.

8887. What do you mean by provincialised?—I mean that the settlement was so revised as to enable the Local Government to undertake the whole of the expenditure under most of the divided heads at present.

8888. So, in fact, the whole of the expenditure would be provincialised, and it would be necessary to give the provincial Government a larger share of revenue to meet the charges?—Yes. Of course, if you provincialised the whole expenditure, you would have to revise the settlement.

8889. You have admitted, I think, that in general matters the Government of India must have control—matters of general policy, such as excise, police, and things of that sort?—Yes, in a general way; there must be control of a certain kind.

8890. Is it not easier in a way to exercise that control when the Government of India shares the revenue and expenditure than when it does not?—I do not see why it should be.

8891. Suppose, for instance, the Government of India asked the provincial Government to adopt a system which would reduce the excise revenue raised in the province; at present the Government of India could say: "We are asking you to do something which is also going to cause loss to us"; if the whole loss fell on the province might there not be more friction?—I do not see why there should be. It is an argument I can understand being used that you are sharing the loss, and, therefore, you have a right, to a certain extent, to call the tune; but it does not seem to me to have much weight.

8893. I am using the term "productive" in the financial sense, as the Government of India use it in regard to irrigation works. A productive work is a work which will pay not only for the upkeep of the work but interest on what has been borrowed and leave a little margin. These works are constructed mostly from loans granted by the Government of India?—Many of them, especially under irrigation.

8894. Therefore, if they have to be provided, the Government of India have to finance them for you?—They may, or they may not.

8895. You contemplate borrowing on the provincial credit, if you could do it, for both productive and unproductive works?—Yes; any works which are desirable from the Government point of view.

8896. Take the particular case of famine charges; would you be likely to have to borrow for those under the new arrangement?—Well, that is a detail really; it is not a question of principle.

8897. Do you think you could get money readily in the local market?—Yes, I do not see why we should not; I do not say that we should get it readily, but I think we should get the money; we should probably have to pay more for it, and there will probably be some difficulty in getting it, because the money coming into the local market is not very much, but I believe we should get it from various sources. For example, I know a case in which a local community offered to lend money to finance a certain project that they wanted carried out. I daresay if you had local works which were of interest in that way to local communities you very often would get the money.

8898. But those are the local communities which can already borrow with the sanction of the Government of India?—No; when I said a local community I did not mean a local body.

8899. You mentioned the desirability of removing the restriction which requires the sanction of the Government of India to the raising of loans by local bodies, District Boards and others, in the open market. The primary object of that restriction is that they should not interfere with the Government of India's borrowing. Do you attach any special importance to that?—Of course, I can understand the Government of India attaching importance to it. The position is this, that if the amount of available capital for loan is restricted, then if the Local Government comes in as a competitor with the Government of India, it will embarrass the Government of India in some way to a greater or a lesser extent.

8900. It is not merely the amount; it is the time. Suppose, at the time the Government of India was floating its loan, a Local Government or a big body like the Bombay Corporation wanted to float a fairly big loan too, might not that be embarrassing to the imperial loan?—I can quite understand that it might be.

8901. Paragraph 8 refers to restrictions in regard to the emoluments of officers holding temporary appointments; have you anything to say about Article 81 of the Civil Service Regulations, which restricts deputation allowances to 20 per cent. of the officer's salary?—We have said somewhere in this memorandum that that should be abolished.

8902. Article 81 is the one which restricts the emoluments to one-fifth?—Yes.

8903. What you mean here is that it should apply not merely to temporary appointments but to deputations?—No, that only refers to temporary appointments.

8904. But have you anything to say about deputations?—No.

8905. You think that that does not unduly narrow your powers?—No; the difficulty about that new rule is this: I will give this illustration. The appointment of a tahsildar on Rs. 150 was created in Madras; you cannot find in the Revenue Department any officer who will get the full pay of the appointment; the next grade is Rs. 120; now, if you take one-fifth of the Rs. 120, you get to Rs. 144 as the pay of the appointment; the officer will not get Rs. 150. That is the objection.

month without the sanction of the Government of India. If a Local Government should have further powers in regard to creating appointments, should it not have larger powers in regard to abolishing them?—Certainly. The reason that this rule is objected to is this; if you are reorganising a Service and you change the grading in it in any way, the whole scheme is beyond the power of the Local Government, and possibly, has to go to the Secretary of State.

8907. In paragraph 15 you say: "In the matter of sanction to the grant of honoraria to officers from Government revenues and of permission to officers to accept fees from private bodies and public bodies unconnected with Government, the intervention of the Government of India seems to be unnecessary." Under Article 72 the sanction of the Secretary of State is necessary over a certain amount; would you give full power to the Local Government?—I would.

8908. In all cases of honoraria to officers?—Yes.

8909. In paragraph 19 you point out that it would be useful if your first budget estimates were sent in at a later time. You want about a fortnight's delay. You have looked at it, if I may say so, from the provincial point of view?—Of course, I have looked at it from the provincial point of view, but at the same time it is very necessary that this delay should occur, especially if there is to be any criticism of the budget by non-official members.

8910. The non-official members do not criticise the budget until after it has been finally passed?—Oh yes. The proposal of the Local Government here is to have a conference to which the budget will be submitted. After the first budget goes to the Government of India, that is to say after it is provisionally settled, there will be a conference of the officials and non-officials, who will criticise the budget and make suggestions which, if possible, will be included in a later issue. I think therefore that if the date of the submission of the first budget could be postponed, it would be a matter of very great importance.

8911. On the other hand if the Government of India and the Secretary of State found it desirable for the purpose of the possible reduction of taxation or otherwise to have the figures at as early a date as possible, you would admit that that might be a reason on the other side?—Yes, if the Government of India cannot get the figures in any other way, but that is a large restriction.

8912. Then about reductions by the Government of India; have they not been generally justified by the facts; have you had occasion to exceed the estimates in the aggregate as finally passed by India?—I understand not, so far.

8913. Then so far as the provincial Government is concerned you have not had to go up to the Government of India for sanction for reallocations for any particular year?—Not because we have been able to reappropriate, but if it had not been for the fact that we are exceedingly flush of revenue at present and for the last few years, I can quite understand that we might have had to go up.

8914. As regards Heads of Departments, where you say inconvenience arises; the Government of India make a lump reduction under the main head; could not you make a lump reduction in the same way?—It causes great inconvenience; in order to do it you have to revise your whole budget; you refer to the subordinate authority and you have to go into each item of the budget, and it causes a great deal of delay and trouble.

8915. Your view is that it would be preferable to let the budget figures be inaccurate rather than to undertake all this labour?—I certainly think it would be a lesser evil. The Local Government does its very utmost to get its estimates right, but from one cause or another it is not always possible. The difficulty is to spend money, very often, unless you have a long time to do it; you can spend the money if you choose to throw it about, but if you are to spend it with caution and care it takes a long time to arrange for doing so.

8916. You say you can spend money if you choose to throw it about; does not that happen already? In the Public Works and other spending Departments is it not the case that there is very hurried and possibly wasteful expenditure in the last weeks of the year?—It is true that a very large number of payments are made in the last weeks of the year, and there is no doubt reason to believe that expenditure is pushed on in order to prevent the lapse of grants to get through the grants; but what is said in paragraph 20 will not prevent that; that is quite a different matter.

8918. And an officer is not censured in any way because he has not worked up to his estimates?—I do not know much about the Public Works Department, but not in any department that I have had to do with.

8919. (Mr. Dutt.) In paragraph 3 you say that "powers should be delegated to the Local Government to sanction the raising of loans by local bodies in the open market." Would the loans have to be raised on the security of the cess?—On the taxes raised by the local body.

8920. But is it not within the range of possibility that the taxation might be partly withdrawn and that some cesses now imposed might be abolished?—Of course, it is within the range of possibility, but it could only be done by legislation, so that that is very different from the security given to the Government of India.

8921. But in that case the security would be lessened?—I cannot conceive of any greater security. Of course, the Legislature in any country, and everywhere, can alter the methods of taxation.

8922. In the last two or three years, some of the cesses on land have been withdrawn?—Yes, but they have been in no way pledged for loans. They were cesses for the payment of village officers; that is the only one which has been withdrawn in this Presidency; that was a Local Fund body, not a local body; there is a difference between the two.

8923. By local body you mean a District Board or municipality?—A District Board or municipality, or a Port Trust, or a Shipping and Landing Fees Committee, which is established by an Act in this Presidency; they are local bodies, but a Local Fund body is a different thing.

8924. These cesses are liable to alteration by legislation, and proposals from time to time have been made to abolish them?—You mean the abolition or imposition of a cess, not merely an alteration?

8925. The abolition of an existing cess?—The local body itself can take it off.

8926. And on that security you think it would be possible to borrow money on reasonable terms of interest?—I am quite sure of it.

8927. As to the powers that you ask for the Local Governments to raise loans on the security of their share of the revenue, are not all the loans incurred by the Government of India on the security of the entire revenues of India, including the provincial revenue?—Of course, they are on the entire revenues of India.

8928. Would not the provincial revenue be thus twice hypothecated, two Governments going into the market and borrowing on the security of the same revenues?—So far as I understand the law, it is only 21 and 22 Vict., c. 106, which gives power to borrow at all, and the power is restricted to the Secretary of State. Under that statute the Secretary of State is made responsible for the existing debts of the East India Company at the date it was passed, and he is given borrowing powers. Where the borrowing powers of the Government of India come from I do not know. In that statute the words used are "the revenues of India"; it is not the "revenues of the Government of India," but the revenues of India, upon which he is given powers to borrow.

8929. What I want to put to you is that the Government of India have already borrowed on the security of the entire revenues of India, and if the provincial Governments were empowered to borrow, they would have to borrow again on the security of the same revenues—two borrowers going into the market and giving the same security?—Suppose by legislation you gave a definite share to the Government, I do not think it would affect the matter, because if you do that by legislation and give a definite share to the Local Government—which I would like to see done—then that share is withdrawn from hypothecation for the Government of India loans.

8930. As regards the present class of tahsildars, can you suggest any method of improving that class by a better system of recruitment?—I certainly think I can. My idea, and a proposal which I actually made, is that the administrative and executive service of the Revenue Department should be divided at the grade of deputy tahsildar; that the service above that should be made into a superior service with a lower subordinate clerical service; that the superior service should be recruited by a combination of nomination with competition. For example, you should make a Selection Committee who would receive applications from anybody who wanted an appointment, who would actually personally interview the applicant, ascertain particulars of his family and his connections and everything of that sort, whether he was in good health, and so on—and finally pass him as a candidate; then you would pass in that way, say, 300 men; there would be about 60 vacancies; then you would have a competitive examination amongst the 300 men for the 60 vacancies.

8931. What would be the initial pay of a deputy tahsildar according to your scheme?—The pay of a deputy tahsildar in this Presidency is Rs. 100. Of course it would be necessary to put these men for about a year, perhaps more, under a tahsildar in order that they might get some acquaintance with the work.

8932. Then the tahsildar would be recruited from the deputy tahsildars?—Yes.

8933. You think that that would give you better men than the present class?—Yes. If a man is corrupted at all, he is corrupted in the lower ranks; it is when he is a clerk or something like that that he learns the knack of corruption, and if he once learns the knack of corruption he never loses it.

8934. You have suggested that the Government of Madras should correspond direct with the Secretary of State upon the matter of certain pensions. Do you realise that that might lead not to decreased, but to increased, correspondence, because the Government of Madras, being ignorant of the decisions of the Secretary of State on similar applications from other Governments, might ask the Secretary of State to do something which he had just refused to do in the case of another Government, and to write back and refer the whole thing again?—Yes, I suppose it might lead to that.

8935. And that really the reference through the Government of India might save and not lose time for that reason?—I do not think on the whole it would.

(The witness withdrew.)

* The RAJA of KOLLENGODE was called and examined.

8936. (Chairman.) You have handed in a considered statement of the evidence which you wish to give in connection with the enquiry which is now proceeding upon decentralization?—Yes.

Collectors should have larger powers in the matter of the suspension of kists and granting remissions. They should have power to suspend payment of revenue for one or two years till the raiyats are able to pay the amount, and in the matter of remissions, the Collectors should have powers to grant dry remissions when the crops have failed owing to causes over which the raiyats could have no control and wet remissions for any portion of the survey field, whatever its extent might be.

I am of opinion that there should be no curtailment in the matter of appeals to the Local Government and Heads of Departments in respect of administrative action and also in respect of officers against orders affecting them. In the first place, the mere fact that the order passed by an officer is liable to be appealed against will, in itself, be a guarantee that he will follow the rules strictly, weigh the evidence properly, and will generally be careful in passing his orders. In the second place, the public and officers consider the right of appeal as a cherished privilege and any curtailment of it is likely to create heart-burning. The suggestion that an appeal in respect of administrative action should not be admitted unless it is accompanied by a certificate from the authority passing the order is not likely to work satisfactorily as, unlike the civil cases in which such certificates are granted by the High Court, the questions involved in administrative matters refer more to questions of fact than to questions of law.

Executive Officers are not in adequate contact with the people. The chief obstacle is that the higher ranks are almost wholly European; and even with the best of Europeans, the average native of India finds it difficult to get into personal contact sufficiently close to enable the officer to know what exactly the people think and want. The people are also to blame, as they do not always fully and freely tell their European officers what they feel and think. The difficulty will remain till a larger native element is introduced into the higher ranks of the administrative services. In Native States, even when the Executive Government is inefficient and below the mark, there is seldom any complaint of want of touch between the Executive and the people. I know both Travancore and Cochin and have the privilege of also knowing the Rulers of those States in addition to a large number of officers of both Darbars, some of whom I know very intimately. My impression is that, though the administrative machinery may not work as vigorously and efficiently in Native States as in British India, the higher officers in those States appear to be much more in touch with the people than in British territory. This is due almost wholly to the fact that the higher ranks of the executive service in a Native State are almost wholly native. Another reason is that the present day Civilians, with rare exceptions, are not sufficiently acquainted with the vernaculars of the districts. Some of them understand what a raiyat may say but have not command of the language to reply in the vernacular. Further, the present day officers are weighted down with heavy revenue, magisterial and Local Fund work, and seldom find time to meet the raiyats and hear their wants even when they are in camp. During the last 10 or 15 years, the work of the Collector has increased so enormously, especially with the creation of new departments and demand for larger details from higher officers, that he has to spend a fairly good portion of his time in attending to these matters which could well be done by a Personal Assistant Deputy Collector. I would suggest therefore that in every district the present Huzur Sherishtadars be replaced by Deputy Collectors, and the increased cost on that account will be inappreciable.

The Hon.
Mr. G. Stokes.

* Owing to the want of time this witness was not examined orally.

The Raja of Kollengode.

3 Dec., 1907.

An increase in the administrative staff or a reduction in the area of district and divisional charges will not, I think, go far to meet the difficulty complained of, as the want of touch between the administration and the people is due to racial differences above referred to, which cannot be much affected by merely increasing the higher staff or by reducing the charges of officers.

Transfers of officers are certainly very frequent, and they are far from being conducive to proper administration. In the Palghat division, for instance, where I live, there had been nearly half-a-dozen Head Assistant Collectors within the last five years.

I am of opinion that municipalities, District Boards, taluk Boards, and unions should have larger powers in administrative and financial matters. The Palghat municipality, for instance, has been working under a non-official Chairman during the last 15 years, and the administration has deserved the approbation of Government. It is further working a second grade college with success. The crying want of many of the municipal towns is a good supply of water and adequate drainage. The municipal funds are unable to meet them. The District and taluk Boards in many districts, as for instance in Malabar, have not adequate funds to keep even the main sources of communication in proper condition.

As District and taluk Boards are wholly under the supervision of official Presidents (Collectors and Divisional Officers) there is a decided tendency to view them and to work them as Government Departments. The Presidents do not always remember that the object of these Boards is to give some training to people to manage their local affairs. I would suggest that, as a tentative measure, a few selected taluk Boards may be placed under non-official Presidents and that the Vice-Presidents of some of the District Boards may be nominated or elected from the non-officials. It is not necessary so much to increase their powers as to give them more funds and better status for the non-official members. The impression among people is that the latter are figure-heads and have no voice in the administration of the Boards.

If District and taluk Boards have failed to satisfy the aspirations of the people, I take it that it is due to their constitution. Firstly, there is the fact that the appointments in taluk Boards are wholly by nomination. Hence, though a certain number of seats in District Boards are filled up by election from taluk Boards, in the end the whole thing is nomination and nothing else. I am of the decided opinion that till the non-official seats on taluk Boards are filled up by election, those Boards will continue to be looked at with indifference. There should be no difficulty in creating an electorate, with a property qualification as the basis for each taluk. The electorate need not be unwieldy. The process of election will bring home to the minds of the people that the bodies which manage their schools and hospitals and construct and maintain their roads are of their own creation. At present, Government, by making themselves responsible for all appointments on taluk Boards—and consequently on District Boards—make themselves responsible for every administrative detail outside municipalities, with the result that when anything goes wrong, however small, people immediately blame the executive.

I am in favour of the creation of Advisory Councils in each district to assist the District Officers. The number of Councillors might be fixed at 12 to 18, one-half at least of whom should be elected. The Council may be profitably consulted in important matters, such, for instance, as plague measures, famine and pestilence, unrest, settlement proposals, large irrigation projects, and similar large measures. Due weight should be given to the opinion of the Council, and if the Collector disagrees with it, he should place the matter before Government for final orders. Administrative rather than Advisory Councils would be more useful provided a substantial share of administration is entrusted to them. District and taluk Boards are administrative bodies; and if they have not satisfied the aspirations of the people, it is because they are not thoroughly representative and the members are given no substantial share in the management.

I would advocate the revival of the panchayat system. At present an amshom or group of villages may have a panchayat, the members of which should be partly elected and partly nominated. They should have civil and criminal powers to a limited extent, and might be entrusted with the supervision of primary education, kudimaramat, repair of minor irrigation works, allotment of pasture grounds, granting materials for building houses, and implements of husbandry, wherever it is the custom to do so. They might with advantage be consulted in the matter of the location of arrack and toddy shops, assessment of income-tax, granting of loans to raiyats, under the Land Improvement and the Agricultural Loans Act.

(The witness withdrew.)

* The Hon. KRISHNAN NAIR was called and examined.

*The Hon.
Krishnan
Nair.*

3 Dec., 1907

8937. (Chairman.) You are an extra member of the Legislative Council?—Yes.

8938. You hand in a considered statement which represents your views?—Yes.

8939. You desire to represent to the Royal Commission upon Decentralization the facts which you have embodied in your statement?—Yes.

It is not desirable to curtail the right of appeal, now existing, in any manner whatever. A curtailment in the existing right of appeal will lead to insecurity in the minds of persons affected by the orders which are to be appealed against. This is true in respect of all kinds of appeals, including appeals to the Government of India, to the Local Governments, and to Departmental Heads.

The provincial Governments are too much dominated by considerations of revenue.

Executive Officers do not generally come much in contact with the people. No doubt in their tours they sometimes come in contact with the richer men in the district. But as a rule they do not come in contact with the masses. It is only those that have petitions to present or have to transact business of a similar nature that generally go to these Executive Officers. Free social intercourse between these officers and the people in general does not exist. One reason for this want of intercourse is want of sufficient knowledge of the vernaculars on the part of these Executive Officers. In some cases there is want of sympathy also on the part of these officers.

Larger powers in respect of financial and administrative matters generally may, and ought to, be given to district municipalities, District Boards, and taluk Boards. Divisional officers and Collectors of Districts now possess large powers of interference in municipal matters. It is highly desirable that these powers should either be curtailed or abolished.

I am in favour of the creation of Advisory and Administrative Councils to assist Divisional and District Officers. Responsibilities in respect of village sanitation, education, and other matters affecting villages and districts may be given to these Councils. Their advice on such matters would be of considerable help to the Divisional and District Officers. These Councils may be constituted partly by nomination and partly by election by the people themselves.

It is desirable that Collectors of Districts should be empowered to grant remissions of revenue when failure of crops takes place.

* Owing to the want of time this witness was not examined orally.

Collectors and Divisional Officers already possess very extensive powers generally. It is not desirable, broadly speaking, that these powers should be enhanced.

It is not expedient that District Boards should be invested with powers of supervision and control over the smaller municipalities within their respective districts. The people must be more associated than they are at present in the administration of their country. Generally speaking, decentralization to a greater extent than at present exists will not benefit the people unless they are associated to a limited extent, at least, in the government of their own land.

It is also not desirable, generally speaking, that Local Governments should be made quite independent of the Government of India.

ELEVENTH DAY.

RAJAHMANDRI, Wednesday, 4th December, 1907.

PRESENT :

C. E. H. HOBHOUSE, Esq., M.P., Under Secretary of State for India, Chairman.

Sir FREDERIC LELY, K.C.I.E., C.S.I.
Sir STEYNING EDGERLEY, K.C.V.O., C.I.E., I.C.S.
R. C. DUTT, Esq., C.I.E.

W. S. MEYER, Esq., C.I.E., I.C.S.
W. L. HICHENS, Esq.

Mr. J. A. CUMMING was called and examined.

8940. (Chairman.) You are the Collector of the Godavari district?—Yes.

8941. Would you tell us what is the size of your district?—5,634 square miles.

8942. How many villages have you got in the Collectorate?—In the Agency there are a large number of very small villages; the total number is, I think, about 1,400.

8943. What is the population, roughly speaking, of the district?—Just under 1½ millions.

8944. How long have you been Collector here?—I came here first in 1899 for a short time; then, 2½ years afterwards, I returned.

8945. During the time you have been a Collector, have you been able to go into every village in your Collectorate?—No.

8946. How long do you think it would take an officer to make himself thoroughly acquainted with the whole of a district such as this one is, practically visiting every village?—It would take him a very long time; in the Agency, for instance, the villages are very small and may consist of a few huts.

8947. In addition to your work as Collector you have a considerable tract of land under your control as Agent for the Government?—Yes.

8948. Is that tract included in the area which you have just given us?—Yes.

8949. Is the work greater in the Agency than it is by comparison in the rest of the Collectorate?—It is rather more responsible; the Collector must take a greater personal interest in what is going on there, and must be more fully informed regarding it.

8950. What language is principally spoken in the Collectorate?—Telugu.

8951. Are you acquainted with that language?—I cannot speak Telugu fluently.

8952. You came from a district in which Tamil was principally spoken?—I have been in most of the Tamil districts.

8953. With Tamil you are very familiar?—Yes, I could speak it fairly well.

8954. You would probably admit that it is essential that the Collector should speak the language which is principally spoken in his district?—Yes, it is most desirable.

8955. And any system of posting Collectors to districts with the language of which they are not familiar fails in that respect?—I think an officer should be posted to a district with the language of which he is well acquainted.

8956. Could you tell us whether the Divisional Officers—both European and Indian Divisional Officers—in your Collectorate are well acquainted with the vernacular of the district?—Yes, they all know Telugu well; one of the officers is a very junior officer, but he is picking it up fairly well.

8957. Are the tahsildars in your Collectorate also familiar with the language?—Yes, they all know Telugu well, except the Land Records tahsildar, who is a Tamil.

8958. Do you find that in your work as Collector you have to make a great number of references either to the Board of Revenue or to the provincial Government?—Yes, there is a very considerable amount of correspondence with the Board of Revenue.

8959. Is the number of such references which you have to make in many points unnecessarily large?—I think it might be diminished.

8960. There are a good many subjects in connection with which you think your experience and length of service would entitle you to a somewhat freer hand than you have at present?—Yes, I think that is so.

8961. There are a large number of references on petty points which any officer of even moderate experience ought to be able to dispose of?—Yes, undoubtedly.

8962. I went into the Sub-Collector's office this morning; I found the clerk there writing a letter to you, as Collector, as to whether or not a certain peon could or could not wear a belt of a particular colour. Just as you claim a certain freedom in small matters, is that not a matter which might reasonably be left to the Sub-Collector?—I cannot quite understand the reference,

Mr. J. A.
Cumming.

4 Dec., 1907.

Mr. J. A.
Cumming.

4 Dec., 1907.

because the belts are all more or less of an approved pattern.

8963. But that is hardly a subject which deserves very serious attention?—No.

8964. Now, can you make to us any suggestion upon the somewhat larger points in reference to which a Collector might have some greater freedom from reference to the provincial Government?—I would suggest that in the Court of Wards work some more freedom should be given to the Collector. In this district I was in charge of a very large estate, and the amount of work connected with it was extremely large; in fact the estate gave much more work than any division in the district; I had constantly to make references to the Court of Wards on many comparatively routine matters; I think as regards that I might have greater freedom.

8965. And upon any other point?—Yes, such a matter as unqualified clerks, and that sort of thing. If the Collector wishes to employ a man who has not passed the minimum requirements, he must go up to the Board of Revenue for permission to employ the man; such things as that, I think, might be left in the district. Then, when special work is being done as regards extra establishments, I think a certain amount of discretion might be given. At present I have no authority to employ these men, but I have constantly to do it in anticipation of sanction; sanction is generally given as a matter of course.

8966. And even if the sanction had not been necessary, the act would have been necessary, and the Government would have had to condone the offence?—They would have to do so, or to have ordered me to pay the amount.

8967. Therefore, a more sensible thing in your judgment is that you should have a free hand in these small matters?—I think so in regard to many of these things.

8968. Is there any restriction on your action in connection with agricultural loans with regard to which you have any suggestions to make?—I have no suggestions to make as to that, because there have been no loan transactions in this district.

8969. Do you as a rule draw up a programme of your tour through the district in the cold weather?—I generally go out for about a month on end, and I draw up a programme of that month, and send it to the Divisional Officers and the tahsildars concerned.

8970. Do you do that for their convenience, or for the convenience of your officers and of the people who live in the district?—I expect the tahsildar to make it known.

8971. And he does, as a matter of fact?—I cannot actually say whether he does or not.

8972. Would it be well that you should give him definite instructions?—Yes, probably it would be as well. Of course, I do not stay long in one place; it is a considerable area to get over; a few places here and a few places there are all I can afford the time to visit. I think it would be just as well that the tahsildar should publish pretty widely the particulars of my tour.

8973. Perhaps you will consider that?—Yes, I will make a note of it.

8974. This is a dry as compared to a wet district, is it not?—Oh, no; you have got the delta here.

8975. You have both dry and wet land?—We have both; we have four delta taluks.

8976. Is this a dry taluk?—Rajahmandri is a dry taluk.

8977. Therefore, you have experience of dry as well as wet revenue?—Yes.

8978. Do you think the Collector could fairly have some discretion in regard to the remission of dry revenue, in the same way that he has with regard to the remission of wet revenue?—These remissions of dry revenue are most exceptional; they have not been granted, I think, since 1900, and then they were only granted in the Agency.

8979. Was that in the whole taluk?—No, in a limited portion of the taluk.

8980. What happened; did you suspend the collection of the revenue?—It was before I came into the district.

8981. You have had no experience, therefore, which would enable you to give us any opinion?—Yes, two years ago I recommended the suspension of kists in certain villages in Amalapuram; the collection was suspended till the following year.

8982. You actually ordered the suspension and then reported your action?—No, I had time to get the orders of the Board of Revenue.

8983. Then, so far as your experience goes, would it be well to give power of remission in case of dry revenue, within certain financial limits, as in the case of wet revenue, or do you think it would be an imprudent thing to do?—Dry remissions are a most exceptional thing in consideration of the settlement allowances usually made for bad seasons; it is only in a very exceptional year that there is any question of dry remissions.

8984. You have not answered my question?—It might be done up to a limit; I see no harm in it.

8985. You think it might be done without any danger to the revenue of the taluk?—I think some limit ought to be set. I think it would be rather a useful thing to have.

8986. I understand that the Forest Officer and the District Superintendent of Police are subordinate to you for administrative purposes, but independent of you for internal discipline and for technical matters?—Yes, generally speaking.

8987. But in the case of the Public Works Engineer, he is independent of you for all purposes?—Yes, he is not definitely named my "Assistant" in the same way that the others are.

8988. In the distribution of water, the authority of the Public Works Department is supreme up to the moment at which the water leaves the canal for the purpose of distribution to the individual field?—Up to the time that it reaches small bodies; that is to say, from the canal to the distributaries, until it gets into the small bodies or field channels, it is under the control of the Public Works Department.

8989. The moment it reaches the field channels it passes into your control?—No, we do not interfere with it; the distribution from field to field is left entirely to the villagers themselves.

8990. Is that a reasonable relation between yourself and the Public Works Department?—In connection with the delta I cannot quite suggest what other arrangements could be made; it would certainly be impossible for the Collector, or the Revenue Department, to supervise the distribution; it is a most intricate system of canals, and the amount of water passed into each canal is more or less to be calculated and allowed for, and it requires a technical knowledge which the Revenue Department do not possess. At the same time, I think the Collector ought to be kept better informed of what is being done in the Public Works Department. I can give an actual instance that occurred this year. The system of distribution was altered from a system of turns to a system of continuous supply; these proposals were made by the Superintending Engineer, who sent me a copy of the proposals, but I heard nothing more about it until the people came up clamouring for water; I certainly think I ought to have been told that the alteration was approved and was being put into force.

8991. Would the Executive Engineer have had occasion to refer to the Superintending Engineer for orders regarding distribution?—Yes, and it was approved by Government.

8992. But suppose he had kept you better informed, or even if he had not informed you at all, you would not have had the technical knowledge which would have enabled you to distribute the water?—No, I certainly could not have distributed the water.

8993. All you want is some earlier, and, perhaps, fuller information?—Yes, and I think it would be desirable that these things should be discussed between the Public Works Department and the Revenue Officers before the thing is carried out.

8994. A clear understanding that there should be conferences from time to time is all that is needful in your mind for establishing better relations between the Revenue and the Engineering Departments?—Yes, I think the position of Collector as head of the district ought to be more emphasised; I do not think that that is fully realised by the officers of the Public Works Department. For instance, when there is a scarcity of water, these people come clamouring to me, and I can do absolutely nothing; the whole thing is done practically without my knowing.

8995. Is there an Executive Engineer in the district?—There are two.

8996. When the people come clamouring to you, do you send them to the Executive Engineer?—That is all I can do.

8997. Do they come after they have been to the tahsildar or without going to him?—Afterwards; they generally go to the tahsildar first.

8998. Suppose the tahsildar told them that the proper person for them to go to was the Executive Engineer, might that lessen the clamour about it and save friction?—The people always say "You collect the revenue, and therefore we come to you."

8999. But if they were told that the person who distributed the water was a different person from the person who collected the revenue, they would know to whom to go?—I have told them so repeatedly.

9000. And they take no notice?—No, they say "You collect the revenue, therefore we come to you to assist us."

9001. You are Chairman, ex-officio, of the District Board?—Yes.

9002. Have you a Vice-Chairman?—Yes. At present he is the Deputy Treasury Collector.

9003. You leave to him all the details of the work of the Board?—No, as a matter of fact, he does very little more than passing bills; I do most of the work myself.

9004. Do you prepare the budget, or does he?—I prepare it personally.

9005. Do you consult any of your colleagues on the Board in preparing the budget?—I have not done so this year.

9006. But you have done so in the past?—Occasionally in the past a budget sub-committee has been appointed.

9007. Has that been of assistance to you?—The difficulty of such a budget committee is that it almost of necessity consists of members at headquarters, who are not in touch with what is going on throughout the district.

9008. But your work is heavy as President of the District Board?—It is fairly heavy, not exceedingly so.

9009. Might it not be possible to get your colleagues to work with you actively and thus relieve you of a certain amount of work?—Yes, they are always perfectly willing to sit on a committee.

9010. We have evidence that gentlemen of position and so forth will not serve on the taluk Board because they feel that there is no real work for them to do; the whole executive work being in the hands of the President or Chairman, and they really think that their presence there is superfluous; would you say that that is so?—We have had non-official Vice-Presidents; I do not think I ever found anyone that I asked to go on the Board refuse.

9011. Or, without having refused, as soon as his term of office came to an end, he declined to have a further nomination?—I have never had such a case.

9012. Speaking broadly, could some further delegation of power advantageously be made to the District and taluk Boards?—You mean of the powers now reserved to Government?

9013. Or powers exercised by yourself; if you gave them some greater responsibility, although they would probably make mistakes at first, yet would the result be that, having bought their experience, they would gradually learn to exercise their powers?—Yes, I should like to have a system of sub-committees, and put the sub-committees in charge of specific subjects; to put one, for instance, in charge of roads, another in charge, say, of vaccination, and another in charge, say, of dispensaries. I should like to have some such allocation of work. The difficulty about it would be to get the members; living all over the district they would probably find it somewhat inconvenient to come to such sub-committees, which would have to meet oftener than once a month.

9014. How many members are there on your Board?—Thirty-two.

9015. And on the taluk Board as a rule?—From 13 to 18, according to the size of the subdivision.

9016. Do you think that their size could be advantageously increased or diminished?—Yes, you would get more parts of the district represented.

9017. You would rather like to see their size increased?—It might be an advantage; that is to say, you would get more representative men. So far as the District Boards are concerned, I try to get representatives from all the different portions of the districts.

9018. Are there many classes and creeds in this Collectorate?—Yes.

9019. Are they all fairly represented on the Boards?—As usual, of course, the Brahmans predominate here.

9020. In numbers are they by far the largest caste?—Roughly; the Brahmans represent about one-twentieth of the population of the district; considerably more than one-twentieth of the District Board are Brahmans.

9023. Would you extend to the panchayat jurisdiction in petty criminal cases?—I see no objection to its being done.

9024. It might be a useful experiment to try?—Yes, I should be quite prepared to try it in petty criminal matters, in the same way as we are now trying it in petty civil matters.

9025. Would you entrust the control of the elementary school to such a body?—I am somewhat doubtful if that would work well.

9026. You think in the case of the school there might be such an irreconcilable difference between factions and sects in the village that the school would not prosper?—Yes.

9027. There might be some exclusive action on the part of one faction as against another?—I am doubtful whether it would work well as a general rule; it might be done in particular cases; you might hand over particular schools to a particular panchayat.

9028. Would you entrust such a body with the duty of providing village wells, or some simple function of that sort?—Yes; do you mean out of money granted by the Local Board?

Mr. J. A.
Crumming.

4 Dec., 1907.

9029. Or perhaps raised by a small cess on the village?—I should not recommend that.

9030. You think that the possibility of the imposition of a cess would render it unpopular?—Undoubtedly. Only the other day in Kottapetta I was besieged by the population, who wanted the municipality abolished because the house tax had been increased.

9031. Have you ever had any petition, or have you ever had any action taken by the inhabitants of a place which it was proposed to create into a municipality, praying that the municipality should not be created on account of the fear of the possible imposition of taxes or rates?—The only municipality I remember being created was a Hill municipality; there were no representations against it. Generally speaking, I think when it is proposed to constitute a place into a municipality, there is strong objection to it; I remember, for instance, the case of Sriwillipatur, in Tinneveli. When that was constituted a municipality, it was strongly objected to by the inhabitants.

9032. (Sir Frederic Lely.) According to the old raiyatwari system the business of an officer doing the jamabandi was to pass in review every village; to fix the revenue, to draw conclusions as to the prosperity or otherwise of the village, and finally to interview such villagers as he thought it desirable to see?—That is the general idea.

9033. In your district has not the jamabandi become more or less mere routine?—Yes, I think that is so.

9034. How many villages would there be in charge of one Sub-Divisional Officer, that is one officer taking the jamabandi?—An officer usually takes about two taluks in the year; he would probably take 100 or 200 villages in the two taluks.

9035. About how many taluks are there in each subdivision?—It varies; for instance in this subdivision there are three.

9036. Averaging about 300 villages in each charge?—No, I take 100 to 200, roughly, for the two taluks.

9037. Then a Divisional Officer roughly has about 200 villages under him?—At jamabandi, yes.

9038. So that he ought to be able to devote about half an hour to each village?—Yes.

9039. Could he do that if he tried, with due recognition of his other work? My point is whether he has sufficient time in these districts to do the work of the jamabandi as it was formerly conceived?—I do not think so, because now he has got his magisterial work always pressing on him, even during jamabandi.

9040. You think he is obliged to neglect some of the essential work of the jamabandi owing to engrossment in other duties, or what is the reason why he does not come up to the standard?—There is no doubt that his work has increased very largely in recent years, and at jamabandi he really has not time to pass a village in any detail; he only takes a rough general idea.

9041. As a matter of fact, he leaves the examination of the accounts and registers to clerks?—Very largely.

9042. And the audience which he ought to give to the villagers as a rule does not take place?—Oh, yes, the villagers come up.

9043. His report may be a very plausible report, but as a matter of fact it is usually a statement of work done by clerks?—So far as the checking of the accounts, and that sort of thing goes, it is very largely clerks' work.

9044. The general statement of the course of the jamabandi refers to work not done by him personally, but by clerks?—So far as regards checking the accounts. Every man who comes up is heard, and if he has a complaint to make, for instance, about any charge that is made, the accounts are brought out and the matter is gone through on the spot.

9045. Then, so far, the work of the jamabandi has not degenerated?—Well, I am only referring to a particular charge. If a man comes and says he is charged too much here or too much there, the account is looked up and investigated, and he is told what the reason is, or, if the charge is found to be incorrect, it is corrected then and there.

9046. But as a rule at the jamabandi the villagers have free access to the Divisional Officer, and use it?—Yes; as every village is taken up, petitions are called, and the petitioner is asked to come up; in some taluks they come up, in some they do not. For instance, in Amalapur I have done jamabandi twice, and on both occasions there were troops of villagers who came along. I did the jamabandi at Ramachandrapur this year, and very few came up. It varies from taluk to taluk.

9047. You think as a general suggestion that the old spirit of the jamabandi still survives to some extent?—Yes, certainly, to some extent.

9048. The village papers are very numerous; something over a hundred for each village?—Yes.

9049. The crop returns are very heavy?—Yes.

9050. The irrigation accounts are extremely intricate?—Extremely so.

9051. Would it be worth while to call in an expert in accounts to overhaul all these village accounts?—I think it would be a very good thing indeed to have an expert accountant.

9052. We hear a good deal about the Collector being over-burdened, but is not the tahsildar also overworked in these districts?—Yes, very much; even though he has been relieved of his magisterial work, he is still over-worked.

9053. Is there anything in the complaint that he has lost a good deal of influence in society by the loss of his magisterial powers?—That is undoubtedly so.

9054. And yet he is still called upon to do a great deal of what we may call semi-official work, and exercise semi-official influence on the part of the Government?—Yes.

9055. Is he enough trusted; might some power be delegated to him? For instance, a small village officer dies; has the tahsildar power to insert in that man's place the name of his son, for instance?—his undoubted heir?—No.

9056. Do you not think he might have the power?—Yes.

9057. That would cover a large class of cases?—Yes.

9058. What possible harm would there be in allowing him to insert the name of the deceased man's son or heir in cases where there was no doubt about it?—In cases that are not doubtful he certainly might do it, but these offices are very keenly competed for, and you generally find a very large number of applicants.

9059. But take a case where a man leaves a son?—In such cases the tahsildar might very well be given that power.

9060. Take another case; suppose a man wants to take a little gravel or sand out of Government land; can the tahsildar give him leave?—Yes, the tahsildar can grant that.

9061. Have you any idea how many reports the tahsildar has to make in the course of a year?—There are an enormous number of periodical reports.

9062. Has that list been carefully revised of recent years?—It was revised, if I remember rightly, two or three years ago.

9063. Do you not think it might be revised again?—Yes, I think these things should be revised very frequently.

9064. Then as to measures taken to relieve the tahsildar, the most noteworthy of recent years has been his release from magisterial work?—Yes.

9065. You have now what is called a stationary sub-magistrate?—In most taluks, not in all.

9066. What class of man is he chosen from?—From clerks generally.

9067. Clerks either in the tahsildar's office, or sometimes the Collector's office?—Yes, from the revenue offices of the district.

9068. Has he had any training in magisterial work?—None at all, unless he has happened to be the magisterial clerk in my office.

9069. Or the tahsildar's office?—A sub-magistrate cannot come from the tahsildar's office; the lowest pay a sub-magistrate draws is Rs. 100, and there is nobody in the tahsildar's office who would be promoted to that.

9070. There are some in the accountant's office?—There is the taluk head accountant.

9071. Those who have passed at any rate part of their novitiate in the tahsildar's office will have been, if what we have heard is correct, for some time in a corrupt atmosphere?—No doubt there is a great deal of corruption goes on in the tahsildar's office, and there is a great deal of corruption goes on in my own office.

9072. It is not the sort of training ground that you would suggest for a magistrate?—It is not the best.

9073. He gets what salary?—From Rs. 100 to Rs. 120 a month.

9074. He has second-class magisterial powers?—He begins with third-class powers, then goes on to second-class, with powers to commit.

9075. In a suspected murder, in the ordinary course of things the case is handled first of all by a doctor, whose pay may be Rs. 25 a month, who makes the post-mortem examination?—A Hospital Assistant.

9076. Then by a Second Class Magistrate, who is a promoted clerk?—Mostly a promoted clerk.

9077. Do you think that that is a system which is likely to inspire confidence among the people?—There is no doubt it is putting tremendous power in the hands both of the Hospital Assistant and the sub-magistrate—the Hospital Assistant more particularly so.

9078. Might one not almost call it an essential reform to substitute for these promoted clerks men of better status—the status of Deputy Collectors or Divisional Officers—to do the magisterial work of the taluk?—It would be a very expensive business. We have made a beginning. I have, for instance, in my office, what is known as a revenue probationer, a man who is appointed on Rs. 70; he is in training for a sub-magistrate and deputy tahsildar.

9079. A considerable part of the work of the Divisional Officer consists in examining calendars, does it not?—Yes.

9080. Who does that, you yourself, or the Divisional Officer?—The second and third-class calendars are sent to the Divisional Magistrate; he is supposed to read them and then send them on to me.

9081. Do you trust, more or less, to his revision?—I must. Some years ago I asked the High Court to stop these calendars being sent to me, because it was a physical impossibility for me to read them.

9082. You get some thousands in a year?—I think it was something like 17,000 in the old district.

9083. Have the Sub-Divisional Officers time to thoroughly examine them?—As a matter of fact I do not think the Sub-Divisional Officer reads them all; he generally knows his sub-magistrates pretty well, and knows whose calendars want careful reading.

9084. Does he carefully revise the work of the sub-magistrates?—When I was Sub-Divisional Officer I certainly did; I will not say I read them all, but I certainly read most.

9085. You speak about the tahsildar being overloaded; is the Sub-Divisional Officer overloaded also?—It varies according to the division.

9086. Has he sufficient power in the district; has he powers in excise, for instance?—No, practically none.

9087. Or in Court of Wards?—Sometimes.

9088. But he has no responsibility in connection with the Court of Wards?—When I was Head Assistant Collector in Trichinopoly I was in charge of an estate.

9089. You mean in responsible charge?—Yes, I was the administrator of the estate; I had to sign the bills and that sort of thing.

9090. You do not think it advisable to entrust the Sub-Divisional Officer with these powers?—Yes, if the estate is confined to his division.

9091. Then has he anything to do with land acquisition?—He does it all practically, except in petty cases, which the tahsildar does.

9092. Does the Divisional Officer take any interest in irrigation?—Certainly.

9093. Has he any power in irrigation?—He is in charge, for instance, of repairs in regard to minor irrigation works.

9094. Then what about education: does he take any interest in that, or is he expected to?—As President of the taluk Board, he is manager of a considerable number of schools.

9095. And as President of the taluk Board he can issue orders with respect to them?—Yes.

9096. Has he any connection with land records; has he any control over the revenue inspectors?—Yes.

9097. Can he give orders?—The land records establishment has only been started a short time in this district.

9098. Is it altogether separate from the Divisional Officer, or is the Divisional Officer expected to take an interest in it?—He is certainly expected to take an interest in it.

9099. And he has authority in it?—Yes, he has authority in a general way over the land records inspector, not the tahsildar.

9100. Do you think the Collector delegates enough power to the Divisional Officer generally?—The Collector cannot delegate any power to the Divisional Officer.

9101. Do you think he ought to do so?—Yes, I think he might well be allowed to do that.

9102. Do you think that the Divisional Officer is not sufficiently the delegate of the Collector?—There are so many different Divisional Officers; you might have an Assistant of a few years' standing, or you might have an officer of 10 years' standing; in the case of the officer of 10 years' standing, he is in training to become a Collector.

9103. You would give the Collector power to discriminate between the officers under him in delegating any powers to them?—Certainly; I think, as a matter of fact, the fairly senior Divisional Officer ought to have considerable powers.

9104. Has not the tendency of late been to meet new work by adding subordinates who work immediately under the Collector instead of delegating to the Divisional Officer?—Take the land records, for instance, the land records tahsildar is more or less attached to the Collector's office.

9105. The Divisional Officer stands aloof?—He is expected to advise in a very general way.

9106. But he has no power to give orders to the tahsildar?—No, I think probably he would ask for my permission if he wanted him to do a particular piece of work.

9107. So far as that tendency operates, a gap is formed between the Collector and the Divisional Officer by the creation of a second set of duties, as it were, in the Collector's hands, which he exercises through these subordinates and not through the Divisional Officer?—I think the land records tahsildar is about the only one that I could mention.

9108. How about the income tax; does not the Collector do part of that work through his special Income Tax Deputy Collector?—No, there is only one district that has a special Income Tax Deputy Collector, that is the Madura district.

Mr. J. A.

Mr. J. A.
Cumming.
4 Dec., 1907.

9109. We have been told that a Divisional Officer when he has to deal with a file of a case, does not get that file read to him and then pass an order upon it?—He has an office note, but to read the whole of the enormous files that come up is impossible.

9110. Does the office note place all the facts in his hands?—Yes, and there is no doubt that, if it is an important matter, he will refer to the original papers after having read through the note.

9111. That is a particularly important case?—Yes.

9112. But he ordinarily does his work simply on the strength of these office notes?—Yes, certainly, all routine work.

9113. I take it that a reform in the Divisional Officer's position might also be possible by diminishing his charge; is his charge very big at present in any cases?—Yes, some of the divisions are very large.

9114. In the case of the Collector he is also an over-burdened man. He has in your district charge of a number of small tanks?—The Collector is in charge of what are called minor irrigation works—tanks irrigating less than 200 acres.

9115. Is that suitable work for him? Whom has he to assist him in that work—what professional aid does he get?—In this district I have got a minor irrigation overseer and several sub-overseers.

9116. Is he on the regular list of the Public Works Department?—No he is confined to the district.

9117. Then he is not a man of very high qualifications?—No.

9118. He has no promotion to look forward to?—No.

9119. Is that sufficient to enable you to take proper charge of so many small works?—I think it is more or less carried out by way of compromise; the Public Works Department objected to take charge of these petty works and handed them over to the Revenue Department.

9120. Do you mean that that is satisfactory?—About as satisfactory as any other compromise.

9121. Then also, as President of the Local Board, you have charge of the roads?—Not all the roads—the main lines of communication.

9122. Is that a satisfactory arrangement, or might the main roads not be handed over to the Public Works Department?—I have always urged strongly that the main lines should be under the Government in the same way as in France, for instance.

9123. Then as to income tax, you hear appeals from your Divisional Officer?—Yes.

9124. The tahsildar is the assessing officer up to Rs. 2,000?—Yes, and the deputy tahsildar in independent charge. We have certain zemindari divisions which are in charge of the deputy tahsildars.

9125. Then up to how much by the Divisional Officer?—Up to Rs. 10,000.

9126. I suppose the Divisional Officer assesses on the report of the tahsildar?—It is supposed to be supplemented by his own inquiries; it is very largely on the report of the tahsildar.

9127. Would it not rather reduce work to give the tahsildar a larger power—to allow him to go up to Rs. 5,000, we will say—as it is virtually, I take it, on his report that the Divisional Officer acts?—That is a fairly big jump, I think.

9128. Or something less, say Rs. 3,000 or Rs. 4,000?—Yes, you might give the tahsildar increased powers now; he has been administering the Income Tax Act for many years, and knows it quite well now.

9129. Virtually he is the man who assesses?—Yes, that is so.

9130. And it would be as well that he should take the direct responsibility to a certain extent?—Yes, on general principles, that is so.

9131. As to education, do you consider yourself as having any responsibility for education in your district; I am speaking now of higher education? Have you got a Training College?—There is a Training College here.

9132. Do you consider yourself at all responsible for it; suppose that discipline is relaxed, do you consider yourself responsible for it?—I certainly have never done so hitherto.

9133. Do you, as a matter of fact, visit the Training College at all?—No, I do not; I have been in the Arts College and the Training College when the Governor visited them.

9134. You do not recognise any official responsibility for that?—No, I cannot say that I do.

9135. In the same way, in the matter of excise, do you recognise any responsibility for any malpractices or mistakes in that department?—Yes, certainly.

9136. For instance, suppose a tree tax was levied, which had the effect of depriving the people of a necessary food in hot weather, would you consider yourself responsible for that in any way?—No change is made in the excise administration except on my report; such changes are proposed by me.

9137. You would not think yourself called upon to interfere?—It could not be done without my knowledge.

9138. If it came to your knowledge you would consider yourself bound to act, or would you report it to the Board of Revenue?—Yes, as a matter of fact I have done so in several cases.

9139. You recognise more responsibility in the case of excise than you do in education?—Yes.

9140. As to relief to the Collector, what would you suggest; would it be possible to give him more time for contact with the people and general liberty; would you approve of a Personal Assistant?—I do not think a Personal Assistant would be very useful. One does not know exactly what to give him; there must be a certain number of things that come under a more or less unimportant class which it is still desirable that the Collector should know about.

9141. Then there is nothing further that you can suggest to set the Collectors more free?—One remedy that has been suggested is to reduce the area of the district. This district formerly comprised 4 taluks on the other side of the Godavari; the eastern portions were taken away so as to give us more time to attend to our work.

9142. You think that that might be extended further?—Yes, I think the districts in Madras are too large.

9143. (Mr. Dutt.) Have you any powers of ordering remission on the failure of wet crops?—Yes, the Divisional Officers have power to grant remission in those cases.

9144. Has the Divisional Officer got the same powers as the Collector in regard to wet remissions?—Yes.

9145. I suppose your power extends to granting remissions when the crops are less than one-sixteenth of the average?—Yes, what we call constructive loss, practically total loss.

9146. So that practically if what we call 14 annas of the crop is lost you have no power to grant remission; if seven-eighths of the crop is lost you have no power to grant remission?—My recollection is that according to the latest order I have powers, so long as I am satisfied that practically the crop is lost.

9147. If three-fourths of the crop is lost under the present rules have you any power to grant remission?—No.

9148. Do you think that an extension of powers to the Collector is desirable, when three-fourths of the crop has failed, do you not think that the Collector ought to have the power of granting remission?—We have never recognised it as necessary to grant remission in those cases. I do not think I should recommend it.

9149. When you speak of three-fourths of the crop do you mean three-fourths of the average?—Three-fourths of the normal average crop as opposed to a bumper crop.

9150. Do you think that that is so in the case of irrigation rates—that the present policy of the Government is largely dominated by considerations of revenue; I am referring to the present irrigation rates introduced since the last settlement?—I think in every settlement the interests of the cultivators are taken into consideration, so far as we can.

9151. I am speaking not of the settlement, but of the irrigation rates which you now levy?—That is essentially a matter of settlement; those are fixed at the settlement on the reports of the Settlement Officers after their investigation and calculations of cultivation expenses and so forth.

9152. You do not think that there is any undue influence of revenue considerations in the settlement of these rates?—I should hardly think so. I might quote, for instance, the case of the tahuk of Bhimavaram; so far as my memory goes, in the last settlement the total demand there was reduced.

9153. Generally, have these rates been reduced or increased since the time of the last settlement?—Necessarily increased; prices have gone up so much. As a matter of fact I remember many years ago in Madura on the first settlement scheme there was a large increase; the Government refused to accept the scheme; a second scheme was drawn up, in which the increase was less, and still the Government refused to pass it; only the third scheme was passed.

9154. There are certain crops which you call double crops—crops which stand on the ground several months?—Which stand on the ground for over six months.

9155. In those cases you realise 50 per cent. more than the ordinary consolidated rates, do you not?—Fifty per cent. more than the consolidated rates.

9156. Is it 50 per cent. more of the irrigation rate, or is it 50 per cent. more of the consolidated land and irrigation rate?—It is 50 per cent. more of the consolidated land and irrigation rate in wet lands; 50 per cent. more of the irrigation rate in dry lands.

9157. So that when the crop stands on the ground for more than six months, and presumably wants more water, you not only charge the cultivator more for water, but you also enhance the rent by 50 per cent.?—Yes, roughly.

9158. Have you much pasture lands—communal grazing lands—in your district?—In the delta there are none; in the up-lands there are some.

9159. Have you had much pasture lands in the districts where you have been before—I mean communal grazing lands for cultivators for grazing their cattle?—No, not to any extent.

9160. Is it within your knowledge that many of the old communal pasture lands have now been taken by the Forest Department as forest reserves?—No; it is not within my knowledge.

9161. Do you think that cultivators as a rule feel much difficulty and hardship for want of adequate pasture and grazing lands?—Yes. For instance, take the delta; when the cultivation season comes round, all the cattle are driven up to the up-lands; of course that is because the whole of the delta, every acre of it, is under cultivation.

9162. You have spoken of the instalments of revenue—the kists. Are the kists generally fixed in consideration of the time when the crops are reaped by the cultivator?—Yes, that is a general rule.

9163. The kists generally are in January, February, and March, are they not?—It varies in different districts. Here, they are in December, January, February and March for dry lands, and January, February, and March for wet lands.

9164. Do you think the cultivators are able to sell their crops before those months so as to pay the land revenue?—I have often heard it said that they could not.

9165. So that there are many cases in which the cultivators are put to hardship because their kists are too early?—That is quite possible.

9166. You have heard complaints about it?—Yes.

9167. Do you not think that you as Collector ought to have the power of postponing the kists, say by a month or so, to suit the convenience of the cultivators?—Under what circumstances?

9168. The rules are inelastic now?—I cannot postpone the kists except in exceptional circumstances; I can recommend that a kist be postponed, and if I have not received orders in time I can, on my own responsibility, postpone the kist and report my action; that is in exceptional cases—exceptional calamities and so on.

9169. But generally if you find that the cultivators cannot reap their crops till January, but the Government demand the revenue in December; what remedy would you suggest?—Alter the kistbandi.

9170. Is it within your knowledge that the Government demand the land revenue before the cultivators have time to gather their crops?—I cannot quote specific instances.

9171. Have there been any complaints to you about it?—I have heard it occasionally when I have been in camp. There is no general complaint about it.

9172. Have you also heard that, as the crops were not reaped, the village servants have advanced the money, and afterwards got it from the cultivators because the demand came too early?—I have frequently asked the tahsildars if that is so; the tahsildars have not admitted it; I think as a matter of fact there are such cases. I should say these are petty sums, perhaps 5 or 10 or 20 rupees, which it is difficult to get in, and in order to show a clean balance the village officer pays it all up and recovers it afterwards. There is no doubt that that is done, although of course they deny it.

9173. If it was a general case you would recommend an alteration of the kists?—The two cases are hardly connected. I am referring to cases where probably the whole demand of the village, except a few rupees, has been collected, and in order to show a clean balance the village officer himself pays up the small sum and afterwards gets the money from the raiyats; it only applies to small sums.

9174. If it was a general practice that the rate was demanded before the crop could be reaped, you would recommend an alteration of the kist?—Yes; that must of course go up to Government because these kists affect the financial position.

9175. You would not ask for that power to be given to yourself as Collector?—I do not think it would be granted, because, as I say, any alteration of the kists affects the Government balances.

9176. You do not think you ought to have the power?—No, I do not think so.

9177. You have spoken of the creation of panchayats and of entrusting to them certain duties. Might one of the duties which it would be suitable to entrust to village panchayats, if they were formed, be the distribution of water in the village?—At present that is entrusted to the village officer; it might be entrusted to the panchayats; I suppose you mean a panchayat of five. It might be tried as an experiment. Probably the members of the panchayat would get a very good share of the water, in the same way as now the village officer gets a very good share of the water.

9178. You said that you would not entrust them with the management of primary schools on account of factions?—Yes; and also the sort of panchayat you would get in most villages would know so very little of what to expect from, and what to be done in, a school.

Mr. J. A. Cumming.

4 Dec., 1907.

Mr. J. A.
Cumming
4 Dec., 1907.

9179. You would not trust the supervision and inspection of those schools to the panchayat?—Do you mean the actual teaching?

9180. Seeing whether the boys attend and that the teachers attend in proper time and so forth?—Yes, I would certainly allow them to do that, but as regards the actual teaching I do not think in most villages you would get a panchayat who could do that.

9181. You say that in one or two instances small committees were formed under District Boards to settle the budgets?—Yes.

9182. Was that under any particular section of the Local Self-Government Act?—There is one section of the Local Boards Act which says that District Boards may pass rules with regard to sub-committees and the division of duties among the members.

9183. Does not that section speak only of specific matters like dispensaries, schools, and choultries; there is no mention of budgets or roads in that section?—I have not got the Act here, but my recollection is that the section is sufficiently general to allow of these sub-committees for most purposes.

9184. If it be the case that it relates only to specific subjects, would you extend the section so as to enable the District Board to appoint sub-committees for other purposes if they think fit?—Yes. That has been done before now; there has been a sub-committee for the budget. I see no objection to that at all.

9185. You said you would rather have the District Boards as Advisory Councils than create new Advisory Councils?—Yes; if there is to be any Advisory Board I think the District Board ought to be used for the purpose. With regard to that, I presume that only the specific questions would be referred to them which the Government directed the Collector to consult them upon, just as the Government used to desire the Collector to take the opinion of his sherishtadar on certain questions. The idea, I suppose, would be to trust them to represent the local feeling on particular subjects.

9186. There may be cases in which the Collector himself, without any orders from the Government, might like to have the advice of leading men; in those cases also do you think the District Board would do?—Yes, I think they would do fairly well in such cases.

9187. When plague relief measures are undertaken and the question of inoculation is considered and people have to be induced to submit to inoculation, do you think the District Board as such would be sufficient for that purpose, or would you rather have another Advisory Board?—As regards such matters as plague inoculation I do not understand how they could advise.

9188. But they could explain to the people the necessity of the measures?—Yes.

9189. Would you rather work through the District Board or have a separate Advisory Board?—In the case of such things as plague it would probably be confined to certain localities, and you would have to supplement it; probably for that purpose the District Board would not be sufficient. Of course, in connection with plague we have Vigilance Committees and all that sort of thing.

9190. The District Board has some specific duties to perform under the Act?—Yes, the Act lays down the duties of the District Board, the taluk Board, and the union.

9191. If you add largely to these duties would it be necessary to revise and amend the Act accordingly so as to include these fresh duties, which are not contemplated by the present Act?—I do not think so. The Collector could always consult the members at the conclusion of the District Board meeting.

9192. You have spoken of village unions being exceedingly unpopular because of the house tax which they are allowed to impose. As a matter of fact do the villagers reap sufficient benefit from the proceeds of the house tax?—The money is usually spent on keeping the roads in order and sweeping them, or on a well, and things like that. So far, I have found the most popular thing of all is the lighting.

9193. But is it not the fact that most of the money is spent in the payment of servants and sweepers?—Yes, a good deal.

9194. And very little of it is left for other improvements?—Yes; in one or two cases I have found that very largely so; in particular I remember two unions in Madura.

9195. You have spoken of the deputy tahsildars as promoted clerks—men who were drawing 15 and 20 rupees before, and then made sub-tahsildars?—Practically all are men like that; some of them started much higher.

9196. Is that not the case with the tahsildars also?—Yes.

9197. They begin with 15 or 20 rupees?—Practically all, though there are exceptions, of course.

9198. Would it not be a better system to have some other method of selecting them so as to get men on better pay and of better education?—It is certainly not an ideal system. It could be improved. I have appointed some law graduates on Rs. 30, and then promoted them rapidly to be deputy tahsildars.

9199. (Mr. Hichens.) You said just now you had had sub-committees for the budget and purposes of that sort?—Yes.

9200. But you gave them up?—Sometimes we have had a sub-committee, sometimes not; there has been no regular rule.

9201. Why did you give them up—was it that you found they did not work?—As I say, for a committee of that sort you have to confine your selection to men at headquarters; the people from a distance could not attend.

9202. You gave them up because they were not altogether satisfactory?—No, I will not say they were unsatisfactory.

9203. Then there was some other reason?—I do not know that there was any particular reason.

9204. The members of village unions are nominated?—Yes, all nominated.

9205. Who recommends them in the first instance?—The recommendation comes from the president of the taluk Board to the President of the District Board.

9206. Is the Divisional Officer President of the taluk Board?—Yes.

9207. And he makes the recommendation to you?—Yes.

9208. Do you pass it on to the Board of Revenue and the Government?—No, I decide it myself; they generally send up two or three names.

9209. And you have full power of selection?—Yes.

9210. Have you power to select for the taluk Board, too?—No, that I send up to the Government.

9211. Do you think you might have that power?—Yes, going to Government is purely formal; the nomination is always accepted.

9212. It would save a reference if you could decide it yourself?—I think so.

9213. With regard to the District Board, should the nomination go to Government?—Well, it is a pure formality; the nomination is always accepted. Some of the members of the District Board are elected by the taluk Boards.

9214. You think then in that case, too, the final power might rest with you?—Possibly in the case of the District Board it should go up to Government.

9215. Might it go to the Board of Revenue and be decided by them?—There is no particular reason why it should not go to the Board of Revenue.

9216. Are the members of the Municipal Boards elected or nominated?—A certain number are elected and a certain number are nominated; it varies in different municipalities.

9217. Who nominates them?—In the case of municipalities the nomination comes from the Divisional Officer, and he as a rule gets nominations from the tahsildar; occasionally the Chairman suggests a name.

9218. Is your decision final?—No, it has to go to Government.

9219. Is that necessary?—No—in the same way as in the case of the taluk Boards.

9220. You think it might rest with you?—It might; the nominations are invariably accepted by Government; it is a pure formality.

9221. Your district is divided up into subdivisions?—There are three in what we call the plains and two in the Agency; five altogether.

9222. Is there a Sub-Divisional Officer in charge of each?—Yes.

9223. So that you have no direct territorial charge?—No; that was amended several years ago.

9224. One may say that practically everything comes to you at second hand through the Sub-Divisional Officers?—Yes, practically that is so; of course, certain enquiries are made by me, but as a rule everything comes up to me second-hand.

9225. So that to some extent you are in the position of a post office; a recommendation comes to you from the Divisional Officer, and it has to be sent on by you with a covering note to the Government approving or disapproving?—Do you mean so far as these nominations are concerned?

9226. So far as everything is concerned, speaking broadly, a large number of subjects must come to you which you simply send on?—You mean that I merely send them on with an endorsement; no, that is not so.

9227. Do you write fully on every subject that has to go to Government?—Yes; practically the only thing in which I am a post office concerns matters coming from Municipal Councils or taluk Boards; there I am more or less a post office.

9228. All these returns, for example?—All those have to be compiled in my own office.

9229. In regard to panchayats you say that you are in favour of giving the system a trial in connection with certain minor duties which have been suggested to you by various members of this Commission?—Yes, petty civil and criminal matters.

9230. Could you devote the necessary time to making these panchayats a success?—You mean personally?

9231. Personally, or through your Divisional Officers personally?—I do not think so. Look at the number of communities you have to deal with; in the plains alone you have about 800 villages.

9232. You would agree that if the thing is to be tried it must be given a good trial—that they may require nursing during their infancy?—That is very probable indeed.

9233. If you think that panchayats are desirable, could you supervise them with the machinery you have got, or would you have an ad hoc officer, or extra assistance of a general kind, or what? If you are to have a panchayat it would be a good thing, would it not, to have one or more officers whose business it should be to organise these bodies?—I agree with the general principle.

9234. It should be his function to establish and develop the panchayats; you think that that is desirable?—Yes, on general grounds; if you are to introduce a matter of that sort, it is desirable to have a man whose special duty and special interest it is to organise and look after the bodies. As to whether he is likely or not to make a success of it, I should not like to express an opinion; but, on general grounds, I quite agree with the advisability of having a special man at the beginning.

9235. Do you think that this should be introduced gradually—that you should start in a few villages with a small number of these panchayats—and extend them gradually?—Undoubtedly.

9236. How would you find the money for such small expenditure as the panchayats would require?—I do not know where you could find it; as a matter of fact the District Board and the taluk Board are as hard up as they can be; they cannot find the money.

9237. If you were to give the imposition of the house tax to the panchayat, that would kill the scheme?—Undoubtedly.

9238. Therefore you must contemplate some other scheme of financing them?—If it is necessary.

9239. Do you think it would not be necessary?—I do not understand that you would start these panchayats in every village with funds to administer; if so, I do not know where the funds would come from.

9240. You think it is quite possible to start panchayats with no funds at all?—Yes, and give them certain things to do.

9241. As honorary work?—Yes, in the same way that our Bench Courts now are purely honorary, and they have been established in 29 villages in the district.

9242. Would you abolish village unions or convert them into panchayats?—If you convert them into panchayats it would stop the sweeping and lighting and so on.

9243. Would you abolish them or not?—I think you must have a village union; I do not know where else the money is to come from.

9244. (Mr. Meyer.) As regards language, are not Tamil and Telugu allied languages?—Yes.

9245. Assuming that a man made himself familiar with Tamil and was then posted to a Telugu district, or vice versa, should he not be able to acquire the second vernacular within a moderate period?—It depends very largely on the man. I do not know how I can answer that as a general question.

9246. With reference to the question asked you about unpassed candidates; the object of the rule restricting the appointment of unpassed candidates is the encouragement of education?—Yes.

9247. The rule is that you have free selection subject to the man having a certain minimum educational qualification?—Yes.

9248. If everybody was allowed a free hand in dispensing with that rule would not education suffer?—I do not think so; I suggested that it need not go up to the Board of Revenue, but that the Collector should be empowered to do it.

9249. If the Collector had a general dispensing power, might there not be a risk of unpassed candidates being put in when passed candidates were available?—I do not think so.

9250. Here in this district you have more than one College?—We have a first grade and a second grade College, yet I cannot get anything like the number of men I want. I am constantly sending up men for exemption.

9251. You tell us that certain new rules have been made for the distribution of water, which I understand were quite a departure from what was already in existence?—Yes, it was a system of continuous distribution as opposed to the system of distribution by turns.

9252. Might you not have been able to criticise these rules, without any knowledge as an engineer, in regard to their effect upon the raiyat?—In a general way, the raiyats object to any change. One very good point in these rules has been to eliminate the delta superintendent. If that could be done, well and good. As far as I can make out now from my experience, the high lands in the delta have been rather ignored.

9253. The complaint is that the effect of these rules has been to cut off the water from lands which stand somewhat higher than others?—Yes, they do not get water so easily and freely.

Mr. J. A.
Cumming.
4 Dec., 1907.

Mr. J. A.
Canning.

3 Dec., 1907.

9254. And those lands are assessed as wet lands?—That is so.

9255. Was that a matter on which you could profitably have expressed an opinion as a Collector?—Yes.

9256. You got those rules from the Superintending Engineer?—Yes.

9257. Suppose you had objected to anything in the rules, what would your procedure have been?—I presume I should have had to send the matter up to the Board of Revenue, who presumably would have consulted the Chief Engineer or something of that sort.

9258. Could you not have addressed the Superintending Engineer and said, "I do not agree with your rules; please reconsider them"?—Yes, I might have done that. In the meantime the matter had gone up to Government. (He sent me a copy of his report to Government for information.)

9259. The report had gone up to Government before you had an opportunity of criticising it; is that what you say?—Yes, that is so.

9260. Did you make any complaint about that?—No.

9261. May I take it that your opinion is that, apart from the merits of the rules, it would have saved time if those rules had been sent to you and discussed with you locally in the first instance?—I think it would have been much better to have discussed them first.

9262. Having received the rules, you saw no particular cause to criticise on this occasion?—No, I did not feel sure enough of what was likely to happen.

9263. But since then you have had complaints from the raiyats?—Yes, I have had complaints.

9264. Complaints as to these fields which received no irrigation although they were assessed as wet?—There are no fields that receive no irrigation; the complaint was that the water supply was not sufficient.

9265. Can you tell us why these fields were assessed as wet at the last settlement?—The general principle followed at the last settlement was that all fields should be classed as wet from which water could not be excluded, and that seems to have been interpreted somewhat widely; there are no doubt some high lands in the delta which should not have been so classed.

9266. Would not another method have been that of taking the number of years during which a field had actually been irrigated?—You mean taking 5 years; that is the rule we followed; I am not sure whether we follow it now.

9267. Do you receive the Public Works budget in your district regularly?—Yes.

9268. Do you find occasion to make remarks on that?—I do not think there is sufficient detail in it; it simply shows lump sums.

9269. Have you asked for information on that?—I have occasionally.

9270. Have you found that your suggestions have been followed?—Yes, they have been followed; of course it takes a rather long time to carry these things out, but my suggestions have been followed.

9271. You have no cause of complaint therefore that Public Works Officers disregard your suggestions?—No, they do not disregard them.

9272. You spoke just now of it being a matter of satisfaction that these new rules excluded the delta superintendent; why?—Because if you have a system of continuous distribution it is not worked in the same way as if you are irrigating by turns. If you are irrigating by turns, it means that at certain times you have got to close a sluice here and open a sluice there, and all that has to be done by the superintendent.

9273. It is left to the discretion of the delta superintendent?—It was not, as a matter of fact; it is supposed to be according to a regular system of turns, but everybody knows that it is not so worked; they vary it according to what they consider necessary.

9274. About minor irrigation tanks, they are entirely in your own hands?—Yes.

9275. Are you thereby enabled to give prompt redress to the raiyats who complain that the tanks are silted up or otherwise in need of repair?—If by prompt redress you mean getting the tank repaired within a year for instance, yes, it can be done; I can sanction estimates up to a certain amount.

9276. Provided of course that you have the funds available?—Yes. I get a certain allotment, and I can sanction estimates against that allotment, apart from masonry works, which have to be checked by the Public Works Department.

9277. Would you regard it as satisfactory that you could do the same with respect to larger tanks, having of course a larger allotment?—I would rather not undertake that; I do not think that that should be entrusted to the Collector. Do you mean with the same staff as we have now?

9278. No, perhaps with a superior staff?—I think that is rather beyond a Collector's work. You mean that I should be actually responsible for seeing these repairs carried out?

9279. That you should have discretion in regard to repairs and should not have to go to some other officer, or to send any raiyat who complained on to some other officer?—I do not think I should recommend taking over more tanks by the Revenue Department.

9280. In regard to the District Board, you have to send up a number of very petty projects to the Sanitary Board?—Yes, all estimates over a certain sum—I think it is Rs. 1,000.

9281. Is that necessary?—It causes a great deal of delay, and in my opinion it certainly makes work expensive.

9282. You would prefer to have a larger limit within which your Board would be free and not have to consult the Sanitary Board at Madras?—Yes, I think in the case of a well costing Rs. 1,500, even although it is a big well, you do not want the opinion of the Sanitary Board; as regards larger works certainly they ought to have control.

9283. As regards the ordinary Public Works, over a certain limit, those go to the Superintending Engineer?—Yes.

9284. You have got a fairly highly paid Engineer of your own in this district?—Yes.

9285. Do you think it is necessary that you should have to send all those works to the Superintending Engineer?—I see no objection to that; it causes a little delay and a little correspondence, that is all.

9286. But as a matter of safety, do you think it is desirable?—In connection with buildings I think it is as well; in connection with road works I do not think it necessary.

9287. If it is not necessary and you would save delay by not doing it, might it not be foregone?—Yes, except in the case of buildings.

9288. As regards education under your taluk Boards, is it mainly carried on direct by Board schools or through aided and other institutions?—It varies according to the taluk Board; some taluk Boards have a lot of Local Fund schools, others have a large number of aided institutions.

9289. Do you find that the local officers of the Education Department interfere a good deal in the management of these schools, or are they left to the taluk Board President?—The Education Officers are very freely consulted; I do not think they interfere.

9290. They only come in when they are asked to advise?—As President of the District Board, I have very little to do with these things. There are practically no schools under the District Board.

9291. As regards your District Board budgets, have you found that the Director of Public Instruction criticises the budget from the educational point of view?—Yes.

9292. Have your allotments been altered with reference to his suggestions?—Yes; for instance the Rajahmandri taluk Board had its income considerably reduced and they proposed to abolish a certain number of schools; the Director of Public Instruction objected and these schools had to be retained, and therefore the allotments had to be altered.

9293. Were you consulted before that alteration was made?—No, we are not consulted in these things; the alterations are made in the Government office without referring to me.

9294. As regards municipalities, how many are there in this district?—Two, Cocanada and Rajahmandri.

9295. Do all references to Government pass through your hands?—Through the Divisional Officer and my office.

9296. Do you generally make remarks on them, or simply forward them on?—I make remarks on them all except as to mere routine matters.

9297. It has been suggested to us in Madras that the Collector might largely take the place of Government in controlling municipalities, reviewing their budgets and so on, and on the other hand it has been suggested that this work would overburden the Collector; what is your opinion?—As a rule the budgets and the Administration Reports and that sort of thing are more or less examined in my office; the examination is not very close. If it rested finally with me, it would mean a fair amount of extra work and a fair amount of responsibility.

9298. Is it advisable that the Collector should undertake it and save Government doing it?—It seems to me you are rather centralizing on the Collector, are you not?

9299. You are decentralizing as regards the Government?—You ask me if I would leave the municipal budgets to be decided finally by the Collector instead of by Government; it might be done in the case of smaller municipalities, but in the case of large municipalities I think it ought to go to Government.

9300. What do you mean by small municipalities; have you a limit of population, or income, or what?—You might take a limit of income; some of these recently started municipalities are very small and the financial operations are not very large; you might perhaps leave those to the Collector.

9301. Still those would be the exception?—Yes; I think as regards the larger towns it ought to go to Government.

9302. You have no power of posting your officers to any particular divisions?—No.

9303. Would it help in the direction of elasticity if the Government simply posted them to the district and you were allowed to distribute them as you thought best?—Well, there are other difficulties arising in connection with that, the question of house accommodation and that sort of thing. I have never felt the necessity for that.

9304. You have a great deal of work in connection with the village officers?—Yes.

9305. Owing to the fact that they are hereditary?—Yes.

9306. Do you have many suits and appeals?—I have a considerable number of appeals. I have no suits actually; the suits are tried by the Divisional Officer.

9307. The rule is at present strict primogeniture?—Yes.

9308. Would it save work, while at the same time retaining the hereditary principle, if the Divisional Officer, or even the tahsildar, were allowed discretion to select the man he thought the most capable among the hereditary family?—He would certainly have the opportunity of getting the best man.

9309. You would get more efficiency in the village?—Yes.

9310. And you might save a certain amount of work perhaps?—Possibly later on.

9311. Sometimes there are suits, are there not, between branches of the same family?—Yes. Always provided that the hereditary principle is followed, I should not object.

9312. As regards the jamabandi work; a great deal of the work formerly done at jamabandi is now done throughout the year?—Yes. For instance, as regards encroachments and remissions and that sort of thing they come up before the jamabandi, and then at the jamabandi many of the parties affected by these matters come up, and the cases are heard on the spot.

9313. I have seen it represented in the public press and otherwise that the Divisional Officer tends to put too much work on the tahsildar—that he makes the tahsildar report on things that he might look after himself in the course of his tours. Speaking generally, do you think there is foundation for that statement?—I do not know; I think most Divisional Officers when they get a paper that they want to look into themselves, mark it for tour and take it round with them.

9314. Do they do as much as they can as a rule personally?—Yes, they certainly do as much as they can.

9315. You tell us that a Collector cannot delegate power to a Divisional Officer; are there not general Acts of old date by which the Divisional Officer is empowered to exercise all the powers of a Collector?—That is a general delegation, but I have never known any special power to be delegated.

9316. You have started a Local Board in the Agency Tracts lately?—Yes; that is to say, part of the Agency Tract is now under the District Board.

9317. As a separate Board or a separate area?—The whole Agency was put under the District Board, but when the district was reduced in area, Badrachalam was excluded and the other three divisions were kept on under the District Board, and these three divisions formed one taluk Board.

9318. How do they keep up their roads?—There are practically no roads to keep up in the Agency; what is done there is mostly done by the District Board; the District Board has practically got to finance the taluk Board.

9319. I gathered that you consider you have only power to remit in case there has been an almost total loss of crop. Have you seen any orders issued within the last two years laying down a scale in cases of general calamity, beginning with the loss of half the crop?—Now you mention it. I remember those orders; I forget what the exact terms of the orders are.

9320. They were issued about the year 1905 and are known as the Calamity Rules?—I know what you refer to.

9321. Would those not allow you to remit for a much less loss than 15 annas in the rupee?—I should like to look at the rules before giving an opinion.

9322. I gathered that in revenue work you took everything at second hand; that is to say, everything came up to the Divisional Officer first. Is that quite correct?—Practically everything.

9323. Do you never do a jamabandi?—Yes, of course.

9324. In that case you take the whole jamabandi work of the taluks direct?—Yes.

9325. With regard to panchayats, if you gave them any powers would you give the right of appeal to the tahsildar or to the district munsiff, as the case may be?—I do not know that I would give the right of appeal; you might give them power to revise decisions, in exceptional cases, the same as with the village Benches.

9326. Under the Village Benches Act, on proof of corruption the munsiff can revise the order?—Yes.

Mr. J. A.
Cumming.

4 Dec., 1907.

Mr. J. A.
Cumming.
4 Dec., 1937.

9327. And at the same time you would desire to have a special officer to go about the districts inspecting the panchayats?—I think Mr. Hichens said, introducing or supervising.

9328. Would it not tend to sap the authority of the tahsildar if the whole village administration was taken out of his hands and supervised by some outside officer?—Of course it would.

9329. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) As regards the question of delegation, you said that the old Regulation of 1828 refers to general powers, and you never knew a special power delegated; what do you mean by special power?—As Divisional Officer myself I cannot remember a Collector ever issuing any order authorising me to deal with any matter which did not come under my ordinary powers.

9330. Do you mean the ordinary powers in connection with land revenue only?—Yes.

9331. We were told in Madras yesterday that all the local Acts of Council in which the word "Collector" occurred were passed with this provision in mind, that every power given to a Collector might be exercised by a Divisional Officer; is that correct?—In several recent Acts they have introduced the term "District Collector."

9332. They have specialised a phrase which takes them out of the old section?—Yes, so I understand.

9333. As to irrigation, is not the question of how far a change in the mode of supply affects lands of different level under the command of a canal, a technical matter?—Yes, in so far as it is a matter of levels.

9334. So that the matter is really one as to which the Executive Engineer should have the chief authority?—Yes, provided he considered the question as affecting these high lands.

9335. Can you say whether occupants are able to sub-let land which is assessed under irrigation rates?—You mean sub-let wet lands; yes, there is nothing to prevent them.

9336. Do they get a good sub-rent?—Sub-letting is not so common up here as down in the Tamil districts.

9337. I mean that the rates are not pitched so high that they are not able to sub-let?—Oh, no.

9338. You said you thought that the taking away of the magisterial work from the tahsildar had affected his influence. Does it not also affect the control of crime? Is the tahsildar expected to do the preventive work of his tahsil in the delta?—He supervises the village authorities.

9339. The magistrate is stationary?—Yes, but there are a certain number of sub-magistrates who are also deputy tahsildars and are not stationary.

9340. But the man who tries the cases is stationary?—Not necessarily. In many taluks there is a tahsildar, a stationary magistrate, and also a deputy tahsildar and sub-magistrate, who tours throughout his part of the taluk.

9341. Can a tahsildar go into a police station office, examine the record, and see who the bad characters are, and take action against them; is it any part of his duty?—No, it is not his duty; or rather, he does not do it.

9342. Do you not think you lose power in that way over the crime of the district?—I think so, because, as you say, the sub-magistrate is stationary; he is always at headquarters.

9343. The time a magistrate spends in Court represents a very small part of his magisterial work if he runs his charge properly, and, therefore, to dissociate the tahsildar from what I may call the preventive work, is rather a serious loss?—I think it is desirable that the magistrate should move about freely.

9344. At present they do not consider that part of their work?—No, they certainly do not do that now.

9345. You look entirely to the Sub-Divisional Officer for that?—The Sub-Divisional Officer and the police.

9346. In other words the Sub-Divisional Officer is the only magisterial supervision that you have got over the local police of a division—the only magisterial check; you have lost the tahsildar's check?—I should say that is so. The tahsildar has practically nothing to do with the police now.

9347. (Mr. Dutt.) Mr. Meyer has referred to the remission rules of 1905, lately published. Do those rules not refer only to "widespread calamities," and not to the loss of individual cultivators?—I have had no opportunity of studying the rules.

9348. And the Collector has no power under these rules of remission without the orders of the Government?—I cannot say without referring to the rules.

9349. (Chairman.) I have here a file of papers which is called the periodical file. The periodical file contains, does it not, two occasional, one decennial, eight quinquennial, two triennial, and 173 annual returns which have had to be made either to or from your office?—That is so.

9350. Do you think that a considerable proportion of these returns are not only cumbersome in form, but unnecessary in substance?—Yes. As I said, I think this list of returns ought to be carefully gone into every two or three years; there is no doubt that a lot of unnecessary returns are kept on.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. A. T. MACKENZIE was called and examined.

Mr. A. T.
Mackenzie.
4 Dec., 1907.

9351. (Chairman.) You are the Superintending Engineer?—Yes.

9352. What is the area of your charge?—Approximately as follows:—

	Sq. miles.
Ganjam	8,368
Vizagapatam	17,222
Godavari and part of Kistna ...	7,971
	33,561

9353. Do you find that your charge is of such a size that you can conveniently get about it—in the course of, say, a year, can you get all over your charge?—No, it is too large.

9354. How long does it take you to get completely round the system of irrigation which is under your charge?—I never can do it in a year. I might do it in two years, but I have many other places to inspect also.

9355. Have you read the evidence which has been given to us with regard to the measure of control which might be given to a Collector in certain non-technical matters over the Public Works Department staff in the district?—Yes.

9356. Do you think that a Collector cannot have the technical knowledge which it is so essential he should possess, if he is to attend in any considerable matter to the distribution of water?—That is so.

9357. With regard to the position of the Collector and the forest officer, do you consider that the control of forest matters requires far less knowledge than the distribution of water requires?—So I think, as practised in Madras, but I speak from hearsay.

9358. Do you suggest that the Collector, who is already a very hard-working and capable officer, overburdened with his own daily task, if he were to interfere in the work of the Public Works Department, could not possibly carry that extra burden?—In a large irrigation system he certainly could not.

9359. Is the ordinary work of a Public Works division the maintenance and repair of major tanks, the preparation of estimates for every sort of building, the construction and maintenance of roads, the investigation of minor projects, and various odds and ends of work which you describe generally as the work of the Executive Engineer?—That is in an ordinary district.

9360. In this particular district you have, besides the designing of canals, the scientific distribution of water, weirs, sluices, and all that sort of thing?—Yes.

9361. All of which requires very highly specialised technical knowledge?—Yes.

9362. The point where the Collector and the Executive Engineer's duties come into contact with each other is in what you call the minor distribution of irrigation?—Yes.

9363. You would suggest to us that when the water leaves the minor distributary channels then the responsibility for the distribution from field to field falls upon the Collector?—It is not ours anyhow.

9364. We have been told to-day by the Collector that really that is not part of the Collector's work, but it is really work for the raiyat?—It may be so.

9365. You are not aware officially of what happens to the water after it leaves the minor distributary channels?—I am aware that there is considerable confusion.

9366. Have you any control over the water?—None whatever after it leaves the pipes.

9367. As regards the field to field distribution, this is already under the control of the Collector?—In this way, that it is under the control of the village officers who are the Collectors' servants.

9368. What are those officers?—The village munsif and the village karnam.

9369. It has been suggested to us that a certain amount of possible misunderstanding which from time to time occurs, would be very much reduced if, before new schemes of distribution were submitted to the Public Works Department of the provincial Government, a consultation was held with the Collector of the particular district concerned. I think that you would agree that that would be very desirable, would you not?—Certainly.

9370. And if there had been any omission so to consider and consult the Collector that that was due to an oversight?—Certainly.

9371. And I think you would go further and say that such oversight was a matter of regret to the Public Works Officer who was concerned?—Very much so.

9372. Would the smooth working of the Public Works Department and the Revenue Department be greatly facilitated if there were habitual conferences between the Collector, who is Head of the district, and the Engineer, who is Head of the particular scheme of distribution under consideration?—Yes.

9373. If it was clearly understood, therefore, between the Public Works Department on the one side, and the Revenue Department, on the other, that such conferences should be held at frequent periodical intervals, any misunderstanding, which might now exist, could be easily removed?—Yes, I think that it is so understood.

9374. Are such conferences, as a matter of fact, held?—They meet frequently.

9375. How frequently?—I should think very seldom a month passes that the Executive Engineer does not see the Collector.

9376. I do not mean with regard to small points, but with regard to proposals of the future?—There are not many proposals of the future.

9377. These schemes are only very occasional?—Yes.

9378. You think that given this clear and good understanding between the Heads of the Departments, there is no reason why the Executive Engineer should be in any way under the direct orders of the Collector?—Yes.

9379. Are there any of your subordinate staff who might, without disarrangement of your department, pass under the direct instructions of the Collector?—I think not.

9380. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) You say that you know nothing about the water after it passes the pipes. Could you explain to a layman how much water does pass the pipes; does it go from the pipes to a particular field, or to a village, or what is the volume?—It varies very much; it is a matter of convenience; generally it is seldom within a block of less than 10 acres, and it is seldom more than 30 acres, or thereabouts, which is fed by a single pipe.

9381. What is the average size of a holding under an irrigation project; how many holders would there be in that 10 or 30 acres?—There might be 10, or 20, or 50.

9382. Is it very much sub-divided?—Yes, so far as I know.

9383. Do the holdings run down to less than half an acre?—If you judge by the size of the embankments round the fields they do—very much less than half an acre, some of them.

9384. With that you have nothing to do; you deliver the water at the pipes and it passes out of your hands?—Yes.

9385. (Mr. Meyer.) I suppose we shall agree upon this, that the chief object—the sole object in fact—of irrigation works is ultimately to supply water to the cultivator?—I should like to qualify that a little; it is also to serve as an object lesson for other irrigation works which may be projected in the future.

9386. That being so, is it not of some advantage to have the whole of the work under one main directing authority? You say you supply up to a certain point, and then the Collector and his subordinates take charge. Is that altogether a satisfactory system, do you think?—No, I do not think it is.

9387. You object to the plan proposed of the Collector taking charge. What would you think of the alternative plan of letting the Executive Engineer (as in the Punjab) take charge of all the assessment and distribution work?—It is better I think.

9388. There is unity then?—Yes.

9389. And the officer who supplies the water is also responsible for the revenue?—Yes.

9390. The Collector is now in charge of the minor irrigation tanks. Do you regard that as a good system?—It cannot be called a good system.

9391. Would it be better to have them taken over by the Public Works Department?—No, I cannot say that. I do not think they are important enough for that, and they would need a very much larger establishment which is already existent in the Revenue Department.

9392. Does not the case of a tank differ somewhat from the case of a large irrigation work? A Collector can see a tank and say, "This tank is out of order, it ought to be put right"; it is only the one tank he has to deal with and not a piece of a whole series of complicated channels?—Quite so.

9394. I understand from the last witness that you communicate your budget to him regularly?—Yes.

9395. But he said not in much detail?—All my officers are strictly ordered to communicate with the Collector before they send their budget, even up to me, and to get his consent to it.

9396. The Executive Engineer, in the first place, communicates with the Collector?—Yes.

Mr. A. T. Mackenzie.
4 Dec., 1907.

Mr A. T.
Mackenzie.

4 Dec., 1907.

9397. Does he put the matter before the Collector in sufficient detail?—I think so; I have had no complaints; if I had I should at once see to them.

9398. Then if the Collector says, "I think this tank ought to have money spent on it," and so forth, are those remarks communicated to you?—I suppose they would be; I have only been in charge here one season; I have only had one budget; I do not remember any remark.

9399. You have been an Executive Engineer yourself?—On construction—nearly all my life.

9400. But as Superintending Engineer in other parts of the province?—On investigation work.

9401. So that your experience as to the real procedure is somewhat limited?—Very small.

9402. (Mr. Hichens.) What roads do you look after?—We have only one road in our charge in this circle, the ghat road, the main road to Jeypur.

9403. All the other roads are under the District Board?—Yes.

9404. Would it be advisable in the interests of economy and efficiency that some of the other main roads should be taken over by the Government and maintained by them?—I think trunk roads might be.

9405. Trunk roads leading from one district through another?—Yes.

9406. Are there a large number of those?—No, generally only one in each district.

9407. Have you experience of road work in other countries at all?—No, only in India.

9408. Do you inspect the work of the District Boards in regard to roads at all?—Only as I happen to pass along; I do not exercise any authority or make any reports.

9409. The Government do not make a grant to the District Board for roads conditionally on their being kept in good order?—I cannot say.

9410. Might that be a good thing from the point of view of efficiency?—No, I do not think it necessary.

9411. (Mr. Dutt.) We have had evidence before us that when the cultivators feel that there is any defect in the distribution of water, they naturally go to the Collector as the man who collects the revenue and who ought to see to the proper distribution of the water. Under those circumstances would you not suggest that the Collector should have some power of making requests to the District Engineer about the distribution of water?—He has the power of requesting.

9412. And in case the request is not complied with, and there is a difference of opinion, do you think it would be too much to ask the Engineer to submit to the Collector his reason why the request cannot be complied with?—Certainly, there would be no objection.

(The witness withdrew.)

Adjourned.

TWELFTH DAY.

RAJAHMANDRI, Thursday, 5th December, 1907.

PRESENT :

C. E. H. HOBHOUSE, Esq., M.P., Under Secretary of State for India, Chairman.

SIR FREDERIC LELY, K.C.I.E., C.S.I.
SIR STEYNING EDGERLEY, K.C.V.O., C.I.E., I.C.S.
R. C. DUTT, Esq., C.I.E.

W. S. MEYER, Esq., C.I.E., I.C.S.
W. L. HICHENS, Esq.

M. R. Ry. Y. VENKATA RAO AVARGAL, B.A., was called and examined.

M. R. Ry. Y.
Venkata Rao
Avargal.

5 Dec., 1907.

9413. (Chairman.) You are the tahsildar of Rajahmandri?—Yes, since the 25th of last month.

9414. How long have you been in the service?—Twenty-seven years. I began life on Rs. 15.

9415. What is your pay now as tahsildar?—Rs. 250.

9416. How long can you hold your position?—Until I am promoted a Deputy Collector, or until I retire.

9417. (Sir Frederic Lely.) Has the tahsildar as much power as he ought to have?—No.

9418. A good deal of your work consists of going on tour?—Yes.

9419. How long are you absent from your headquarters?—Not less than six months every year.

9420. Sometimes for a whole month at a time?—Yes, it depends on the urgency of the work; but, as a rule, not less than 15 days in a month.

9421. Is it not desirable that when you are away from headquarters some of your powers should be delegated to your subordinates?—The head accountant might be given some powers.

9422. If a raiyat comes to your head office and finds there no one able to take his case in hand, even in the preliminary stage, he suffers much inconvenience?—At present all representations are made by means of petitions, and when petitions are received during my absence they are received by my head accountant, and he sends them on to me.

9423. As a matter of fact who is left to conduct the regular business of your charge in your absence?—The head accountant.

9424. He is primarily in charge of the treasury, and an expert at that work?—Yes. His pay is Rs. 50.

9425. Is he a fit man to carry on the regular work of the charge?—At present he is the only man.

9426. But is he fit?—I do not think he is.

9427. He is engrossed in his treasury work and he is not trained in general administration?—Just so.

9428. Who comes next?—A clerk on Rs. 30.

9429. Is he a trained man?—He is only a clerk.

9430. He would be a man probably with a family to educate and bring up, and usually resident in a town?—Yes.

9431. Is Rs. 30 a month a living wage for such a man?—Considering the quality of the work he is expected to turn out, I consider it is fair, because he is only a clerk, and special work is allotted to him; it is not his business to supervise the office.

9432. The next link in the chain of authority is the karnam?—Yes.

9433. He acts as your representative to collect the money in the villages?—The munsiff does that; the karnam only keeps the accounts.

9434. But the karnam has the handling of the money also?—No, he never takes money from the *raiya*s.

9435. Besides that, you depend upon him for your information in the village, in the first instance?—Yes.

9436. He stands next to the people, and you often have to call him to your office?—Yes. In order to consult him for the purpose of compiling accounts for settlement, and so on, and the village business generally.

9437. What pay does he get?—It varies from Rs. 5 to Rs. 20.

9438. How many get Rs. 20?—In this taluk one karnam gets Rs. 15; that is the highest pay in this taluk.

9439. Out of 54 men 49 get only Rs. 8?—Yes.

9440. When they come into headquarters do they have to come at their own expense?—Yes.

9441. Suppose there was a man fitted to carry on the current business of your office while you were away, do you think that Rs. 30 would be adequate pay?—No.

9442. (Mr. Dutt.) Will you tell us if, on the occasions of jamabandi, the Divisional Officer comes into personal contact with the villagers?—My experience is that the *raiya*s will not wait for the jamabandi if they have any grievance, on account of the quicker way that the work is done throughout the year.

9443. You mean by petitions?—By petitions, and sometimes by representations also.

9444. How many villages has the Divisional Officer in his charge on the average, roughly speaking?—About 200 or 250.

9445. In how many places does he pitch his tent, in order to do the jamabandi work?—Not less than three places in each taluk.

9446. As a matter of fact, do the villagers generally come round and say what they have to say, on those occasions?—They will only come if they have not already represented their views by way either of petitions or personal representations to the Collector.

9447. But on such occasions do people come forward, and when the tent is pitched, do they come and say what they have to say?—Nobody comes except the few who may have grievances just for the time.

9448. What power has the Collector to order remissions in the case of wet crops? If the rule is that the Collector is empowered to grant remissions when 15 annas of the crop have failed, that is to say, when the harvest is only one anna, do you think that that gives sufficient relief to the people?—My view is that the Collector should have extra power in that direction.

9449. Suppose three-fourths of the crops have failed, should the Collector have power in that way?—At least up to that limit.

9450. Do you think the Collector should have some power of granting remissions in the case of the failure of dry crops?—It would be a great boon to the people if that power was granted to the Collector.

9451. In the levy of irrigation rates do you find that the policy is too much dominated by considerations of revenue?—I cannot answer that question, but what is now collected in the shape of water tax seems to be a fair return for the benefit given by the supply of Government water to these crops.

9452. The water tax was collected separately from the land tax before the re-settlement. Now the two taxes have been consolidated?—Yes.

9453. Suppose a man grows what you call a double crop—a crop which is on the land for more than five or six months—do you charge him 50 per cent. more of the water rate only, or of the land rate and water rate consolidated?—In the case of consolidated wet lands whatever is charged on account of land cess goes in the shape of water tax, but as to the way in which it is fixed, it is taken to be half of the consolidated wet assessment.

9454. The local cess is calculated on the consolidated rate?—Yes.

9455. Previously the local cess was reckoned only on the land tax?—And water tax too.

9456. How many years has that been in force?—Before the consolidated assessment was introduced, the land cess used to be calculated not only on the land tax, but also on the water tax; the two are now consolidated.

9457. So there has been no increase of the local cess in consequence of the consolidation?—I do not think so.

9458. Some lands which are low are classed as dry lands here and there?—Such cases will be found in the delta, because at the time of the re-settlement, and when lands were classed as consolidated wet lands, the Settlement Officer had to observe the principle that only those lands which were continually under wet irrigation for five years prior to the date of re-settlement were classed as consolidated wet. In so doing there was no opportunity, or occasion, to have regard to the level of the land; so that if any low lands happened at that time not to have been continuously under wet cultivation for five years, though they were subsequently commanded by water, they were registered as dry.

9459. (Mr. Hitchens.) Are you a member of the taluk Board?—Yes.

9460. Has the taluk Board sufficient revenue to carry out its duties properly?—One-half of the proceeds are alone to be expended by the taluk Boards.

9461. How much does it amount to in round figures?—The total assessment of the taluk is 12 lakhs; one-sixteenth of it is the full proceeds of the local cess; one-half of that alone is allowed to be expended by the taluk Board, the other half being the District Board fund.

9462. Is that enough to enable you to perform the duties which are imposed on you as a Board?—We get some grants from Government occasionally.

9463. But adding it all together, is that enough to enable you to perform your duties properly?—It is desirable to get more if possible.

9464. (Mr. Meyer.) You spoke of the taluk head accountant as being merely an expert in treasury work; is that quite correct?—He is expected also to supervise the correspondence work, being himself a clerk in charge of various branches of correspondence.

9465. What is the previous career of an ordinary taluk head accountant; has he been a revenue inspector?—Yes.

M. R. Ry. F.
Venkata Rao
Avargal.

5 Dec., 1907.

M. R. Ry. Y.
Venkata Rao
Avargal.

5 Dec., 1907.

9466. As a revenue inspector he would have had a general knowledge of revenue administration?—Yes.

9467. Would he not be fit, therefore, to take charge of the work during your absence to a certain extent?—Yes, to a certain extent; it is better to have a man whose time can be devoted to the supervision of the office, if possible.

9468. Are you aware that it has been proposed to raise the pay and status of taluk head accountants?—Yes.

9469. You spoke about the karnam receiving only Rs. 8. Is that his only source of livelihood?—They are generally men who have lands of their own.

9470. The position of karnam gives them prestige in the village?—Yes.

9471. The principle of the assessment in this province is that Government is entitled to a half share of the nett profits after deducting the expenses of cultivation and so forth?—Yes.

9472. The application of water to different lands has different results?—Yes.

9473. Water applied to one class of land may raise a poor crop, whereas applied to another class it may raise a good crop?—Yes.

9474. Was that the reason why Government altered the fixed water rate charge in this district, and started the consolidated assessment?—Yes, and they also introduced differential water rates, in order to remove the anomaly incident to the charge of the uniform rate for lands of all descriptions, irrespective of natural facilities for irrigation and drainage.

9475. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) We were told last night that the control of the Engineering Department stops at the pipes. What happens, exactly, after the water leaves the pipes?—The village officers are expected to take charge of that water and distribute the same equitably to the holders of fields, but my experience is that generally they will be glad to be benefited by the advice of the sub-officers in charge.

9476. The cultivators of the plots commanded by the pipes do not arrange it by agreement among themselves?—Generally they do that also.

9477. But, in case of dispute, the village officer has to settle the matter?—Yes, and if he is not successful, they will go to the sub-officer in charge of the work of distributing the water out of the pipes, and, as he generally possesses a good deal of influence, his advice will be generally listened to by the people.

9478. Do you think that the Engineering Department could control the water all through right down to the time it reaches the individual raiyat?—I do not think so. They have got their own principles and their own lines of action.

9479. Instead of the village officer doing this last stage, could it not be done by the Public Works Officer?—I think it is best that water when it reaches the pipes should be left either to the raiyats concerned or to the village officers. The complaint is that there is rather too much control by the Public Works Department over the distribution of the water.

9480. What is your experience of the result? One witness said yesterday that the result was confusion?—I think that if the Collectors and Divisional Officers had a direct part in the distribution of water supply the result would be much better.

9481. Why do you think so?—Because it is the Collector and Divisional Officers who are looked upon as the guardians of the people's rights; whether they do really possess any such power, or not, in case of any difficulty, they are the officers to whom the people look for help.

9482. Would you have them come in, so to speak, behind the pipes—further up in the distribution?—Further up, yes.

9483. At what point?—Up to the heads of the channels.

9484. The heads of the subsidiary channels?—Yes.

9485. How would you work that?—Up to the channels the supply comes direct from the main canals, and with reference to the area that is to be irrigated under the particular channel, the quantity of water supposed to be sufficient for that area is settled by the Public Works Department. Now, the water supplied to these channels will be either too late or too early, and that will give rise to complaints against the Public Works Department, and in case one of the Divisional Officers or the Collector during their tours happens to find that some of the complaints are justified, they cannot give immediate redress to the raiyats. The present system would be rendered more popular if the Collectors and Divisional Officers were empowered to give some instructions, or to have something to do with the distribution of the water supply.

9486. You do not think that would interfere with the working of the canal?—These remarks are applicable only to the feeding channels after they have passed the heads. It is the Collector and Divisional Officers who come into contact more with the state of the crops, and they are looked upon by the people as possessing a greater and more accurate knowledge as to the requirements of water supply than the Public Works Engineer.

9487. As to the recent change that has been made from the system of turns to the system of continuous supply, do you think that that is a good change?—I do not think so. This is the first year in which that change has been introduced, and my impression is that it has very injuriously affected the outturns of consolidated wet lands, particularly those that are classed as such, though they are comparatively high lands. There cannot be a hard-and-fast rule for such lands.

9488. You think the high lands suffer a little?—Yes.

9489. What is the supposed advantage to be gained by the change?—I believe it aims simply at the economy of water.

9490. (Chairman.) Does the supply of water run very short here at certain times of the year?—Yes, from November onwards. There is no lack of supply from the beginning of the cultivation season up to the end of October, or November.

9491. There is no lack of water supply during the cultivating season?—No, because there is a constant overflow at the crest of the anicut at the other side, which runs to waste in the sea.

9492. Has the fact that there is now no shortage of water during the cultivating season been due to the care with which the water is economised during the year by the Public Works Department?—I do not think so, so far as the first crop season is concerned.

9493. What is it due to?—There is the incessant flow in the river; so much so that there will be a constant overflow from the crest of the anicut for a number of months.

9494. If the control of the Public Works Department were removed, and the whole system removed, would there still be plenty of water?—Yes.

(The witness withdrew.)

The Hon. Mr. B. NARASIMHESWARA SARMA was called and examined.

9495. (Chairman.) You are a member of the Madras Legislative Council?—Yes.

9496. How long have you been a member?—About two years.

9497. You wish to say something to us about the way in which the Madras budget is connected with the general finance of the Government of India?—Yes. The position of Madras under the existing financial system is extremely unfortunate. The incidence of taxation per head of the population is higher in Madras than for the whole of India. More revenue has been, and is being, raised year after year than the province should bear as its fair share, and a much greater proportion of the revenue so raised has been appropriated towards the imperial share than in any other province in India. Local taxation is heavier in Madras than in any other province in India. Madras cannot by any means be described as more prosperous than other provinces, or even as prosperous as many of them; and it may, I think, be asserted that she is poorer than many, having regard to the comparatively small revenue derived from assessed taxes and customs, the relatively small number of municipalities and large towns, and the almost total absence of what may properly be described as genuine local manufacturing industries in the European sense of the term.

Table No. I. annexed hereto shows that, taking the period from 1893-94 for comparison, the incidence of taxation has invariably been higher. If the gross revenue be taken into consideration, the total excess revenue paid by this Presidency would be much larger than would appear from the nett figures.

Table II. shows that the imperial share in Madras is nearly 166 per cent. of the provincial share, local taxation being excluded; whereas in no other province does it exceed the provincial share when the revenue from taxation proper really borne by the province is taken into consideration.

Speaking generally, the commercial departments of the Government of India pay their way and are yielding a large profit. The profits may be ordinarily utilised for the reduction of the debt, and the taxpayer would be relieved of the burden of paying the interest thereon, and should loss occur at any time, it need not fall directly on the people, and need not be met out of current revenues. The Postal, Telegraph, and Mint Services have been yielding a profit, and the deficit, if any should occur, would not disturb the calculations very much. The superannuation allowances may be met out of the provincial revenues, except in so far as they may relate to the Imperial Departments; the only items therefore for which the whole of India would have to provide would be the defence, general administration of the Government of India and the Imperial Supervising Departments, the interest on the general debt, and a few Scientific Departments. The normal growth of the expenditure on the said items, except the army, may be fairly anticipated, and the deficit, if any, after deducting the expenditure from the revenues which may be treated as wholly imperial, such as opium, salt, customs, &c., would be a first charge on the provincial revenues; and the provinces would have to meet the same in proportion to their population.

The growth of provincial expenditure would be subject to the control of the Supreme Government until at any rate the people are permitted, or are in a position, to administer their revenues. Taxes would under this system be remitted whenever the provincial revenues are in excess of the expenditure, and this may be oftener than at present. Assuming that on grounds of public policy taxation cannot be allowed to be remitted in one province without a remission in all, the surplus balance would be expended in the development of the resources of the province. The land revenue may be permanently settled under this scheme and the requisite funds raised, after due deliberation and discussion in the shape of taxation.

This greater decentralization would enable the Local Governments to know where they are, would lead to a greater uniformity and continuity of policy in administering the revenues, and the people may be given a real power in shaping provincial budgets, without weakening the Executive or interfering with the general policy of the Government of India. The result of this scheme would be a reduction of the burden of Madras by 1,73.6 lakhs. The total amount of the imperial share of the provincial revenues in 1907-08 is Rs. 45,87,19,000, and deducting therefrom the opium revenue of Rs. 7,27,60,000 the balance of Rs. 38,59,59,000 is contributed by the provinces, and the share of Madras would be $\frac{8.5}{100}$ thereof, or Rs. 6,34,95,000, whereas it is 808 lakhs.

Greater power should be given to Collectors to grant remissions, and in the case of failure of dry crops also within defined limits.

The Executive Officers do not seem to possess sufficient knowledge of the vernaculars to converse freely with the people; an apparent want of sympathy with the articulate middle classes, and the notion that prestige would be lowered by the officers making themselves unduly accessible, and, possibly, a feeling of helplessness to do any real good, stand in the way.

Officers are transferred too often, and cannot possibly take a real interest in the taluks or districts.

I am strongly in favour of the creation of Advisory Councils to assist Divisional and District Officers. The Councils would be of infinite help in the administration of income tax, forest reserves, sanitation, during epidemics and in times of trouble or panic, when schemes or plans are introduced, e.g., in the matter of the introduction of new rules of irrigation in the Godavari delta in this year.

I cannot recommend too strongly the creation or revival of the village panchayat system to facilitate the administration of nearly all the matters referred to in the question.

There is partial justification for the feeling that the formation of the District and Local Boards as at present constituted has only served to relieve the provincial revenues of a portion of their legitimate burden, and increased the burden of the taxpayer in the shape of local taxation; there is absolutely no reason why there should not be a decentralization of functions and powers and a real living voice be given to the people in the administration of funds for education, sanitation, roads, &c., when questions of general policy are not involved.

REMARKS.—The revenue from registration does not seem to have been included in the Madras figure; if included the incidence would be higher, and the rate would be still higher if local taxation be included.

Madras	8,08,55,000	4,85,43,000	1,08,90,000	14,02,88,000	The Imperial share is 166 per cent. of the provincial share. Nowhere is so much local revenue raised.
Bombay	8,28,30,000	5,76,33,000	43,85,000	14,48,48,000	From this 80 lakhs of opium revenue and a large portion of the customs revenue of Rs. 2,92,70,000 would have to be deducted. Bombay being the gate for the whole of India; the Imperial share would be about as much as the provincial.

9498. You would draw our attention to the fact that taxation in Madras is in your judgment higher than it is in other Governments in India?—Yes, on the average.

9499. Do you say that that is due to the control by the Government of India over the financial position of Madras?—It is due to the way in which the control is exercised, and to the principle on which the Government of India levies assistance from the provinces.

9500. Would you explain that in a little more detail?—Forty-five crores of rupees are levied every year, roughly, from all the nine provinces. Excluding opium, there would be about 38 crores collected from all the provinces. If the population test be applied, Madras would have to pay only about 630 lakhs of rupees, whereas the imperial share at the present moment is about 808 lakhs of rupees; that is, we are asked to contribute towards the imperial expenditure much more than our proper share because other provinces are paying less; we are paying more than our share, especially considering the comparative richness and resources of the different provinces.

9501. In your judgment then the fairest way of levying revenue is for the Governments, both provincial and central, to raise their revenues by a per capita tax?—No, not so much per head; that could not be done; that is not possible.

9502. But you say Madras pays more because her population is greater?—No, it is not because of that; I say she pays more in proportion to her population.

9503. Then it must follow that the population is a governing factor in your system of taxation?

—Population is one test; secondly, there is the test of means also.

9504. Have you anything to say to us as to the system under which the Government of India requires the Government of Madras to submit its budget for consideration?—The average expenditure during a particular quinquennial period is taken into consideration, I believe, and Madras is asked to submit its budget with reference to the future increase, if any, that may be absolutely necessary, and the budget is submitted to the Government of India about January.

9505. Perhaps you are not quite familiar with the details?—I am familiar only with such details as can be gathered from books—not the practical working.

9506. (Mr. Meyer.) You suggest that the average incidence of taxation in Madras is greater than that for the Indian Empire as a whole. Is that not naturally so? Does not the Indian Empire include less developed, and poorer, tracts like the Central Provinces and Baluchistan or Upper Burma?—It does, but the increased expenditure on those provinces is comparatively small, so that you may leave them out of account.

9507. Is it not natural that in the Indian Empire, which includes provinces in different states of development, the older provinces along the coast should pay rather more per head than the general average?—I should submit not, as a general proposition, but I think that that proposition hardly arises in this case, because it is only the Central Provinces that pay to the extent of about 80 lakhs less than their proper share.

9508. Your test here is by population. Is not the gross revenue of Bombay much the same as the gross revenue of Madras or somewhat more?—Yes.

9509. Do you know what the population of Bombay is as compared with that of Madras?—Much less, about 20 millions.

9510. It is about half?—Yes.

9511. Therefore, on your showing, Bombay would have double the grievance of Madras?—But a portion of the revenue, which is shown as revenue there, is not revenue proper; about 3 crores is customs duties, which appertain to the whole of India, and about 80 lakhs is opium. If you exclude those, the figures would be much fairer.

9512. Still, could not Bombay make out a much better case than Madras if you take this head of the case?—It could make out a fair case; I do not know that it is a better case.

9513. You are careful to deduct the customs and opium revenue in certain provinces as not appertaining properly to the province; you have made no deduction for customs in Madras; why?—Because what is imported at Bombay and Calcutta, generally travels throughout the whole of India; but I do not think the other provinces share the produce which is chiefly imported into Madras.

9514. Is there not a considerable amount imported into Madras which goes on to Mysore?—Comparatively speaking; it is not a very appreciable quantity.

9515. To that extent you are taking credit on behalf of Madras for revenue which it does not really pay. Are you aware that Madras sends a large amount of salt to Bengal and to the Central Provinces?—It does.

9516. The salt duty is paid here in Madras?—It is.

9517. Who pays the tax really?—The provinces which import it.

9518. Have you made any deduction on that account?—I thought it was such an inappreciable quantity as to be a negligible quantity. Assuming we could deduct 10 or 20 lakhs, the proportion would not be very much affected.

9519. You spoke about the imperial share as about 8 crores odd, as against 4·5 crores for the province. Does that imply that the whole of it is taken by the Government of India from Madras?—Yes.

9520. Does not the Government of India revenue take a share of the expenditure on excise, forests, and many other things in Madras?—Yes; some in other provinces.

9521. That really comes out of the imperial revenues?—Yes.

9522. Then it is not quite accurate to imply that the whole of the money raised in Madras, which is allocated to the imperial share, is taken from the province?—It is taken away because it is imperial expenditure; the same as in other provinces also.

9523. Then again, you speak of the burden of the debt upon the taxpayer. Is there any such burden?—I said that it is almost a constant quantity; it may be equally shared; I did not make any statement as to whether it is burdensome or not.

9524. Are you aware that the profits on railways and productive irrigation works are sufficient to pay the whole interest of the debt, and to leave a substantial margin?—Yes, I am aware of that.

9525. Then how can you speak of it being a burden?—Of course it is a burden as long as it is there; it is an incident of the debt; not that it is a burdensome debt.

9526. Your idea is to give the Government of India the cost of the imperial departments, and to give it just enough money to meet that?—And any increase if necessary would be distributed over the provinces.

9527. But you speak in your memorandum as if the cost of the army would be more or less balanced by the revenues from opium, salt, and excise?—No; I must have expressed myself unhappily; it would not balance.

9528. In your opinion should opium, salt, and customs be entirely imperial?—Yes.

9529. There would still be a considerable amount to be raised from the provinces?—Yes, about 23 crores this year.

9530. And you propose the population test?—Yes, as a fair test.

9531. Would you apply that within this Presidency?—I would not apply that test here.

9532. You would not apply it to the delta districts as against, say, the Ceded Districts, but you would apply it in India?—For the reason that there must be some limit, and the provinces have special interests of their own, which are not identical with the interests of others.

9533. You consider the population test a fairer test than any other?—A fairer test for the distribution of the incidence of taxation.

9534. Would it not be fairer to take it according to the revenues of the province?—Provided the conditions under which the revenues are raised are the same in all provinces.

9535. Would it not be necessary to make continual revisions under this system?—Not to a large extent.

9536. Suppose, for example, that the receipts from opium were largely reduced owing to a change of policy; that would land the Government of India in a deficit under your system, and it would be necessary to seek more money from the provinces?—Yes.

9537. There might be disputes as between the Government of India and the provinces as to the way in which that money was to be obtained?—No, there need not be, if a definite principle was laid down.

9538. You are familiar with, or know something about, the provincial settlements?—To some extent.

9539. Was it not one of the grievances raised against them in the provinces that they were constantly liable to revision?—Yes.

9540. There have been very large decreases in the taxation from salt of late years?—Yes.

9541. Would those have been possible under the system you advocate?—Yes.

9542. So far as Madras, at any rate, is concerned, you say you might have reduced the salt tax if you had been allowed what you consider a fair share of your own revenues?—Yes.

9543. Is not the salt tax an imperial tax?—I could have reduced the salt tax too in my own province.

9544. But in other provinces?—Possibly not.

9545. Under your system there might be a large reduction in Madras, but other provinces might have to pay more?—As they used to do.

9546. You would therefore be in favour of differential duties all over India?—If need be.

9547. But you said that salt was to be one of the items of imperial revenue?—If they could not get from a particular province so much by reducing the taxation, that taxation must stand.

9548. Everything must be looked at from the provincial standpoint?—I do not say that, because as the imperial expenditure grows, the provincial expenditure also grows. The provinces must contribute more.

9549. Suppose the Imperial Government preferred not to reduce expenditure?—I say the Imperial Government must have a control over expenditure until the people have a voice in distributing the money.

9550. What sort of control?—Just the same control that they have at present, or it might be modified; I mean something like the control they now exercise over increase of establishments or the incurring of recurring expenditure.

The Hon.
Mr. B. Narasimheswara
Sarma.

5 Dec., 1907.

9551. Under the present system the Government of India occasionally gets large surpluses, and it is thereby enabled to reduce taxation all over India. Under your system the Government would have only enough to spend; it would have no surplus?—Very little surplus.

9552. Therefore, any reduction of taxation must be made by the Local Government?—There would not be much possibility of reduction by the Imperial Government, but there would be a reduction.

9553. Suppose the Local Government says: "We do not want to reduce taxation, we will spend money on more schools, or we will have more Sanitary Officers"; would you be satisfied with that decision?—I would leave the Imperial Government control over the expenditure of the provincial Government until the people are in a position to have a voice, or are allowed a voice, in questions of taxation or expenditure.

9554. Under the system you propose, we are supposing (quite hypothetically) that the Government of Madras has accumulated a large surplus, and prefers, instead of reducing taxation, to spend the money on schools, or on sanitation, or roads, or anything else, and you, and other people, are not satisfied with that, and would prefer the taxation reduced. Do you mean that you should have the right of going to the Government of India and saying: "Please compel the Government of Madras to reduce taxation"?—You will remember that I said, if the Government of India had the control, the provincial Governments would not be able to increase their expenditure, but taxation would be necessarily reduced; I leave the control to the Government of India.

9555. Control of the same character as is exercised under the financial regulations—control over the creation of fresh appointments, and control over budgets; you would leave all that to the Government of India?—Largely.

9556. But you would make the revenue provincial instead of imperial, to a large extent?—Yes.

9557. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) What is the ultimate object you have in view in suggesting this decentralization of finance?—Two objects: first, that one province may not be burdened unduly simply because the Government of India may not, for various reasons, find it expedient to tax other provinces; secondly, that the growth of imperial expenditure may receive some normal check.

9558. You seem to say that it would lead to greater uniformity and continuity of policy in administering the revenue?—Yes.

9559. In what way; apparently, primâ facie, you rather break it up?—I mean uniformity in the particular province; I do not mean uniformity in the whole of India.

9560. In short, you refer to the provincial revenue, not to the whole revenue of the country?—Yes.

9561. You add: "And that the people may be given a real power in shaping provincial budgets." Do you think that that result would follow?—That would be more possible under my system than the present system. Under the present system land revenue can never be made permanent, because as the imperial needs increase, the Government of India would naturally find it convenient to raise the land revenue, treating it as rent; but, under my system, inasmuch as local taxation is necessary, it is quite possible that land revenue proper would be made permanent, and, if there were any special need, the same revenue might be raised in the form of cess after due deliberation. That would lead to a more equitable distribution of taxation, because one province is permanently settled, another is not, and the revenue that is raised in one province goes for the convenience of another province that has already been permanently settled. I think that is unfair. The system could be introduced into Madras, for instance, subject to the proviso that where additional taxation is needed, it could be raised in the form of a local cess.

9562. If you put on local cesses, would you put them on land?—Land or anything else, according to the needs and means of the people.

9563. Then your settlement would be really no more permanent than if you raised a consolidated tax when the prices justified it?—Not necessarily when the prices justified it, but when there is need in the province. I would not raise it by a single pie, even when there is a rise in prices, unless the needs justified it; then the matter would have to be put before the Legislative Council and before the Government of India, and finally, when it was approved, there would be new taxation introduced proportionate to the needs of the people.

9564. Would you explain what you mean by this phrase: "real power in shaping the provincial budgets"? Do you mean that the provincial Government is likely to be more responsive to public opinion than the Imperial Government?—I say the Government of India would be able to give the people a real share because this would be a purely provincial matter. It would not be mixed up with imperial policy of any kind, and there would be no harm in allowing the people free control as to the way in which expenditure might be distributed.

9565. Do you think that the representations of the people as to local needs would be more effective when made to a provincial Council than when made in the Imperial Council?—They are equally ineffective under the present system.

9566. Do you think that if you had your system of provincial finance, it would be possible to actually discuss the budget in the provincial Council before the year began to which it related?—I think it would be possible to give more power in the matter of adjusting the budgets than at present.

9567. You say that the present Local Fund system in Madras is practically a transfer of liabilities, not a transfer of responsibilities. Do you think that Lord Ripon's policy has been used in that way?—The effect of it is that; whether it was intended, or not, is a different matter; I do not think it ever was intended, but that is the effect.

9568. You say the burden has been shifted on to the local bodies without the corresponding shifting of control by the people?—Yes.

9569. How do you think that has been done?—I think under the present system where there is a local Legislature the Local Government has the right to impose taxation, subject, of course, to the permission of the Government of India. Suppose there had been no such thing as local self-government, the matter would have been purely imperial and provincial.

9570. You have got your District Boards and municipalities, and they have certain duties, and they have certain funds?—Funds raised out of local taxation purely, which would have been met from provincial taxation if the Local Boards Act had not been passed; so that under the Local Boards Act we have additional taxation without any real power to administer the revenue raised by it, the same needs would have been met from provincial funds; I do not see what the gain has been from the passing of the Local Funds Act.

9571. Do you say that the Local Boards have no power at all in spending the local revenue?—Virtually not; they cannot shape their policy in any way they like for the sake of uniformity.

9572. Is that true as to education?—Yes.

9573. Do you mean that officers of the Government are in the majority on these Boards?—They form the majority naturally, because they are either nominated councillors or Government Officers. What they say will be carried, and consequently there is no real controlling voice.

9574. (Mr. Dutt.) Under your scheme would it not be possible that the same tax would vary in different provinces; for instance, income tax might be 5 per cent. in one province and 2½ per cent. in another?—No, that would not be possible, because it is raised under an imperial Act.

9575. In the matter of provincial taxation it might be possible?—As to purely local taxes, yes.

9576. You said that it is possible for the land revenue to be made permanent if your scheme was adopted. Are you aware that many checks on the provincial Government in the matter of land assessment have been prescribed by the Government of India? Are you aware of the order issued by the Government of India in 1905 as to remissions in time of calamity?—Yes, but if it could be made permanent there would not be any need for such rules.

9577. Under those circumstances, if the provinces have a free hand, are they more likely to make the assessment permanent?—There would be a chance, because there would be no need of change; the revenue would not be connected with imperial revenue in the strict sense of the term, and therefore there would be a greater probability of the land revenue being made permanent.

9578. When the Government of India proposed to make the land revenue permanent it was some provincial Governments which objected?—That was in the old days.

9579. From the time of Lord Canning to the time of Lord Ripon?—I am aware that the Local Governments would, of themselves, not be likely to forego this revenue.

9580. (Mr. Hitchens.) You gave us two reasons why you wanted to devolve more financial responsibility on to the provincial Government. One of them concerns the incidence of taxation, into which I do not propose to go. The other reason why you wanted your scheme was that in that way the growth of imperial expenditure would receive some "normal check." Do you mean that the balance in order to make up their budget would come from a direct contribution by the province, and therefore the Government of India would be very chary in asking for an increase?—Yes; and they would have to go up to the level, also, of the poorer provinces, otherwise those provinces would have to raise additional taxation.

9581. Their expenditure would be limited to the amount that the poorest province could contribute?—And by consideration of having to raise taxation in the poorest provinces also.

9582. That is to say, if a certain province was so poor that it could not make any increase at all, and another was very flourishing, the Government of India would not be able to make any increased demand?—Not necessarily. What I submit is that you may borrow money if necessary for a time, if there is any chance of that province developing its revenues in the near future, or, in the case of a hopelessly insolvent province, provision might be made for the amount being distributed among other provinces; but such a case would not arise except possibly with regard to the Central Provinces.

9583. Suppose it became very important for the Imperial Government to raise money?—The provinces would pay their share; the share of the poor provinces would be a very small one. They would not be paying more than their share as they are now. Burma is paying more than its share, so is Eastern Bengal, so is the United Provinces; it is only the Central Provinces that is paying less than its proper share. Therefore I say that any deficit would be made up by a loan for instance from the imperial revenues or from the richer provinces, until the poor province was able to make up the sum; or if the province was hopelessly involved, the Government of India could make special provision, and ask other provinces to contribute.

9584. Your point was this: "In that way the growth of imperial expenditure would receive some normal check"?—The Government of India would be more chary in increasing expenditure, that is what I mean.

9585. Do you not think that the Imperial Government should be in a position to increase taxation if it thought it was necessary, or to decrease it if it thought it was possible?—Under my system it is only the unproductive expenditure that is in the hands of the Government of India, except with regard to a few Scientific Departments; therefore there would be no great harm if the Government of India found that it must take special precautions to check the growth of expenditure. With regard to productive expenditure, the whole of it is in the hands of the provincial Governments, and therefore there would be no undue limitations placed in the way of the provincial Governments. As regards unproductive expenditure, too, if it should be absolutely necessary, there should be contributions from all the provinces.

9586. (Chairman.) You conveyed to us that the Government of Madras, and incidentally, I presume, certain other provincial Governments, were taxed because "it was not convenient for the Government of India to tax other provinces"?—Yes.

9587. I understand you suggest to us that the incidence of land revenue in Bengal is too low, and in Madras and most other provinces too high. That, as I follow your argument, comes from the excessive power in the hands of the Government of India?—They have got excessive power to this extent, that they might raise the necessary revenues by increasing the contributions from other provinces, without disturbing the state of things in some provinces. It comes to the same thing. For instance, we will take Bengal, or the Northern Circars in our own Presidency, or some places in the Central Provinces. The land revenue is now permanently settled there; that province naturally contributes less towards imperial expenditure than other provinces. Now, it will not be possible under the present system to ask the Bengal Government for instance to pay any share, because they will say, "The land revenue is imperial: we are paying the same amount of income tax and other taxes which are imperial, and they are equal in all the provinces; how can we raise more taxation," and the Government of India has no reply. Under my system, Bengal, or the Northern Circars, or whatever it may be, would have to raise the necessary taxation if there was a real need.

9588. Are you aware that at the present moment a quasi-permanent financial settlement is being made with Madras, in which the contribution of Madras to the central exchequer in India is being reduced in small items from $\frac{2}{3}$ to $\frac{1}{3}$ of the revenue derived from the province?—I have heard of it, but I have no definite information.

9589. If that is true, although there is a difference between the permanent land settlement in Bengal and the temporary system in Madras, it is yet possible for the Government of India to reduce the contributions of the various provinces?—Yes, if they take less. I should like to add this on the point as to whether the provincial Governments would have an eye to the growth of revenue. I would like to give you as an instance the growth of income tax in Madras; from 1886 to 1902-03 it has risen from 13 to 29 lakhs, over 116 per cent. Under Part IV., which affects the common people, the tax has risen from Rs. 8,68,000 to 22 lakhs, that is, 175 per cent.; whereas in other provinces the increase is about 10 or 15 or 20 per cent.

9590. Is income tax levied upon accumulated profits?—Virtually it comes to that in the assessment.

9591. Then is not the growth of income tax a guide to the increase of prosperity in the country?—Of a particular section of the community, yes, if the taxation is really fair.

(The witness withdrew.)

The Hon.
Mr. B. Narasimhaswara
Sarma.

5 Dec., 1907.

M. R. Ry. SUBHA RAO PANTULU AVARGAL was called and examined.

M. R. Ry. '9592. (Chairman.) You were a member of the Legislative Council of Madras and of various local bodies engaged in Local Government for a number of years?—Yes.

5 Dec., 1907.

The administration has in a manner become mechanical and it may be briefly described as an administration of reports and statistics. The personal element of the Executive Officer, including the tahsildar, does not play an important part, and not much discretion is left to local officers in the administration of the district. The most important portion of the work of the local officers is now the collection of revenue. At one time they had large discretion in the matter. They would allow raiyats who could not afford to pay in time, to give security of property for payments, leaving such property in his possession. They would allow payments to be postponed and in various ways consult the convenience of the raiyat. A rule was issued some years ago that not a pie should be left uncollected by the end of the fasi; latterly this was changed from the end of the fasi to the end of March, and now the rule is that every pie should be collected punctually according to the dates fixed. It is an open secret that village officers find money in case of shortage of collections, so that they may be in a position to report nil balance for their village.

No discretion is left to the local officer to grant any remission whatsoever in individual cases where there is a partial loss of crops on wet lands. It is only where there is a total failure of crops on wet lands that he can grant remission, and total failure is determined only when there is no more than one anna or one-sixteenth of the "ordinary crop" on the entire field and not on portions thereof. With regard to dry lands, the local officers have no discretion whatever to grant remission in individual cases.

The distribution of water is entirely under the control of the Public Works Department. The inferior agency for the distribution of water, viz., the Delta Superintendents, is corrupt. The Revenue Department is powerless to help the raiyat with regard to his complaints about the inadequate supply of water. In consequence of the new system of pipe irrigation introduced en bloc into almost the whole of the Godavari delta in the beginning of this season without consulting the Revenue Officers or the people concerned, the supply of water has not been adequate and there have been loud complaints to the revenue authorities against the procedure adopted.

In several other matters local officers are tied down to rules and have no discretion whatever to spend small sums in anticipation of sanction.

An Upper Subordinate Service might be created on salaries beginning with not less than Rs. 50 and tahsildars and deputy tahsildars, etc., recruited from their ranks and not from those who have risen from clerkships on Rs. 15.

It would be well if the inspection made by the members of the Board of Revenue were not confined to their special departments, but extended to the administration of the district in general, the relation between the European officers and the people, and the economic condition and welfare of the district, etc.

I am of opinion that the policy of Government is too much dominated by considerations of revenue.

- (a) The latest example of this tendency is to be found in the way in which Government enfranchised the service inams in proprietary villages under Act II. of 1894. When similar inams were enfranchised in Government villages, they fixed the quit rent at five-eighths of the paimash assessment and placed them on the same footing as other inams enfranchised by the inam Commissioner. But when the Act was brought into force, the Government issued instructions that they should be enfranchised at the full assessment, and subjected them also to a periodical revision every 30 years. The holders of these inams have been reduced to the position of raiyyatwari holders without the privilege of obtaining remissions, which the latter possess.

- (b) The manner in which the districts of Godavari and Kistna were recently re-settled has resulted in the violation of pledges made from time to time by the Government that there would be no re-classification of soils or the grain outturn at the revision of settlement, and that the revision would be made solely with reference to the prices of food grains. Notwithstanding, the districts of Godavari and Kistna were recently re-settled on the basis of re-classification of soils.

- (c) In the re-classification of soils raiyats' improvements should not be taken into account. But when in the Godavari and Kistna deltas there was a permanent improvement in the character of the soil on account of the use by the raiyat of the anicut water for which he paid a fair commercial value as determined by the Government, the Government taxed this improvement, and made the re-classification on the basis of the present improved character of the soil.

- (d) Even sand taken from the dry bed of the river for bonâ fide domestic purposes is taxed, so also water taken from the river in pots for watering plants as well as trees. Even rain water collected in pits by the side of the railway, if occasionally used for watering plants, does not escape taxation. In a taluk in the Kistna district thousands of rupees were collected by way of penal assessment for earth taken from dwelling sites in villages for manuring fields, and attempts are even made to tax water taken from roadside pits for making bricks.

European Executive Officers have ample opportunities of coming in contact with the people. Under the rules they tour about their divisions for about five months in the year and have to hold jamabandi once a year when they might come in contact with the raiyats of the division. The jamabandi as at present conducted is a farce.

The obstacles in the way of their obtaining intimate knowledge of the wishes and wants of the people are various:—

Their imperfect knowledge of the vernaculars, as also of the ideals, customs and manners of the people. Their disinclination to mix freely with the people and consult them. Their exclusiveness, assumption of superiority, and want of sympathy towards the people of the country. Their consciousness that in the ordinary course they will rise to the grade of a District Collector or District Judge. Want of time due to their being called upon to discharge magisterial duties in addition to their revenue and other work.

The appointment of Indians to the Executive Council and the Board of Revenue will go to some extent to improve the present situation. Such appointments will tend to considerably check the corruption in the Subordinate Service now so much complained against. As far as my enquiries go, the services in Mysore compare favourably with those in this Presidency, the main reason being that the heads of departments there being Indians, they have ample opportunities of becoming acquainted with what is going on around them, and the consciousness on the part of the subordinates themselves that there are men at headquarters who are sure to know if they misbehave, serves also as a check on their conduct.

Some palliatives may be suggested to improve the existing state of things:—

- (1) The members of the Indian Civil Service should not be promoted to the office of District Collector as a matter of course, but a careful selection should be made on proof of fitness and sympathy with the people.
- (2) Those that are appointed to the Executive line should for some time serve as tahsildars in charge of taluks or portions thereof, and this will bring them in actual touch with the people and their wants.
- (3) The present vernacular tests should be made more difficult and, in my opinion, it is better to insist on a good knowledge of one vernacular than a superficial knowledge of two vernaculars, as is now done.
- (4) The duties of Revenue Officers should be lightened and they might be relieved of their magisterial duties, etc., so that they may have more time to attend to the general administration and the wants of the people.
- (5) The Collector's sherishtadar should be an officer of a higher grade, belonging to the Provincial Service, and he should act as a personal assistant to the Collector; and his opinion should be submitted to the higher authorities on all important matters along with the opinion of the Collector.

The important question in connection with municipal administration is how to enlarge their powers in matters of finance. The crying need of each municipality is a good water-supply and a drainage scheme, which are now beyond their resources. The recent policy of the Government of India is to restrict grants by the provincial Government for this purpose. In several municipalities the maximum amount of taxation under the Act has been reached, and there is no prospect whatever of municipal revenues becoming more elastic unless powers are given for raising funds by further taxation. But there are no further sources to be tapped. The only remedy is that a portion of the imperial revenues should be ear-marked and distributed every year among municipalities. The whole or a portion of the revenue derived from excise within municipal limits should be left to municipalities, and this will go a great way to relieve their chronic poverty. If this is not feasible, the profession tax should be abolished, and in its place municipalities be empowered to levy income-tax, municipal areas being exempted from the operation of the Income Tax Act, II. of 1886.

With regard to administrative powers, municipalities have no free play at present and are too much restricted by Government control.

- (a) Municipal schools are run practically by the educational inspecting agency of Government. They are subject to their supervision and control. Though the power of appointment, dismissal, and promotion is vested in the Chairman, still in practice the recommendation of the educational authority is absolute. Even in the case of leave and transfer, the Inspecting Officer takes the initiative and appoints or transfers a person subject to the approval of the Chairman later on. Municipalities should be placed in this respect in the position of the Managers of aided schools.
- (b) Government medical subordinates employed in municipal hospitals are generally appointed and transferred without consulting the wishes of the Council. The Medical Department should invariably consult the wishes of the Councils in appointing and transferring medical subordinates in municipal institutions.
- (c) The working of section 39 of the Municipal Act with regard to Municipal Secretaries has not been a success in several places. It has brought into existence a conflict between the Council and the Secretary when the Secretary is supported by the Government officers. Under the Act the Secretary is independent of the Chairman in the control of the office and collection staff, though the Chairman is directly responsible for municipal administration and the entire executive power is vested in him. I think the Secretary must be placed on the same footing as the other servants of the Council.

- (d) Municipalities ought to have control over the location of liquor and toddy shops within its limits, and should have some power to inspect them and see that the rules are observed, and that these shops are not a nuisance to the neighbourhood.
- (e) At present there is a double detective and prosecuting agency—municipal and police—regarding the offences against the Municipal Act. The result of this double agency causes much oppression, besides resulting in inefficiency. With regard to offences under the municipal law, municipalities should either have a separate police force of their own, the ordinary police having nothing to do with this branch of work, or the police force must be separated and a part thereof deputed for municipal work, acting under the control and supervision of municipalities.

District and taluk Boards, as at present constituted, are quasi-departments of Government, and the people have no effective voice in the control of Local Fund affairs. It is desirable that each taluk should have a taluk Board, as far as possible with a non-official President and Vice-President. The District Board should consist only of members elected by taluk Boards from among their number with an elected President wherever available. The members of taluk Boards should be elected. The Collector and Divisional Officers might be ex-officio members of the District Board and the tahsildars ex-officio members of the taluk Boards of their taluks.

Taluk Boards might be given some control over the disposal of unoccupied land in the villages belonging to Government. They might well be consulted in the disposal of such lands, and in case the Executive Officer differs from the Board, the matter should be submitted for the orders of Government.

I am against investing the District Board with powers of supervision and control over smaller municipalities. If feasible, a District Committee consisting of representatives—one elected by each municipality and taluk Board and one by the District Board where necessary—might be formed for each district with certain defined powers affecting local self-government in the district. Such a body may be entrusted with some of the powers now exercised by the Collector and Government, such as the conduct of elections, questions relating to taxation, etc., subject to such rules as the Government may frame in such matters, and the general inspection of the working of local bodies. The experiment may be tried in selected localities at the outset.

Under British rule the village panchayat system has disappeared. The village headman and karnam have lost their old status. They have become practically mere tax-gatherers of the village and the instruments of the Revenue Officers in the collection of revenue. The position of the village munsiff does not inspire confidence in the village, owing to various causes. There is now little inclination in the village to refer disputes to arbitration. No doubt the Village Courts Act, I. of 1889, authorizes village munsiffs to entertain suits up to Rs. 20. But the bulk of suits below that amount is tried by the district munsiffs. It would be a great advantage if panchayats are constituted for the trial of petty civil and criminal cases and also for looking after sanitation, education, and police in the village. The panchayat may also take cognizance of such revenue matters, especially irrigation disputes, as may be left to it by the revenue authorities. On such a panchayat, especially in the trial of civil and criminal cases, the village munsiff and karnam should have no place. The members of the panchayat ought to be elected and not nominated. The jurisdiction in the trial of civil suits must be exclusive and not concurrent with other Courts. The Board for education and sanitation may be similarly constituted. The unit of area may be a single village or group of villages, according to local conditions. The legislation that might be introduced for bringing into existence these Boards should at the outset be more of an enabling character giving the villages the right to apply for the introduction of the Act.

I view with favour the formation of Administrative Councils consisting of the District Collector and at least two Indian gentlemen of independence, seeking no favour or promotion at the hands of the Government. To secure such persons and make the Council really effective and popular, one of them at least must be elected at the outset. I think such a Council might command the confidence of the people in matters that may be specially delegated to them, such as revisions of settlement, remissions, famine relief, plague measures, education, agricultural loans, irrigation questions, the administration of the income-tax and excise, control and supervision of Local Boards, &c. In case the creation of Administrative Councils is not feasible, the creation of Advisory Councils for the district might be of some help for the present in the administration of the country. It might consist of about a dozen persons and be formed on an elective basis. The opinion of the Council on any subject referred to it should be submitted to the Government with that of the District Officer; and there must be sufficient safeguards to ensure that the opinion of the Council is availed of in the administration of the country and not treated as the opinion of assessors in Sessions cases triable with them.

Whether Advisory or Administrative Councils are brought into existence or not, I think that the jamabandi now conducted in each taluk may be made a reality. On such an occasion a conference of the leading men of the taluk might be convened, and their wants and wishes fully ascertained. Similarly a district conference might be held once a year and its views on matters affecting the district should be conveyed to Government with the opinion of the Collector; and if it is to result in any good, the Government should communicate its views to the conference.

It is highly undesirable to curtail the right of appeal to the Local Government now enjoyed in respect of administrative action, for the right is much valued and appreciated by the people and the curtailment will cause much discontent. Besides, these appeals, when properly studied and carefully scrutinized, will afford valuable information to Government as to how several laws and executive orders are worked in practice which no official report can supply. The Government will also have the advantage of knowing how District Officers have been carrying out their orders.

The right of appeal to the Local Government, now granted to officers affecting them personally, is not unnecessarily liberal and it requires no curtailment. If it is taken away, a sense of insecurity will be engendered, and the service will not attract the best talent in the country.

9593. You have served as Chairman of the Rajahmandri Municipality for some time. Had you, as Chairman of that body, a considerably free hand in the administration of the affairs of the municipality?—No, not quite a free hand.

9594. The municipality framed its own budget?—Yes.

9595. Did it submit that budget to the Collector?—Yes, through the Collector to the Government.

9596. During the year you were Chairman, did you find that many alterations were made in the municipal budget?—It is a long time since I was Chairman, but, generally speaking, I can say that the municipality, even if it wants to increase the pay of a peon or of a clerk by a rupee, has to go up to Government for sanction.

9597. Would you suggest to us that the principal duty of a municipality is to enlarge the pay of the peons?—No.

9598. Therefore the restriction upon the increased pay of a peon could be such a very trifling matter that even if it had to go up to Government it would not be a serious restriction on the rights of the municipality?—Not a serious restriction, I would say.

9599. In the case of the more serious restrictions on the municipality, did you find that the action of the Collector restricted your freedom? For instance, during your term as Chairman did your municipality make any suggestions with regard to sanitation?—I do not recollect exactly. For instance, so far as increased taxation is concerned, the Government has got the potent voice in increasing the taxation of the town; the wishes of the Municipal Council are not of much weight so far as increasing the taxation of the town is concerned; if Government think that the taxation of a particular town should be increased, practically it is carried out.

9600. With regard to the decrease of taxation, have you a free hand?—I do not think so; neither as to increase nor decrease practically; I think the policy is determined by the Government so far as the general incidence of taxation is concerned.

9601. Your members of the municipality are elected?—Yes, a portion of them.

9602. Did you form committees to deal with this or that subject?—Yes.

9603. And did the committees, when you framed your budget, make an estimate of the expenditure each in his own charge?—They made the estimates; the supervision over the expenditure generally is entrusted to these committees.

9604. But who frames the expenditure?—The Municipal Council, as a whole.

9605. Did you find much, or any, interference with your proposals during the ten years that you were a councillor and the one year you were a Chairman?—Yes, there was usually interference with regard to how much should be spent on roads, how much on sanitation and other heads.

9606. Do you think at all events that the municipalities should be free both to increase the pay of peons and to do other things as well?—Up to a certain limit.

9607. You think there ought to be some controlling voice over the action of municipalities?—Yes, some control.

9608. You were a member of the taluk Board and the District Board?—Yes.

9609. The powers of the District Board and of the taluk Board are more restricted than those of the municipality?—Yes.

9610. Were there committees of the District Board in existence when you were a member?—I was on one committee of the taluk Board, in connection with education, if I remember rightly, to see whether the number of schools was sufficient and how far the number could be reduced.

9611. Were the recommendations of those committees accepted by the taluk Board?—I think so, generally.

9612. How many members are there on the District Board here?—At one time there were about 32 members I think.

9613. Is that number sufficient to represent the whole district which is covered by their jurisdiction?—It might be more; it might go up to 50.

9614. Would you find 50 persons in the district who would gladly go some considerable distance to attend the meetings?—Yes.

9615. If you had a system of sub-committees, how often would the members of the Board have to meet?—I think the present system would do, namely, meeting once a month; the sub-committees might meet at the time of the meeting of the Board, and might sit on for two or three days or for any time that might be required, and go through the work.

9616. They would not find any difficulty in coming from their homes to the centre of the district for two or three days?—No, not those who are appointed to the District Board, because they are generally well-to-do people who can afford to stay away.

9617. Are the members who are now serving on the District Board representative of all the communities in the district?—Fairly, I think. I mean the intelligent portion of the district, that is all I would say. It is not by every sect that the representation is made, but a general representation of the intelligence of the district. The landed interests and the leading men of the district are generally chosen.

9618. The District Board does not frame its own budget?—It does frame its own budget; there are budgets submitted by the taluk Boards, which are consolidated and submitted to the Government.

9619. Are these prepared by the District Board as a whole, or by the Collector who is President of the District Board?—By the Collector.

9620. Are the members of the District Board, as a matter of fact, consulted when the budget is framed?—No.

9621. About three-fourths of the money which is expended by the District Board is raised by a cess?—Yes.

9622. And about one-fourth is provided by the provincial Government?—Yes; practically from the cesses.

9623. You would not altogether disregard the 25 per cent. which comes from the provincial Government?—No.

9624. If you had to make up that quarter, it would rather increase your expenditure?—Yes.

9625. Would it increase your popularity in the district at the same time?—Oh no.

9626. Would you agree that that sum of money which is provided by the provincial Government to the District Boards requires that there should be some control by the provincial Government over the expenditure?—Yes.

9627. But in consideration of the other three-fourths which the district finds, you think there ought to be a much greater degree of control by the members of the District Board?—Yes.

9628. Then with regard to the powers which the Local Boards Act of 1884 enables the Government to confer upon District Boards, you would like to see a considerable delegation of power under that Act?—Yes.

9629. What is it at the present moment that the President, who represents the District Board, can do—no doubt by his own authority, but in the name of the Board?—He has got entire supervision over the Public Works Department, which is the most important department of the District Board.

9630. That is, roads and buildings?—Roads, buildings, and things of that kind.

9631. Sanitation?—Vaccination and sanitation.

9632. Is there any particular direction in which (apart from a delegation of power) you, as a member of the District Board, would like to see powers given which you think could be usefully given to the Board, or are the powers of the District Board sufficient if they were only exercised by the members instead of by the President alone?—I would like the President not to be the District Collector as at present, but a non-official elected by the District Board. I would have no objection, under those circumstances, that the restrictions now placed on the President be continued for some time.

9633. (Mr. Dutt.) You speak of the kistbandi not suiting the conditions of the different taluks in this district?—So far as the wet kists are concerned, I consider that they do not suit the convenience of the raiyats; it would be a great advantage if the kists were altered at least by a month later.

9634. What are the kists here?—The wet kists are January, February, and March.

9635. When would you like them to be?—I would like them to be February, March, and April.

9636. The fashi year ends in June?—Yes.

9637. You have said in your statement that the supply of water has not been adequate, and that there have been loud complaints to the revenue authorities against the procedure adopted?—Yes.

9638. Is it the fact that crops have not been reaped by the time the kist comes round?—This year there have been loud complaints; I have got lands myself and my raiyats have also made complaints to me.

9639. Have you gone to the place, and seen whether the supply of water is insufficient?—No. I have not gone for certain reasons.

9640. Did you get any redress?—Latterly, just a month or two ago, there was a new additional Assistant Engineer appointed, who was good enough to inspect the lands, and he allowed additional spouts which gave them some relief.

9641. You think that if the revenue authorities had some control over the distribution of water you would get speedier redress in that way?—I certainly think so.

9642. And therefore you recommend that the revenue authorities should have a larger control over the distribution of water?—Yes.

9643. You have made a recommendation that when the members of the Board of Revenue come to inspect different districts their inspection should extend to administration in general and not only to their particular departments. Is that practicable?—I mean an enquiry into the general state of the district, whether the relations between the Executive Officers and the people are smooth, and whether there are no serious complaints; how the work is being conducted, whether there is oppression on the part of the District Officers, and whether there is contentment among the people. At present we do not know whether the member of the Board comes to the district or not; it is only the people connected with the department that can know of his visit to the district.

9644. You refer in your statement to a taluk in the Kistna district where “thousands of rupees were collected by way of penal assessment for earth taken from dwelling sites”?—Yes, that is the information I received; I did not go to that place myself.

9645. You have said that the major source of the income of the District Board is the local cess?—Yes.

9646. Can you say whether the local cess was previously assessed on the land and water rate also?—I do not remember.

9647. At present the local cess is assessed on the consolidated land and water rate?—Yes.

9648. Would the formation of Advisory Boards to advise the Collector be a move in the right direction?—Yes; between the Advisory Board and Administrative Boards I would prefer Administrative Boards, and, if that is not feasible, as the next resort, I would have Advisory Boards.

9649. Can you mention a few matters in regard to which the advice of the Advisory Board would be of value to the Collector?—In the matter of plague measures, famine relief, income tax, the general state of the country, the remissions that might be made in a particular year—what proportion they are to be fixed at—some such matters as these.

9650. Is not the income tax now assessed by the tahsildar?—Up to a certain extent, then by the Divisional Officer, and so on.

9651. In what way could the members of the Advisory Board help in the assessment of income tax?—They could give their views as to whether a man was a fit person to be assessed at a particular amount.

9652. That is to say, that, when the appeals came to the Collector, he would take the opinion of the Advisory Board?—Yes.

5 Dec., 1907.

9653. (Mr. Hichens.) Would you allow municipalities to frame their own budgets without any Government control?—There must be some control.

9654. You would have the budget sent up to the Government for sanction?—Yes.

9655. Would you have certain appointments subject to the sanction of the Government?—Up to a certain limit of salary they might have a free hand.

9656. And dismissals?—Dismissals also, up to a certain limit.

9657. What is your objection to leaving those matters altogether to be settled by the municipality itself?—There is no objection except that it will not be granted under the present circumstances; Government consider that the municipalities are not advanced, or at least not sufficiently advanced, to be entrusted with the power of appointing their own men up to any amount of salary.

9658. You think that the municipalities are not at the present time such a body as would make it desirable to give them full power?—Not to appoint any person.

9659. Are you afraid that some misfortune would happen—that they would do something indiscreet?—Yes, they may not select the best person available.

9660. But who would it affect in that case—who would suffer?—The municipality itself.

9661. The ratepayers?—Yes.

9662. Then will they not turn out the men who abuse the confidence reposed in them and elect some one else?—Not quite, because public opinion is not so advanced as to assert itself in the municipality.

9663. (Mr. Meyer.) Would the creation of fresh municipalities be a popular measure?—No, because as soon as the municipality is created there is taxation, and very soon the taxation reaches the maximum limit prescribed under the Act, and even the revenue that is derivable from all the sources of the municipality is not sufficient to meet its demands, so that people do not feel that they get adequate return for the municipal franchise that is given to them.

9664. There is that difficulty then in the way of the extension of local self-government—that the people themselves, or, at any rate, a great number of them, do not want it?—It is not quite in that way that I would like to put it. The finances of the municipality are so limited, and so disproportionate to its needs, that municipal administration is not popular, and therefore there must be more sources of revenue available, without, at the same time, too much burden being thrown on the people.

9665. From that point of view would there not be a danger of the revenue derived from people living in a rural area being applied to the benefit of people living in a few towns?—I consider it is altogether a mistake to apply to our municipalities the principles that are applied in the West. Our municipalities are not on the same footing as the municipalities in western countries. A great number of the people are poor and some parts are agricultural; therefore, we cannot get adequate revenue from the municipality itself. Even in England and America the liquor licenses and death duties and other sources of revenue are given to the municipalities.

9666. Do you know of any case in which a municipality in England gets the income from death duties?—The probate duties I think they are called.

9667. Or income from liquor licences?—Yes; at any rate some portion of the imperial revenue is handed over. So far as the necessities of the municipalities are concerned, some grant might be made annually by Government, so that they might satisfy all their needs and make municipal administration somewhat more popular than it is.

9668. Has not an increase of taxation to be sanctioned by the municipal Council?—Yes.

9669. Therefore, it is not precisely forced upon them by Government?—Practically, that is my experience.

9670. You spoke of the necessity of the Government securing some control over a municipality, checking the budget, and so forth. Might not that control be expediently delegated to the Collector?—No; if it is to be given to somebody, I would rather like it to be with the Government, or with some other body which is elected by different municipalities and District Boards.

9671. You mention the control of the municipal schools by the Education Department. You say that Educational Officers appoint teachers in the municipal schools and give them leave without reference to the Chairman, and then send in the matter for his formal sanction. Is that practice continued at present?—That is so.

9672. Does the same thing occur in the taluk Board schools?—Yes, I think so.

9673. Is there too much interference by the Educational Department over the educational policy of these local bodies?—Yes.

9674. As regards sanitation, do you complain of anything of the same sort; are local bodies sufficiently left to themselves in the matter of sanitation?—I think so, fairly; they have got a sanitary staff, and they look after everything except sending up estimates and so on.

9675. Have you ever considered whether they send up an unnecessary number—whether they might not be left more to themselves in regard to petty projects?—In regard to petty projects, I think they might.

9676. You refer to the desirability of the municipality maintaining a separate police force. Would that be expedient?—Yes, it seems to me to be necessary also.

9677. To deal with riots?—Not in that sense; I am only dealing with offences against the Municipal Act.

9678. You want to have two sets of police, the police for law and order, still under the Government, and the police for dealing with offences against sanitation and so forth, under the municipality?—Yes, so that the duties may not be discharged by one and the same person; a portion of the police being told off to do municipal duty. That is my idea.

9679. It is alleged by some persons that there is a certain amount of corruption on the part of police constables and others. Assuming that to be true, would you not have two bribetakers instead of one under your system?—But the number of offences would not be more, and the bribe is according to the offence committed.

9680. Are not the budget estimates placed before the District Board at a meeting?—The budget is prepared by the Collector; of course it goes before the whole Board.

9681. It goes before the Board at a special budget meeting?—Yes; of course it is sanctioned, but I would say that no one understands it.

9682. Are there not schedules showing the roads to be repaired, and the roads to be constructed, and so on?—Everything is there cut and dried, but nobody understands it.

9683. Surely you would understand it?—I was there, and I did not know one item of the budget. The budget is placed before us there, and it is passed; it is not gone through item by item, or head by head.

9684. Does it not lie on the table; is it not possible for members to find out what is being done?—I do not think it is on the table. I wanted the budget and all the papers to be laid on the table, but it was not done during the time I was a member.

9685. You suggest that the Collector should not be the Chairman of the Board, but that there should be an elected Chairman?—Yes.

9686. In that case would you give the Collector any powers of outside control?—No; it is the Government who should have that. The Collector should be a member of the Board like any other, if the Government chose to appoint him.

9687. The Collector is to be divorced from all matters affecting the welfare of the district as regards roads and sanitation and education, is that your idea?—Yes, except that as the mouth-piece of the Government the papers would go through him.

9688. He would have no direct influence?—No direct interference.

9689. Your Collector would become a mere Revenue Officer and Magistrate?—I think he has other duties besides those, which would take up all his time; I think it would be an advantage from the point of view of relieving the Collector. The Board should be in the same position as the municipality is.

9690. You think it would be really of advantage to make the Collector simply an officer dealing with revenue matters, and with magisterial work, and having nothing to do directly with the other work of the municipality?—That is my opinion, if local self-government is to be improved in any way.

9691. You spoke about the kists not being suitable in this district. Have you, or other people, made representations on the subject?—Yes, that was one of the points connected with the settlement raised in the memorial submitted by the District Association.

9692. That was some years ago?—Yes.

9693. But have you made any recent representations?—No, it is no use.

9694. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) I understand that your local self-government organisation would be District Boards or municipalities on which the Collector would not sit, and you suggest that in order to assist the Collector you might have an elective Administrative Council which should help him in various branches. If that were realised, do you think that the Council would be adequate to exercise the outside Government control over the Local Boards and municipalities?—Yes.

9695. So that your Administrative Council might develop into a second step in local self-government, exercising higher control, and nothing need go outside the district at all?—Yes.

9696. You would in that case think it unnecessary for budgets or any other matter to go up to Government; they could all be settled by the Collector and the Administrative Council?—Yes.

9697. (Sir Frederic Lely.) You have been familiar all your life with village life?—Yes, I know village life pretty well.

9698. And your father before you?—No, we do not live in villages, we live in towns like Rajah-mandri.

9699. You are a landowner?—Yes, I have got lands in villages.

9700. Can you tell me, from your actual knowledge of what is done, whether the jamabandi was formerly more of a reality than it is now?—Yes, that is the tradition. Some 20 or 30 years ago it was more popular, and used to attract lots of raiyats, and the Collectors used to hear their grievances and spend more time upon them.

9701. It is suggested that visiting the villages one by one brings the British officer in contact with the people just as well as at the jamabandi?—I do not think he visits the villages with that purpose.

9702. But if he did, is there not an advantage in getting, say, 10 or 12 villages together?—Yes.

9703. Is that not really a council of the best sort?—It would be an advantage.

9704. It is a spontaneous council?—Yes.

9705. Then as to the karnam in the village; he is the last in the string of officials between the Supreme Government and the people?—Yes.

9706. And in some respects he is the most important officer in the interests of the people?—Yes.

9707. We are told that the office of karnam is one that is much desired?—Yes.

9708. Why should you say it is desired?—Because it gives the holder some position of influence in the village.

9709. Not because of the pay?—The pay is not much, and is not attractive either; it gives the karnam a position and one thing and another.

9710. Irregular gains?—One thing and another—everybody understands.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. K. PERRAJU was called and examined.

9711. (Chairman.) You have been a member of the Legislative Council of Madras?—Yes.

9712. And a member of the municipal Council of Cocanada?—I was its Chairman for eight years. I have also been a District Board member and an Honorary Magistrate.

9713. Are the duties of the Collector of this district too numerous for any one officer to do?—Yes.

9714. You wish to lay stress upon the fact that although the Collector has all these duties to perform, very often he possesses so little knowledge of the vernacular that he cannot really discharge many of these duties adequately?—That is so.

9715. It is clear in your judgment that any officer who is the head of the Revenue Department, who is a Magistrate, Political Agent, Collector of Sea Customs, Head of the Police, Head of the District Board, and Court of Wards agent, must especially know the language which is spoken by the people over whom he has jurisdiction?—Certainly.

9716. Have you noticed that there has been a falling off in late years in the knowledge of the vernacular amongst officers?—Yes, it is very remarkable.

9717. To what do you attribute that?—Before, all the correspondence between the taluk and the huzur was in the vernacular. All petitions were presented in the vernacular; there was then the greater necessity to hear all petitions just as they were and to understand them, but now all the correspondence from taluks to huzurs is in English.

9718. Can the tahsildar read the vernacular?—Yes, all tahsildars can.

9719. What is the cause of the change?—There is less desire on the part of the officials to have contact with the people, and to know them and to understand them.

9720. Do you know that as a matter of fact yourself, or is it only what you think?—I should think from what I have seen taking place.

9721. Is that because there is a greater reluctance on the part of the people, or because of a greater reluctance on the part of the officials?—I should put it down to indifference on the part of the Executive Officers.

9722. Where do most of the officers do their work?—In their offices, or at their homes.

9723. Where is the Collector's office for instance?—A Collector does most of his work in his house.

9724. Has he no office at the Collectorate?—There is a room in the Collector's house used for the office, and there will be one clerk in attendance, and most of the work is done there, except revision work perhaps.

9725. Do you suggest that that makes any difference in the possibility of seeing the Collector?—Yes.

9726. Does it make it easier to get at the Collector?—If the Collector be in a recognised office, at a particular house, always accessible to the people, then there will be greater opportunities.

Mr. K.
Perraju,

5 Dec., 1907.

Mr. K.
Perraju.

5 Dec., 1907.

9727. Does that make a real difference?—It makes a good deal of difference.

9728. I take it that you are substantially in agreement with the previous witness that the powers of the municipalities and of the District Boards might very reasonably be increased?—I should say that the powers should be considerably increased, Government retaining to itself the power of veto and the power of passing the major heads of the budget. Instead of interfering with all the duties, I would restrict their interference to those matters, and, subject to that, the municipalities ought to be given absolute freedom.

9729. Would you agree that, if absolute freedom is to be given, absolute financial responsibility must be accepted?—Subject to Government assistance in matters affecting the general district.

9730. Then that is not absolute responsibility, if you are to be subject to Government assistance?—It is not absolute, but it would to a certain extent be absolute, because what the municipality has to spend will also be beneficial to the people of the district as a whole.

9731. Are you prepared to admit that if absolute freedom is given, absolute financial responsibility must be accepted?—You mean absolute responsibility without any aid from Government; no, I would not accept that.

9732. Then can you ask for absolute freedom?—That is why I said that Government should have control over the budget and Government should exercise their right of veto.

9733. Who is to exercise that control?—Government, through the Collector.

9734. I think you would agree with the evidence we have heard with regard to panchayats?—Yes.

9735. Do you think they are desirable?—Yes.

9736. (Sir Steynning Edgerley.) Did you hear the last witness' answers to my questions?—Yes.

9737. Are you of the same opinion?—Yes.

9738. If you had an Administrative Council, you would be prepared that the whole control of local self-governing bodies should remain in the district?—Yes.

9739. (Mr. Meyer.) What would be the character of your Administrative Council? Do you mean a nominated body or an elected body, or one made up of both elements?—An elective body.

9740. And it is only to such a body that you would surrender the control over the municipalities and Local Boards?—Yes.

9741. Without such an elected body you would think it desirable that the control should be exercised by the Provincial Government as at present?—Yes.

9742. Your body would be elected by whom?—By all the municipal members and Local Board members.

9743. Would that not be controlling them by themselves?—Well, they will return all the members; on the Boards we have got also some Government nominees. In the District Boards we have members appointed by Government.

9744. Half your District Board members are already elected?—Yes; I would extend it to three-fourths.

9745. Would you have the taluk Boards nominated or elected?—Elected.

9746. And the municipal councillors?—All elected.

9747. Then these bodies would elect a further body to control themselves?—Yes, subject to the veto of the Government.

9748. Veto of what—of the appointment of a 15-rupee clerk, for instance?—No, not with regard to these minor matters.

9749. What sort of matters would you reserve for the power of veto?—As regards all matters in which Government thinks that the decision of the body is not suitable to the interests of the district; in all such matters I would give them absolute discretion.

9750. One Secretary to Government told us in Madras that he thought there was a hurtful tendency on the part of local bodies to raise the pay of appointments on purely personal grounds. Would you think that the Government, if it held the same views, should veto such appointments?—Such cases will be infinitely small, and you do not frame a regulation with reference to some extreme cases.

9751. You think that the Government should have an absolute veto in all matters, whether large or small, but that they should exercise a reasonable discretion?—Yes.

9752. You spoke about the change in British officers in the matter of their knowledge of the vernacular. Is not the vernacular script rather difficult?—Not difficult, unless we are very bad penmen.

9753. As a lawyer you have seen a number of these arzis and other documents?—Yes.

9754. Are not the characters all run together, more or less; you cannot read them as plainly as you could read an English letter, for instance?—There may be bad writing even in English, but still we can read these arzis; we are accustomed to read them.

9755. An officer might be able to talk quite fluently and yet have a difficulty in reading the vernacular script?—Yes.

9756. So far then he would be dependent on what a clerk read out to him, if that is the case?—Yes.

9757. On the other hand if an English letter is sent up he understands it at once?—Yes.

9758. The bulk of your tahsildars now speak and write English fluently?—Yes.

9759. (Mr. Hichens.) The Government give no contribution to the funds of the municipality at the present time?—No.

9760. Ought they to contribute something?—If any large works such as water-works and drainage schemes, are to be brought out by the municipality, we depend on Government aid.

9761. You do not think it is right that Government should be asked to contribute towards the ordinary expenditure of the municipality?—No.

9762. Does the Government pay an assessment rate on its offices?—Yes.

9763. (Mr. Dutt.) You said that if an Administrative Council or Board was formed, you would entrust to them the supervision of District Boards and municipalities. What other duties would you be inclined to entrust to the members of the Administrative Board?—Income-tax appeals, the applicability of Government rules as regards settlements, such as settling the irrigation rates and the grain values; land remissions, agricultural education, and our side of the economic administration of the district.

9764. In all these matters would you leave the final power in the hands of the administrative body, or would you simply ask them to make their recommendations?—I would give them the power to decide them, subject to the general veto of the Government.

9765. In the matter of remissions, for instance, the Collector has certain powers; would you transfer those powers to the Administrative Board?—Yes, as regards their applicability to particular localities.

9766. And would you leave no power in the hands of the District Collector?—The District Collector would have all other powers, but if any remission is granted on a percentage to be fixed at discretion, that discretion he will exercise in Council.

9767. Do you say that the Collector should be a sort of Chairman of the Administrative Council?—Yes.

9768. And in those matters he would exercise his powers in consultation with the other members of the Council?—Yes.

9769. So that in regard to income-tax appeals he would dispose of them in consultation with the other members of the Administrative Council?—Yes.

9770. Would you also invest this Administrative Council with some powers of supervision over village panchayats and their work?—Yes.

9771. Are you generally in favour of the creation of village panchayats in small rural villages?—Yes.

9772. You are aware of the existence of certain village unions. In those cases would you abolish those unions and establish village panchayats, or would you keep the unions as they are?—I would leave the unions as they are, and leave all the principal administration to them.

9773. And in those places which have no unions you would recommend the creation of village panchayats?—Yes.

9774. Briefly, what kind of duties would you entrust to these village panchayats?—The settlement of all the petty criminal and civil disputes, village sanitation, village education, and such matters.

9775. Such as primary education?—Yes.

9776. (Chairman.) You think that the proposal which you make, which would involve a panchayat, a taluk Board, a District Board, and an administrative body, would not be an unnecessarily cumbersome method of Government?—No, certainly not.

(The witness withdrew.)

Adjourned.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

RAJAHMANDRI, Friday, 6th December, 1907.

PRESENT :

C. E. H. HOBHOUSE, Esq., M.P., Under Secretary of State for India, Chairman.

Sir FREDERIC LELY, K.C.I.E., C.S.I.

Sir STEYNING EDGERLEY, K.C.V.O., C.I.E., I.C.S.

R. C. DUTT, Esq., C.I.E.

W. S. MEYER, Esq., C.I.E., I.C.S.

W. L. HICHENS, Esq.

M. R. Ry. P. R. SUNDARA AIYAR AVARGAL was called and examined.

9777. (Chairman.) Have you any experience, as member of Local Boards, of the actual working of the administration of Government?—Not as a member. I am a vakil, or lawyer, spending about four or five months of the year in the mufassal in my practice. I am also a landowner.

Decentralization on any large scale would not be welcomed by the people of this country, unless it be accompanied by a substantially closer association of Indians in administrative work than now exists. Any large increase of the power of District Officers or Departmental Heads will be viewed with distrust, unless the exercise of those powers be checked and regulated by the counsels of persons credited with intimate knowledge of the country and undoubted sympathy with its people. I certainly think that the grant of larger powers to Collectors and other local authorities will involve the necessity for greater care in their selection. Again, I am not in favour of any scheme of decentralization which would involve any addition to the existing burden of taxation on the people. Any such system is in my opinion bound to fail.

I am in favour of the creation of Administrative District Councils to assist District Officers. The association of Indian Councillors with the Collector in his administrative work cannot fail to remove misapprehensions and to create trust and confidence in the Executive, and to promote feelings of cordiality and equality between Europeans and Indians. An Administrative Council must necessarily be a small one. I think it may consist of two or three Indian gentlemen. The following subjects may suitably be considered by such a Council:—

(a) Power finally to grant remissions, but in cases where they refuse to exercise their power, the aggrieved raiyat should have the right to appeal to the Local Government.

(b) Questions connected with the conservation and improvement of irrigation, particularly minor irrigation works, such as tanks, wells, etc., and questions connected with the improvement of agriculture.

(c) Considerable powers in the matter of primary and technical education, more especially the latter.

(d) The existing complaints regarding the way in which forest rules are enforced stand a much better chance of being redressed, if an Indian Councillor is in immediate charge of their administration or has a potent voice in it, than under the present system.

(e) There is hardly a subject with respect to which the people complain more loudly of arbitrary procedure and haphazard decision than this. I think appeals to the Revenue Board may be very much restricted if the District Council is entrusted with the administration of the tax.

(f) The grant of power in connection with the administration of the Arms Act is likely to remove the feeling of irritation which undoubtedly exists with respect to the manner in which the Act is worked.

(g) Sanitation, including work of all kinds to prevent the advent or spread of infectious diseases.

It may be necessary to invest the Collector with power to overrule his Council whenever he thinks it necessary in the public interests to do so, but in such cases, the protests, if any, of his Councillors should be forwarded to the Local Government for such action as they may choose to take in the matter. It should be made obligatory on the Collector to submit matters of particular descriptions to his Council and to take the opinion of the members thereon. I do not consider it advisable at present to constitute similar Councils for subdivisions of districts in general, but there may be no objection to trying the measure in a few selected subdivisions.

I would also advocate the formation of Representative Assemblies in each district, to be convoked once or twice every year, at which the members would be entitled to represent any grievance they please, to the Collector and his Councillors. These assemblies should be similar to those that now exist in Mysore, Travancore, and Pudukota. Their function should be purely to receive and impart information. Care should be taken to mix well together representatives of the landholding class and of the educated community.

So far as the Madras Presidency is concerned, I apprehend that the assumption that village communities are in existence at present is not correct. There are caste panchayats in plenty, but village communities representing all the communities in a village are, I think, conspicuous by their absence. It would be advisable to create and organise local panchayats, and to improve them where they already exist, although I must confess that there is great difference of opinion on the subject. I do not advocate a panchayat for each revenue village, but one for a number of villages conveniently grouped together for the purpose. I would suggest the delegation to such a panchayat of the decision of all minor offences and all petty civil disputes. Such panchayats might also act as Boards of Sanitation and as Courts of Conciliation and Arbitration, and it might be made a rule that disputes of certain kinds should go before them for their friendly intervention before the parties are permitted to resort to the ordinary judicial tribunals. They may be entrusted with the supervision of education within their jurisdiction. The scope of their functions might, indeed, be extended in various directions if they prove successful. I would suggest the trial of this system in selected parts of the country as an experimental measure in the first instance.

It is not advisable to give to District Boards any powers of supervision or control over the smaller municipalities of the district.

I do not think that the scope of the powers of municipalities and Local Boards need be extended. What is required is to relax the control now exercised over their action by the District Officer and Government and encourage them to exercise larger initiative powers than they now do.

Executive Officers do not possess a sufficient knowledge of the vernaculars. I think they have opportunities for personal contact with the people, but they do not properly utilise them.

I deprecate any curtailment of the right of appeal now possessed by officers of Government against orders affecting them personally. Such appeals may not often be successful, but the possibility of an appeal is some guarantee of careful action on the part of the authority passing the order.

9778. Do you think there ought to be Administrative Councils to assist District Officers, consisting of some two or three members?—Yes, I would say two rather than three.

9779. You suggest that this Council should have power to grant remissions of revenue?—Yes.

9780. In the first place, what responsibility would such an Administrative or Advisory Council have, supposing that the remission of revenue was so great as to embarrass the provincial Government or the District Board?—They have no individual responsibility themselves, but they act as heads of the district.

9781. But they would have no responsibility if in consequence of large remissions of revenue there was a considerable embarrassment of the funds of the provincial Government?—I do not know whether my position has been understood. I want them to be colleagues of the Collector—paid officials; they would have the same responsibility as the Collector now has; I only suggest that with regard to dry remissions they may have larger powers than the Collector now has. With respect to the remainder they would have the power that a Collector now has in conjunction with him.

9782. You desire that these officials should be paid?—That is my idea.

9783. You also think that these same gentlemen should be entrusted with considerable powers in the matter of primary and technical education?—Yes.

9784. What knowledge would they have of the working of either primary or technical education?—

I expect them to be chosen from amongst persons who have filled, say, the position of a Deputy Collector, or other gentlemen who are thoroughly acquainted with the conditions of the district.

9785. With regard to technical education, have you yourself any practical knowledge of the working of the administration of education?—Not by being concerned with the department itself.

9786. Do you know whether there are any technical schools in this Collectorate?—In Malabar we have got a commercial school.

9787. I mean in this district of Godavari?—I do not know whether there are any.

9788. Do you know whether the technical schools in the Madras Presidency have been a success or not?—They have been a success to a certain extent; I have been about the district in Calicut, Salem, and Madura, and I have enquired into the matter.

9789. Do you know whether or not the teaching which is given in technical schools at the present moment has failed to enable the scholars to find occupation afterwards?—My information is just the other way.

9790. Therefore, when the Director of Public Instruction tells us that there is a difficulty in providing the scholars of technical schools with subsequent employment, you think he is wrong?—May I know exactly what kind of technical education you mean? Do you mean commercial education?

9791. Commercial education is not technical education?—You mean industries; if he says so, he may be correct; I daresay he has made more minute enquiries.

9792. There may be a difficulty, with regard to technical education therefore?—I do not think there would be a difficulty in finding occupations; that is not my own opinion.

9793. Would it be advisable to form village panchayats?—Yes, I would group villages together for that purpose, so as to have sufficiently educated men who would be capable of doing the work. I do not think we should have a panchayat for each revenue village, at any rate to begin with.

9794. Does the system of village unions work well or not?—My information is that it does not—I mean in most places; some places do better than others.

9795. But you think that a system of village panchayats for a union of villages would work well?—I think it ought to be tried; I cannot say that I am quite confident. I think it should be tried.

9796. You would lead us to believe that there is no necessity to extend the scope and powers of municipalities?—I find that so far as the legislative provisions are concerned, they are enough; there might be a little relaxation of the power of control that is actually exercised. I have no actual experience by being a member, but so far as I know—and I have asked some gentlemen who have served on municipalities and District Boards—it does not seem necessary to extend the powers given by statute.

9797. Are you an inhabitant of Rajahmandri?—No. I live in Madras, but, as I said, I spend about four or five months of the year in the mufassal in various districts.

9798. (Sir Frederic Lely.) Do you know anything about the work of the village karnam?—I know something.

9799. Do you feel competent to give a personal opinion upon it?—I have obtained a certain amount of knowledge by visits to villages.

9800. I take it that you do not know very much about the inner life of the village?—I believe I know a good deal.

9801. Do you think yourself qualified to give an opinion as to the karnam—as to his character and qualifications?—As far as their qualifications are concerned, I think they are well qualified; the question really is about their honesty, but so far as their capacity is concerned I think they are qualified.

9802. Their honesty is doubtful?—Their honesty is not quite so good as it should be.

9803. Is their pay large enough?—No, I should increase their pay.

9804. (Mr. Dutt.) You have said that you would propose that the members of the Administrative Councils should be paid officials? How do you propose to select them?—I would select them from Sub-Judges, Deputy Collectors, retired officials, and from the Bar—I mean from among people who possess a certain amount of culture.

9805. Not men actually in Government Service?—They might be selected out of the Sub-Judges; men in Government Service might be promoted to that place; I expect it to be a place carrying about Rs. 800 or Rs. 1,000 salary.

9806. And you would leave the selection in the hands of the Government in that case?—For the present, certainly.

9807. You would limit their number to two or three?—Though I said three, I should say, on further consideration, not more than two. That will make it unnecessary to cut up districts. It will make it unnecessary to give a personal assistant to the Collector.

9808. You think with the help of the Administrative Council the Collectors would be able to manage the districts as they are at present?—I think so.

9809. Without reducing their size and increasing their number?—Yes; and I think they would be a substantial benefit to the administration on account of the local knowledge that the Councils would possess.

9810. You have mentioned certain duties in which the Collector might profitably consult these Councils. Have you anything else to say beyond what you have said already?—My idea is that when there are three gentlemen there should be a certain division of work between them; the two Indian colleagues of the Collector would probably be entrusted with subjects that required particular local knowledge of the people, questions of remission, education, forest administration, assessment and collection of income-tax (I am rather strong on that), and the administration of the Arms Act.

9811. Do you suggest that income-tax appeals should be heard by the Collector in consultation with this Administrative Council?—Yes; if the Collector does not think fit to give it over to one of the Councillors.

9812. And in case the Collector does not agree with the members, would you reserve to the Collector the power of acting on his own judgment?—At present, in any matter on which he disagrees he should have the power to overrule, but subject to the safeguards that I have referred to.

9813. With regard to technical education in villages, what kind of industrial schools do you refer to?—That would differ with each place. For instance, if we take groups of villages, a particular industry, which is more liked or for which the people have more special aptitude than others, might be taken up in that group; in a taluk probably there would be several industries taught. In a district town there would be a technical institute or something of that kind, but there should be something for each group of villages according to the aptitude of the people, and that could be best done by Indian gentlemen who are able to go about themselves among the villages and who themselves have knowledge.

9814. Would you recommend such industries as tanning or dyeing or metal work being taught in these village industrial schools?—Yes, there are several villages where metal work is done now; in those places the industry might be taught.

9815. With regard to the village panchayats, you have recommended that villages should be grouped together, for the present, for the creation of these panchayats?—Yes.

9816. You have mentioned certain duties which might be safely made over to the village panchayats?—Yes, and I have said that probably their scope might be extended when once we find them successful.

9817. Do you think that their work should be periodically supervised by an officer?—They should be looked after; I do not like very much interference, because they will soon lose their sense of responsibility, but all the same there must be a certain amount of supervision to see whether they are getting on healthily.

9818. You mean inspection, say, once a year?—Yes; pointing out defects, inquiring what steps they have been taking, what mistakes they have fallen into, and so forth.

9819. Would you entrust them with civil and criminal powers in petty cases?—Yes, undoubtedly. I wish them to act as Boards of Arbitration for much larger amounts, and Boards of Conciliation too.

9820. If that worked successfully, would you have matters for arbitration and conciliation referred to them by high authorities?—The Courts might do it. I have said that with respect to some classes of suits people should be required to go to them, before going to the Courts; for instance, in regard to family disputes; but other matters might be referred to them by the Courts where the Courts thought it proper; questions of account, for instance.

9821. Have you any experience of taluk administration by tahsildars; do you know much of the work of the tahsildars?—Only from the tahsildars themselves.

9822. Have you been in the taluk headquarters and seen the work of the tahsildars?—I have not seen them doing their work, but I have been in the taluk headquarters very often, and I have moved intimately with tahsildars. They complain very much of overwork, having to look after more than they can efficiently do.

9823. (Mr. Hichens.) Would not your proposal with regard to an Administrative Council, involve a considerable additional number of officers?—Two more in each district, but, in cases where the Collector has a personal assistant now, there would be only one more.

9824. That would involve additional expense?—I think not in the end; it would not necessarily involve additional expense. If you take other suggestions, some gentlemen have found it necessary, in order to enable a Collector to do his duty efficiently, that districts should be cut up; that would mean a great deal of additional expense, but according to my idea only two more people would be required in each district.

9825. You are in favour of a large increase in the matter of education?—Yes.

9826. That would cost money?—Yes, that would mean devoting to education a larger portion of our money than we now do.

9827. Who is to pay for that?—The general revenues of the country.

9828. You want increased taxation?—I am not sure of that; it might be possible to cut down expenditure in other directions.

9829. You would not put that on the District Boards?—I do not think that the District Boards should levy additional taxation for education; I am quite willing that they should be entrusted with more power in the matter of education.

9830. As a lawyer, you are acquainted with the laws relating to the municipal and local administration of the country?—Yes, I have a certain amount of acquaintance.

9831. You said that as far as the laws went they gave sufficient powers to Local Boards?—Yes, except perhaps in the matter of passing the budget.

9833. How far do you think relaxation should go? Should a District Board, for example, be entirely emancipated from Government control?—I think there should be a reserve of power.

9834. To put a concrete example, do you think the budget should be approved by the Government?—Ordinarily, Government should not interfere. What I mean is this; my opinion as to the institutions in this country is that they require to be looked after. I would have a reserve of power, but they should be sympathetically treated, and there should not be very much tightening of the reins.

9835. What do you mean by "reserve of power"? do you mean that the Government should specifically sanction the budget?—No; they might veto it.

9836. The budget should be sent to them each year, but they might veto it?—Yes.

9837. But under what conditions might they veto it?—If they so far disapproved of it as to consider that they should exercise that power.

9838. Would you say the same with regard to appointments—that the Government should have power of vetoing new appointments by the District Board?—I should say not; that necessity should very rarely arise.

9839. And with regard to increases of pay?—I think that might be left to the District Boards too.

9840. I ask you that, because many witnesses say that they think those are matters in which Government control should remain?—With regard to the budget, I think that the Government should have power to veto it; they should not interfere with regard to small increases of pay or appointments.

9841. But suppose the Government thought the municipality was not spending enough on education or on roads, might they insist that more should be spent on one or the other?—I think Government should have the power; if they think that very little is being spent, they might very well require the municipality to spend more on particular matters.

9842. (Mr. Meyer.) I am still not quite clear about your Administrative Councils; are they to share in all the work of the Collector?—I have mentioned certain special matters; my idea is that there should be particular questions on which the Government should say that the Collectors shall consult them.

9843. Then in some matters the Collector would still act by himself?—He might.

9844. And in other matters he would be a Collector-in-Council, so to speak?—Yes.

9845. It would be for Government to decide what those matters should be?—Yes; there should be a tabulation of subjects on which the Collector should consult the Council.

9846. And in the Collector-in-Council work, the Council as a whole would control the Divisional Officers and the tahsildars, as the Collector singly does now?—Yes, with the Collector-in-Council.

9847. For how long would you have your Councilors appointed?—I should say a period of five years.

9848. You say that this would reduce the work of the Collector, and therefore render personal assistants or a reduction of districts unnecessary; how would it reduce his work?—Some matters might be made over to the Councilors.

9849. Only minor matters?—I have mentioned those in which they should be particularly consulted; probably the Collector might think it advisable to give those matters over to them, leaving it to them to consult him on those matters in certain cases.

9850. You mean that there should be a portfolio system, each Councilor taking certain matters?—Yes, I am only trying to introduce into the district what we have at headquarters.

9851. But any matters of importance would have to come to the Collector and the Council?—Yes.

9852. In discussing these matters some time would be occupied?—Yes, there would be some time occupied.

9853. And you say that whenever the Collector disagrees with his Council he must refer to Government, although previously he might have acted on his own authority?—Yes.

9854. This would take up time?—I do not think there would be many occasions on which he would differ.

9855. Do you think that, notwithstanding these points, there would nevertheless be a considerable decrease in the Collector's work?—I think so.

9856. The Councilors, I understand, are also to control the District Boards and municipalities in some way?—Yes—all the functions of the Collector now would vest in the Councilors.

9857. That being so—you have admitted that in some matters the Government must have some control—might it not be possible to devolve that control on the Collector-in-Council? Take the municipal budget; instead of the budget going up to Government, might it not be dealt with by the Collector-in-Council?—The Collector-in-Council might sanction it if necessary; the power of veto of Government might be restricted still further in certain matters.

9858. That is to say, if the Collector and his Council thought the budget all right, he would pass it; if he thought there was something in which the Government ought to intervene, he would refer to the Local and Municipal Department?—Yes.

9859. And as regards the taluk Board budget?—The same.

9860. You have said that this Collector-in-Council should deal with educational matters; would you place the local educational officers, or the assistant inspectors, and so on, under the Collector-in-Council for that purpose?—My idea is that they should be inspecting and consultative officers, and the control of education should really be with the Collector-in-Council, if you have a Council.

9861. And therefore the Director of Public Instruction himself should only be an inspecting and advising officer?—I think so, and all further control will be exercised through Government in accordance with the wishes of the Director.

9862. You speak of this Council being able to act more sympathetically in the assessment of income-tax; could a small Council sitting at headquarters deal with the assessment of income-tax all over the district?—No; I expect the Indian Councilors and the Collector together to be able to do a great deal more work than a single Collector is now able to do; then the Indian Councilors would know a great deal more about the people of the district than a European could possibly do.

9863. I suppose you are aware that under the present system the tahsildar does the minor assessments?—But he is a subordinate; he is anxious not to reduce, because the matter has to go to the Collector.

9864. Under your system would all assessments be conducted by the Council?—No.

9865. You would leave the tahsildar to do his assessments?—Yes.

9866. And the same with the Divisional Officer?—Yes.

9867. But with a right of appeal to the Council?—Yes.

9868. You spoke of panchayats being established, not for one village, but for a group of villages; by whom would members of the panchayat be appointed?—At present I would have them appointed by the Divisional Officer or Collector—I say at present. My idea is that gradually it would be possible to introduce the elective system.

9869. Is it not one advantage of the panchayat system that the panchayat works on the spot and subject to the pressure of local opinion?—Yes.

9870. Would that advantage not tend to be lost if you had as a unit, not a single village, but several villages?—The area should be sufficiently small for local public opinion to act. I do not mean that the panchayat should have a very wide area; at the same time I am afraid that if you take single villages you will not get a sufficient number of competent men, and there would be factions; these are the two disadvantages I thought of in connection with single villages.

9871. You would have four or five villages?—Four or five revenue villages grouped together.

9872. Something like village unions sometimes are now?—You mean the village unions under the Act?

9873. Yes; revenue villages are grouped together; you would have a somewhat similar grouping together for your panchayat system?—Yes.

9874. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) If you had your portfolio system in the Administrative Council it would come to this, that one of these officers at Rs. 800 or Rs. 1,000 a month could issue orders to a Sub-Collector?—Only as a member of the Collector's Council. Whatever difference of opinion there may be with respect to the capacity of the people as a whole for self-government or for election, my recommendations are based on this, that individual Indians undoubtedly are qualified for high appointments, and if they are associated with District Officers that will tend to better government.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. V. KRISHNASWAMI AIYAR was called and examined.

9875. (Chairman.) You are a vakil of the High Court at Madras?—Yes.

9876. Have you been a member of any District Board or local body?—No. I have a house in Madras and I have a house in the mufassal at Kadaikanal.

9877. You want to tell us something about the delegation of further financial powers to provincial Governments as regards the creation of new appointments?—Yes.

9878. What is your experience in this matter?—Only as a public man.

9879. You have no practical experience of Government?—Except as a public man.

9880. Are you a landowner?—No, not now; I was.

9881. You do not wish to see any curtailment of the present right of appeal?—I do not wish for a curtailment of the present right of appeal.

9882. Is that in the case of appeals at law or appeals from administrative action by superiors?—Appeals from administrative action and appeals to the executive authorities which are provided for by law.

9883. Against the punishment of subordinates by superiors?—Yes.

9884. How far should the right of appeal go; we have had from various witnesses statements to the effect that one clear appeal above the officer who gives the first judgment ought to safeguard the person punished from injustice; do you think that that is too much, or is it too little?—Except in cases where any general principle is involved which would affect a class of cases, I would restrict it to one appeal; that appeal I would not give to the officer immediately above, but I would give it to the officer above him—the appeal should go through the officer immediately above.

9885. Let us take the case of a revenue inspector; the first punishment passed upon him would be by the tahsildar?—I believe it goes to the Divisional Officer; it is practically the tahsildar; I mean the tahsildar practically inflicts it, but the Divisional Officer has to give the formal sanction.

9886. You would restrict the right of appeal in that case to the Board of Revenue?—Yes, one appeal only. I should insist on the appeal going through the Collector with his remarks.

9887. Then the decision of the Board of Revenue upon that would be final?—Yes.

9888. In the case of the punishment of a tahsildar, again the Board of Revenue would be the final court of appeal?—Yes.

9889. That you think would satisfy justice and would also meet the general sentiments of the community?—Yes; on the other hand if you have too many appeals, as you have now, it leads to delay, it leads to an unnecessary spirit of gambling, as it were, going on appealing from one officer to another, without any compensating advantage. To keep the subordinate officer in check, so as to make him attend to his ordinary work, I think that one appeal is sufficient. The reason why I say the appeal should be to the officer above the immediate superior is this. Oftentimes one's experience is that the officer punishing takes his superior into consultation beforehand; that is a practice which seems to obtain very commonly, and the judgment of the immediate superior would therefore oftentimes be upon an ex-parte representation, either demi-official or otherwise. Furthermore, he is in personal contact with the officer, and the officer's chance of influencing his judgment is great.

9890. Is there any other point that you wish to make with regard to appeals?—No, except this; I would like this to be a widespread thing; I would like it even in the matter of appeals in the law courts.

9891. How do you get your knowledge of the view either of the Government of India or of the provincial Government being so much dominated, as you suggest, by revenue considerations?—I know from various public reports and various cases I see, what the tendency is of officers in the orders which they pass. I can give numbers of instances; as a public man I have kept my eyes open, and have been watching these things as they come to the notice of the public. I could give numbers of instances, not from my knowledge as an officer, but from my knowledge as a public man.

9892. Will you give us one concrete example?—I will give you the case of the income-tax. The Government raised the taxable minimum, and after they had done that we found in Madras all the people who were in the lower class were put up to the higher class, and the tax was exactly the same. That was a subject of public comment. The Government of India issued a resolution; the Government of Madras said that they could not explain at first how it was that although the taxable minimum was raised, the income-tax realised, instead of being less that year, practically came to the same figure; it could only be that the lower class had been pushed up to the higher class; a man who was assessed on an income of Rs. 500 was at once raised to the class of Rs. 1,000. This was made the subject of correspondence, and it was discovered that it was through the system adopted by the Collectors in order to keep the revenue as high as possible, of not making out the assessments in detail, but of raising the people to a higher class.

9893. Can you not escape from income-tax assessments by the production of your books?—If books are accepted; but books are not accepted in the case of the majority of the people.

9894. Were any appeals made against those decisions?—Yes. As a rule the income-tax appeals do not succeed; that is a complaint which I have heard from lots of clients of mine who have asked me to appear in support of income-tax appeals.

9895. Do they not succeed after production of the books, or do they fail because the books are not produced?—The books are produced, but they are not accepted except in the Presidency town where there is a very strong public opinion; in the mufassal the books are often not relied on.

9896. Are the books kept more carefully in the towns than in the mufassal?—They are likely to be books of English merchants; I do not think that they are much better kept by others.

9897. Then with regard to the question as to Executive Officers having sufficient opportunities of personal contact with the people, what do you think the obstacles are and what do you consider could be done to remove them?—First, there is the language obstacle; that is more of an obstacle than is recognised, for the reason that in case of the vernaculars the spoken language is very different from the language of the books. An officer who has passed an examination in the written language of the books is quite unequal to the spoken language. Apart from what test the examination provides, whether it is adequate or not, it is utterly unequal to acquaint him with the language that is spoken. Then the difference in the matter of our customs and habits constitutes a very important obstacle; an Englishman often misunderstands me if I appear before him, not dressed as I now am, but dressed in my usual dress, with a cloth round my loins and a cloth round my shoulders, as I appear in my own home and in very respectable society; he thinks that I have appeared before him in that dress almost to insult him. This difference alone almost imposes a kind of barrier to better relations being established between the people and the Executive Officers. Then, I think the difference of colour is an important factor. I think the fact that the Indians are regarded as a conquered people is another barrier. I think also the natural aloofness which one finds about Englishmen—their disposition to be reserved—is another obstacle which is common. I should put these as among the most important obstacles. Then as to the means of getting over these obstacles. One would be to reduce the size of the districts, so as to make it possible for the District Officer, the Collector, to be more in touch with his area. Another would be to confine the appointment of Civilian to linguistic areas; there are a sufficient number of districts to which they could be transferred, and the experience gained would be quite sufficiently varied for the officer to be fitted for the effective management of the country when he rises to higher office. Then I should impose a test, not in the shape of passing a final examination, but in the way of speaking the language. I should propose that test even after some years of residence. Whenever there is an office of a higher grade in which there is a group of men, for example, in the Board of Revenue, in the Executive Council, or in the Imperial Council, or the Secretary of State's Council, I should like the presence of an Indian there, so that all Europeans in the service might feel, sitting side by side with an Indian, that the race which produced such a man as that was one that he should not treat with any contempt; that is quite apart from the benefit of the Indian officer contributing knowledge and advice which is not available and cannot be available to the European officer. I should regard that as a means of producing among the subordinate European officers a better kind of respect towards Indians as a class.

9898. Is there any other point that you would like to draw our attention to?—I will take together the points "How far do you consider that larger powers should be granted to various local bodies," and "Do you consider that the present functions of any of these bodies might be suitably extended." The first condition of any improvement is having better financial resources. These bodies are at present, so far as one can judge, almost at the end of their tether, and the only way in which you can give them additional finance is by subventions from the provincial Government or from the Imperial Government. Such subventions are not uncommon in other countries, and even here they are sometimes made. If these bodies are put into a position of additional financial strength, I would give them larger powers, and I would allow them even to mismanage. I am quite alive to the contingency of their management being less efficient, but I say that we should gain even by their mismanagement. Possibly it might take them some time to get to really efficient management, but that is the only way to give them skill and capacity in the matter of administration.

9899. With regard to financial resources, is not considerable help given from the provincial funds, not only to District Boards, but to municipalities? And are not practically all large schemes which are fathered by the municipality, helped first by a grant from the provincial Government, and secondly by a loan from the Imperial Government?—I am aware of that. I am also aware at the same time that these things hang fire; they are always held up; you may go on pressing for a scheme for years and years before the provincial Government finds itself in a position to give assistance.

9900. Do you know that with regard to the municipality of this very town in which we are now sitting, there are at this very moment large funds at the disposal of the municipality which they have not used?—I do not know about this municipality; I was speaking only generally.

9901. It might therefore be that sometimes the municipality are slow in using the funds, and sometimes the Government is slow in providing funds?—It may be so. I am a careful reader of the speeches of the Governor when he goes on tour, and for one instance in which there is a municipality which does not know how to spend its money, there are ten others in which the Governor gives the answer, "We cannot give you the money; it is a good thing, we bless it, but the blessing will show itself in a practical way as time goes on."

9902. Would you not also agree that all governments, in all countries and in all ages, have often found great difficulty in providing funds for most worthy objects?—I know it must be so; it is a mere question of degree, and, of course, one does not quite draw one line in one place and another in another place; but there is no doubt that the feeling is very common, and I have had the feeling for a long time that municipal administration gets into bad odour with the people, because whenever a new municipality or taluk Board or union is started it is a harbinger of increased taxation; it makes the working of these things unsuccessful for the reason that they get into disfavour with the people when they know that the constitution of such bodies means further taxation.

9903. You suggest to us that, at the commencement, there would unquestionably be mismanagement?—I think so.

9904. But in your judgment the experiment is worth trying, even though mismanagement will follow, if it affords to the people an education in the art of governing themselves?—Yes.

9905. Is there any other point you wish to speak upon?—As to the creation of Advisory or Administrative Councils, the sort of Council I should like to see is something midway between the two. It should consist of 12 or 15 men, none of them paid members; they would constitute committees of three or four members, each confined to a particular department of work, and the Collector would have the advice of each committee according to the nature of the business which it falls to the Collector to dispose of. I would leave the Collector free in cases which might be regarded as secret, or quasi-secret, just as in the old days, or even at present, the Secretary of State is free with reference to certain matters which he considers should be disposed of confidentially; and in cases of urgency also the Collector should be free. Routine matters, of course, I would not want to be submitted to the Council; others would be dealt with by the committees, and, unless a committee unanimously disposed of them, they would be referred to the whole body. The Collector should have power to overrule the committee; he should act on his own decision if he thinks a committee is wrong, but in each case where he overrules the whole committee he should do so by recording his reasons. He should act, but he should submit to the higher authority his reasons for so acting. That would be my general idea of a body midway between an Advisory Council and an Administrative Council.

9906. That is practically all you wish to say to us?—As to giving to village communities greater powers in the disposal of local affairs, especially powers of disposal of petty criminal and civil cases, I attach very great importance to that. I would have what are called village Bench Courts for civil litigation, the Court to consist of three leading men in the village, the village munsiff, and two others. In some matters the village munsiff acts by himself, though under an existing regulation in Madras he has power to summon what is called the panchayat. I think that that has practically fallen into desuetude, although the Act is there. That panchayat might be left to determine certain cases of civil litigation up to any figure provided that the parties consented. I would not have the munsiff by himself, the Court by itself, and the present panchayat, or the unions where they are now established under the Local Boards Act. I would have a village with a panchayat consisting of about 15 men; it may be a village with a small population, or a village with 500 to 1,000 houses, or a group of villages. I would have the panchayat of, say, 15 men dividing itself into committees, each committee dealing with a certain class of cases. The village munsiff should be its president, acting together with each committee in respect of that particular branch of business with which the committee deals. I would give them larger powers than they now possess. For instance, I would give them compulsory jurisdiction with reference to civil cases up to Rs. 50.

9907. With no appeal?—With no appeal, unless a point of law was involved. The system of appeals has been quite a bait to enormous litigation and that is one of the worst evils that have followed (I do not say intentionally) British administration of justice in this country. I would increase their jurisdiction with reference to criminal matters also, and I would also insist upon a particular class of disputes going to them; suits about partitions, suits about maintenance, suits about caste or religious disputes; you can easily make up a panchayat consisting of men of different classes; I would like a body of that kind to administer the matter at first, and they could go to the Civil Court with further litigation if they chose. I should say that it would necessarily lead to the composal of differences if they had to be submitted to a tribunal of this character, rather than allow them to launch into litigation in a distant Court which knows really nothing about these matters. I should like to have in the Presidency towns a Board like the Local Government Board in England, which will take by delegation or by formal statutory authority several of the powers now exercised by the Governor in Council. It should be a body which would be a kind of agency to look after all the various panchayats and other bodies in the province. The interference which the provincial Government now exercises should be practically given over to this body, acting somewhat as the Local Government Board acts in England; it will be mainly non-official, perhaps partly official and partly non-official. I would, even in their case, retain powers as to Government audits and inspection, and that kind of thing. I would give it less powers of interference in some matters than Government now exercises. I have only one thing more to say, and that is with reference to the Board of Revenue. It is not within my special knowledge, but again I can only claim the privilege of a man who has generally followed these things with some little care. I think the Board of Revenue is really another block intervening between the Government and the Collector. I would like the Collector to be the only person responsible to the Government. I should like the Board of Revenue to be simply Commissioners in charge of groups of districts, not exercising the powers which Commissioners seem to exercise in other provinces, but only exercising the power of supervision on the one side (not of passing final orders); and of advisers to the Government on the other. If you give each of them five or six districts, it seems to me that they will be a far more useful body than they now are as mere conduit pipes, or in some cases as mere stumbling-blocks in the disposal of business.

9908. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) If you have in a district your Administrative Council of 15 gentlemen, with sub-committees, would you not rather over-do it by adding a Local Self-Government Board in Madras?—There are 22 districts. I should like to have somebody that would be in a position to give superior advice, and this body would necessarily also be composed of superior men; they might give advice which would be of the greatest use to these scattered bodies. My Local Government Board, by the way, is rather to be a kind of controlling body over the Local Boards than necessarily a Collector's Council.

9909. You said that you would even contemplate the local bodies mismanaging matters in order that they might get education in self-government. Is not your idea of a Local Government Board rather running counter to that principle?—No; there must always be compromise in these matters.

9910. Could not your Council in the district learn to control the Local Boards and municipalities of the district sufficiently?—It might; but I should prefer there being a higher body capable of giving advice.

9911. At any rate the work would be done by the people of the district themselves; would that be an advantage?—It would be; I would give practically the whole power to them; I should give only the power of audit and advice to the superior body; it would be a very limited scope.

9913. Not administrators?—No.

9914. (Mr. Meyer.) You desire that an appeal should skip a stage, in order, as you say, to prevent the danger of the officer immediately above having been already in conference with the lower authority in regard to the question?—That is one reason.

9915. Therefore you would have an appeal from a Divisional Officer, not to the Collector, but to the Board of Revenue. Would you carry the same principle on; would you have the appeal from the Collector, not to the Board of Revenue, but to the Local Government?—Yes.

9916. Is the Collector in constant touch with the Board of Revenue?—He is not, but there would be more uniformity, that is all.

9917. Then, if the Board of Revenue passes any order on its own account, the appeal would lie, not to the Madras Government, but straight to the Government of India?—That need not be so, because I take the Government of India to be far removed from the Local Government.

9918. Is not a member of the Board of Revenue much more likely to be in personal touch with a Member or Secretary to Government than a Collector is to be in touch with a member of the Board of Revenue?—I do not think so, more especially if the function that I have assigned to the Board of Revenue is accepted; it is all part of one scheme.

9919. Subject to your last answer, if the Madras Government dismisses a tahsildar, the appeal should lie direct to the Government of India and not direct to the Secretary of State?—It would make very little difference.

9920. You only insist on the skipping principle in the case of District Officers?—Yes, that is where it would be most important.

9921. Would you apply the same principle to administrative actions—a revenue assessment, or action in a darkhast case?—It would depend on each case whether it involved a general principle or not.

9922. I am speaking of the skipping principle; you say in the case of a revenue inspector punished by a Divisional Officer, that the appeal should go straight to the Board of Revenue. If the Divisional Officer imposes a penal assessment for encroachment, or anything of that kind, would the appeal go to the Board of Revenue or to the Collector?—I would apply the same principle.

9923. You spoke of income-tax appeals, and of the way that books and accounts are disregarded. Is it a fact that all assesseees keep books or accounts?—No, not all.

9924. There are a number of people who do not keep books?—I think each year, as they get more experience, more people are keeping books.

9925. Are the accounts always trustworthy?—One cannot say that they always are; one cannot assert that as a universal proposition.

9926. Have you ever heard of the proverb that a man keeps three sets of accounts, one for himself, one for his partner, and one for the Government?—I have heard it. I do not think it is quite true, except as a pithy statement.

9927. It may be occasionally true?—It may be true in some cases.

9928. You have said that if the District Boards and municipalities had their income increased by subventions from Government, you would give them larger powers. You would not increase their powers at present?—I would not increase their powers unless they had increased resources.

9929. What is the logic of that?—They would make themselves exceedingly unpopular if they could only exercise their increased powers by increased taxation.

9930. They are capable of undertaking such powers now, but they would become unpopular?—Extremely unpopular, and the people not having confidence in them must lead to administration being bad.

9931. If they got more money they would be less unpopular?—Yes.

9932. You do not propose to abolish municipal taxation?—No.

9933. You have spoken of the creation of new municipalities being unpopular by reason of the taxation involved?—That is so.

9934. Would it not be necessary if you created a municipality to have local taxation?—You must have it.

9935. How would your district Advisory Council be appointed; have you any general idea about it?—I do not propose that it should be by election.

9936. It should be by nomination?—By nomination on the recommendation of the Collector.

9937. Similarly, who would appoint the panchayat?—I would put that on the Collector, only I would in the beginning have a very small proportion of elected men on the panchayat.

9938. Elected by the village itself?—Yes, a small proportion.

9939. Do you think there would be any danger under a system of village panchayats of their work being nullified by factions in the village?—I do not think so, and it is for that purpose that I have made the panchayat sufficiently large—a body of 15, with power to refer to the whole body in particular cases.

9940. Would you give such a panchayat the administration of the village school, for instance?—I would.

9942. Suppose a village which contained a large Pariah population; and that the panchayat has refused them a school or a well or anything of that sort; would you allow the superior authority to say to the panchayat, "You must provide for these people"?—I would not say so; I mean, I do not take the particular instance, and I do not wish to decide every case in a formal way; I would leave it as a mere matter of counsel for a while. Where there is recalcitrant conduct it might be a case for interference.

9943. You spoke of a Local Government Board at the Presidency town in analogy with the Local Government Board in England. Do you know how the Local Government Board in England is constituted?—I have not studied its constitution, but I know under the Acts that there is such a Board.

9944. Are you aware that for all practical purposes the Board is the President—that what is called the Local Government Board is a single Cabinet Minister, who is styled "President of the Local Government Board"?—He may be President, but there is a Board.

9945. But my point is that the President is really the Board?—It does not matter for my present purpose. My point is that it should be a body; it is with reference to the nature of the functions that it should exercise that I am speaking; in my case I would have it as a body.

9946. Whether the English analogy holds good or not?—Just so; by my analogy I only meant that there should be a body in the centre which would have the overlooking of affairs.

9947. You spoke of abolishing the Board of Revenue and substituting inspecting officers as Commissioners. Are there not certain matters in which you would still require a central department—salt and excise, for instance?—My idea is to make the Collector the practical representative in all matters for the district; it would involve the Collector being placed in charge of a lesser area, but I would give power to the Collector in all departments; it is the multiplicity of departments that has been a great source of annoyance to the rayats.

9948. You think you could get along without a central Commissioner to manage salt and excise?—You might have one who would advise.

9949. And the same with regard to forests?—Yes, especially forests and irrigation and settlement; I would put that in the hands of the Collector. It often happens that a rayat has got a complaint; he goes to one officer and is told that it is the business of another officer; he goes to that officer and is referred by him to a third; I would put irrigation entirely under the control of the Collector.

9950. And education?—Except as regards inspection, I would give the management to the panchayat. Education is now practically controlled by the municipality.

9951. We have had it in evidence from other witnesses that although that would be the nominal position, the real controllers, even of the Board and municipal schools, are the local officers of the Educational Department, the assistant inspectors, and so forth?—That is so; in this way; reports and remarks come up to the Director of Public Instruction, and he acts as the adviser to Government; Government takes the cue from him and disposes of the matter.

9952. You would convert the Director of Public Instruction, like your Heads of other Departments, into simply an advisory officer?—That is all; it may be that he would be assisted by other people.

9953. Let me take the case of a first-rate college such as exists here; would you put that under the Collector?—There are only three Government Colleges; they are not spread over the country.

9954. You would put a college in one district under one officer, and a college in another district under another officer?—No. I would place the colleges under the Director.

9955. And the high schools?—The high schools I would certainly place under the control of the District Boards.

9956. (Mr. Hichens.) You were saying just now that the municipal revenues were too small for the needs of the bodies?—Too small to justify their having additional powers; if you give them additional powers they should be accompanied by increased resources.

9957. Have you ever served on a municipal Council?—Never, although I have often read municipal reports and orders.

9958. Are there any communal lands within the mufassal municipal area where you live belonging to the town?—It is a Hill station where I am; there are plenty of lands; I do not think that is a normal case.

9959. (Mr. Dutt.) As a lawyer, you have of course seen the Acts under which those bodies work; are you aware that practically the whole of the executive power is now vested in the Chairman, and the members, according to the Act, have no executive powers?—That is so.

9960. Would you make any modification in that matter and distribute the work among the members to a moderate extent?—I would. There is what is called the Chairman delegate, that is to say, a person who, in the absence of the Chairman, does his duties, but I would like the Act modified so that powers could be given to certain of the members.

9961. You mean powers for the formation of sub-committees?—Yes.

9962. With regard to the Advisory Councils, do you say that all the members should be appointed by the Collector or by the Government?—Yes, for the present.

9963. And all of them should be unpaid?—Yes.

9964. You do not think there will be any difficulty in getting 15 men to work practically from day to day without pay in the Collector's office?—It would not be from day to day; I do not say that the routine should be submitted to them. Also, I would form sub-committees, so that each committee would deal only with its own branch of the work, unless in cases where the committee found that they could not dispose of the work, and then it should come before the whole Council.

9965. You do not think there would be any difficulty in getting a sufficient number of men to come to the headquarters in each district to do this work?—Not at all.

9966. With regard to village panchayats, you have mentioned certain duties which you would like to be imposed upon them, and which would lead to a better understanding between the people and the Government. Would you entrust to them the distribution of water after it has left the pipes? I suppose you have some experience about the distribution of water?—Only this, that, as a lawyer, I have had often to advise people who have had complaints in that respect, and I have had to study particular cases of distribution of water.

9967. Where there are communal lands in villages for pasture, would you give village panchayats any control over the communal lands?—I would.

9968. Generally to regulate pasture lands?—Yes.

9969. You have recommended the creation of these panchayats in rural areas; where there is a large village there might be one panchayat; in the case of small villages they might be grouped together to form a panchayat?—Yes.

9971. You think such an officer would be a success?—Yes; I think it would succeed admirably, as it has succeeded in the case of the Registrar of Co-operative Societies in this Presidency.

APPENDIX.

MEMORANDUM CONTAINING THE SUGGESTIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS IN REGARD TO DECENTRALIZATION.

I.—FINANCIAL DEPARTMENT.

The Government are generally satisfied with the principles underlying the scheme of the revised provincial settlement recently forwarded for their opinion by the Government of India. They consider that means should be found to enable the Local Government to obtain money for large public undertakings, for example, to meet famine expenditure or for the carrying out of large Public Works, the interest and sinking fund needed to extinguish such loans being met from their share of the revenues of the province. They see no immediate necessity for demanding greater freedom to increase taxation or to invest the public revenues.

2. The Governor in Council considers that he should be invested with larger financial powers than he possesses at present in regard to (a) provincial and divided heads in the accounts, and (b) the funds of District Boards.

3. With regard to loans to local authorities (a) the power to sanction loans under the Local Authorities Loans Act (XI. of 1879) and under the Local Authorities (Emergency) Loans Act (XII. of 1897) for repayment within a limit of thirty years should be delegated to the Local Government in respect of loans granted by the Government themselves, and (b) powers should be delegated to the Local Government to sanction the raising of loans by local bodies in the open market.

4. As regards provincial and divided heads of expenditure, the Local Government should be granted as free a hand as is possible, subject in cases of widespread calamity, such as famine or war, to temporary restrictions to be imposed by the Government of India. They should be empowered to allot during the course of the year from the provincial balances, up to some maximum to be agreed upon subject to immediate report to the Government of India for information. So far as provincial heads are concerned, the Local Government should have authority to delegate powers of reappropriation, under such conditions as they see fit, to Heads of Departments.

5. In the case of local expenditure, the recent orders of the Secretary of State removing the local section from the body of the civil budget estimate are welcomed, but the restriction in Article 295 (a) (ii.) of the Civil Account Code, which subjects sanction to reappropriation by the Local Government to the condition that any increase in this section must not cause an excess over the aggregate budget grant for local expenditure, should be removed. The Local Government should have power to allot from its balance additional funds to any particular District Board, irrespective of the total expenditure provided in the local budgets. The financial transactions of each District Board are kept distinct, and no advantage is at present really gained by lumping together the finances of these local bodies for budget and other purposes.

6. One of the most important directions in which the powers of the Local Government are restricted is in the matter of the creation of new appointments, permanent and temporary, the enhancement of salaries and the deputation of officers on special duty. These powers are at present restricted by the following conditions:—

“(a) No permanent appointment may be created with a pay of more than Rs. 250 a month, and no addition may be made to the pay and allowances of any officer if they exceed, or would, after the addition, exceed, Rs. 250 a month.

“(b) No temporary appointment or deputation involving the payment of more than Rs. 250 a month may be sanctioned for a period exceeding six months.

“(c) No permanent appointment of which the pay and allowances are more than Rs. 250 a month may be abolished; and the pay and allowances of no such appointment may be reduced.

“(d) No revision of establishment which involves additional expenditure of more than Rs. 25,000 a year may be sanctioned.

“(e) No class or grade of officers may be created or abolished; and the pay of no class or grade of officers may be raised or reduced.

“(f) The sanction of the Government of India is required for—

(i.) The grant of travelling and conveyance allowances;

(ii.) the grant of house-rent allowances or of free quarters.”

7. Enhanced powers have recently been conferred by the Secretary of State on the Government of India, who now have authority—

“(i.) to create any new permanent appointment, other than an appointment which would ordinarily be held by a gazetted officer recruited in England, of which the salary or maximum salary does not exceed Rs. 500 a month;

“(ii.) to raise the salary of such an appointment to an amount not exceeding Rs. 750 a month;

“(iii.) to sanction the temporary appointment or deputation of an officer—

(a) for any specified period if his salary, or salary and deputation allowance, do not exceed Rs. 500 a month;

(b) for not more than two years if his salary, or salary and deputation allowance, exceed Rs. 500 a month;

“Provided that the temporary appointment or deputation of an officer on a salary exceeding Rs. 5,000 a year, unless such officer has a lien on an appointment carrying a salary of equal or higher value fixed by statute, requires the sanction of the Secretary of State;

“(iv.) to sanction revisions of establishment which involve an additional expenditure of not more than Rs. 50,000 a year, or, in the case of establishments such as process-serving establishments, the scale and remuneration of which are fixed by Courts of Law under rules having the force of law, when the net extra expenditure involved, after allowing for the receipt of fees, does not exceed Rs. 50,000 a year.”

The Governor in Council considers that similar powers should be conferred on the Local Government as regards permanent appointments, the cost of which is debited to provincial or divided heads, and he would advocate that the power as regards the limit of temporary appointments and deputations should be raised by permitting the Local Government also to sanction such appointments and deputations up to a limit of Rs. 500 if they do not exceed, or are not likely to exceed, a period of one year.

8. The rules restricting the additional emoluments of Government officers filling temporary appointments to one-fifth of their salary in the regular line [letter from the Government of India, Home Department (Census), No. 57, dated the 31st March, 1902] should also be abolished. These rules are productive of much inconvenience, and are illogical in that the salary admissible under them to an officer in permanent Government employ when deputed to a temporary post is ordinarily less than that admissible to an outsider who is appointed to such a post.

9. Ordinarily an officer without a substantive appointment on a permanent establishment, who officiates in a post the pay of which is not less than Rs. 100, is restricted to half the pay of the appointment. Power is now reserved to the Government of India (article 144 of the Civil Service Regulations) to grant such an officer an amount not exceeding the full pay of the appointment. This power might well be delegated to Local Governments.

Public Works Code.

10. The Government of India now fixes, with the approval, when necessary, of the Secretary of State, the separate cadres of the Engineer, the Upper Subordinate and the Accounts establishments of the Public Works Department. The power of fixing the cadres should, so far as Upper Subordinates and Accountants are concerned, be delegated to the Local Government. Men filling these cadres are appointed locally.

11. Paragraph 945 of the Public Works Code restricts the rate of pay of any individual chargeable to "Works" to Rs. 250. This limit is often too small to secure the services of a skilled mechanic or workman of the foreman class, such as may be required for electrical work, pumping stations and sanitary works which are on the increase; and it should be raised to Rs. 500.

12. The Local Government should further be allowed to grant conveyance allowance, house-rent, and free quarters.

13. The ruling which prohibits the creation or abolition by the Local Government of a class or grade of officers, or the alteration of the pay of a class or grade, should also be cancelled. The rule which has apparently for its object securing of uniformity in similar posts in the different Presidencies and provinces seems unnecessary, owing to the varying conditions in the different parts of India.

14. Transfers to Foreign Service.—The rules in regard to such transfers are contained in Articles 753 et seq. of the Civil Service Regulations and the powers of the Local Government as regards transfers to foreign service of the first and second kinds are restricted by the requirements (a) in Clause (iv.) of Article 753 as regards the pay admissible in foreign service, the emoluments which can be sanctioned by a Local Government when the transfer is to service under a Native State being also restricted as specified in Rule III. of Appendix No. 31 of the Civil Service Regulations, and (b) that transfer to foreign service out of India requires the sanction of the Government of India.

As regards (a) and (b), it is considered that the power to sanction the transfer of an officer to foreign service in India on pay in excess of that specified in clause (iv.) of article 753, or to a Native State on any emoluments in addition to those specified in rule III. of Appendix No. 31, when the Native State to which the officer is transferred is under the administrative control of the Local Government, or to foreign service out of India, should be delegated to the Local Government. The references on such points are, as a rule, purely formal, and might well be dispensed with. The Local Government should also be empowered to transfer the services of subordinates under the foreign service rules to private bodies which have for their object the encouragement of agricultural or veterinary development.

15. In the matter of sanction to the grant of honoraria to officers from Government revenues, and of permission to officers to accept fees from private bodies or public bodies unconnected with Government, the intervention of the Government of India seems to be unnecessary. The rules on the subject are contained in articles 72 and 74 of the Civil Service Regulations.

16. Paragraph 2207 of the Public Works Code, as modified by Standing Order No. 83 of 30th May, 1904, lays down that a project of which the estimated capital outlay is over Rs. 50,000 cannot be sanctioned under Class IV.—Minor Works from which Capital and Revenue Accounts are not kept, except with the approval of the Government of India. The grounds for this restriction in regard to sanction in the case of unimportant works are not clear, seeing that the Local Government are competent to deal with estimates for much larger works costing as much as 12½ lakhs. This restriction should be removed, and the Local Government be permitted to deal with such works without reference to the Supreme Government.

17. Other matters in which powers might with advantage be delegated to Local Governments are shown in the schedule A annexed.

18. As to delegation of financial powers to Heads of Departments, the Local Government should be invested with powers to re-delegate under such conditions as they consider proper any powers the delegation of which has not been restricted.

The delegation of financial powers which appear from a cursory examination of the codes to be practicable are shown in schedule B to this note.

IA.—BUDGETS.

19. The present system under which the provincial budget estimate of the Local Government is reviewed by the Government of India appears to be susceptible of alteration in the direction of curtailment of references and of diminished interference with the Local Government. The individual budget estimates are submitted to Government by Heads of Departments through the Accountant-General, and are scrutinised, in considerable detail, by minor heads as well as by major heads, first in the administrative department and then in the Financial department of the local Secretariat, the Accountant-General being consulted freely. The estimates for the approaching year as accepted by the Local Government are compiled by the Accountant-General, and the consolidated estimates are due for submission by the Local Government to the Government of India on the 20th January. At the same time the Accountant-General submits to the Finance Department of the Government of India his budget notes, in which explanations are given of all important variations in both the revised estimate for the year current, for which the Accountant-General is responsible (article 1513 of the Civil Account Code), and in the budget estimate for the coming year for which the Local Government are responsible (article 1512 of the Civil Account Code). These budget notes, which contain the actuals of eight months of the current financial year, are returned by the Government of India, with their orders, to the Accountant-General in the first week of February. They are resubmitted by the Accountant-General, with such further explanations as may be necessary, and with nine months' actuals so as to reach the Government of India about the middle of February. They again reach the Accountant-General about the end of February, and the officer resubmits them with ten months' actuals so as to reach the Government of India about the first week in March. The Government of India are also prepared to receive telegraphic information of all important changes required in the budget by about the 10th of March as a rule, when the budget is closed. Copy of each edition of these budget notes is also supplied to the Local Government who intimate, through the medium of the Accountant-General's budget notes, all alterations required in the estimates after their first submission in January, as well as any representations they may desire to make in regard to alterations proposed by the Government of India in the budget notes. There is constant and free communication between the Local Government and the Accountant-General as regards the estimates, and under the system now adopted the friction which formerly arose from the alteration of the estimates of the Local Government without their knowledge may be said to have disappeared. A considerable number of references and a large amount of work would be saved, if the estimates and budget notes could be submitted for the first time early in February. It would then be possible for the Local Government to scrutinise their estimates in the light of nine months' actuals, in communication with the Accountant-General, before the first submission of the estimates to the Government of India. The result would certainly be better estimating on the part of the Local Government.

20. The reductions of estimates of expenditure which are carried out by the Government of India are generally in lump sums under individual major heads, and these reductions are a fruitful source of inconvenience, and sometimes lead to no small amount of extra work. The Government of India have in recent years explained, when finally sanctioning the estimates, that these reductions are not intended to restrict duly sanctioned and necessary outlay, the sole object in view being to obviate large differences between the budget estimate and the actuals of the year, and they have stated that they would be prepared to consider applications for supplementary grants, should the progress of expenditure under any of the heads thus reduced indicate that the budget grant is likely to be exceeded. These deductions have generally been shown as "probable savings" in the estimates. This system, although convenient from the point of view of the Government of India, is not workable in practice, unless the Head of the Department whose budget is thus reduced is permitted to ignore the ordinary budget rules.

II.—PUBLIC DEPARTMENT.

21. In applying a general policy laid down by the Government of India, the Madras Government consider that they should be granted a free hand as far as possible, and any instructions that are issued to Local Governments should therefore be as far as possible general.

22. The Government of Madras wish to enter a strong protest against interference with Local Governments by officers serving directly under the Government of India, such as Directors-General and Inspectors-General. It is laid down roughly in most cases that such officers are to correspond with the Government of India, not with Heads of Departments under the Local Government, except in matters relating to statistics, professional matters and matters relating to the operation of departmental rules. But there is a tendency to issue direct instructions to Heads of Departments which are likely to be construed into orders, and which weaken the authority of the Local Government. An example of the kind of interference to which this Government object will be found in G.O. Nos. 1893, 1894, Judicial, dated 17th November, 1906, a copy of which has been handed in by the Chief Secretary. The ordinary rule that they should issue no orders to provincial Heads of Departments, and that they should not correspond direct with them, should be enforced with the utmost strictness. Any correspondence that may be necessary can be conducted with the Secretary to the department without undue delay.

23. In the scientific departments, such as the Chemical Examiner, the Superintendents of the King Institute and the Pasteur Institute, and appointments to the Jail Departments and Lunatic Asylums, the Government consider that they should be free to make all such appointments when suitable local officers are available, and should not be required to consult the Government of India, except when suitable officers cannot be obtained in the Presidency.

24. The Government consider that power might be taken to delegate the powers conferred by law on the Government of India or the Local Government, as also to withdraw any delegation made. They are inclined to think that this can only be done by specific legislation.

25. With regard to delegations to the Board of Revenue, Collectors and other subordinate officers, this Government have delegated many powers. Mr. Meyer was employed on special duty in 1897 in furtherance of this object. Many powers have in the last year or two been delegated, and others may similarly be delegated. The Government propose to appoint a small committee to consider what further delegations can be effected.

26. It is of importance that in matters which affect the raiyat and which are not professional matters, the officers of the Public Works Department should be placed under subordination to the Collector. This is especially necessary in questions affecting the distribution of water and the repair of tanks. The Government have not decided exactly how this arrangement can be made, but propose to take it into consideration in connection with the report of a Committee on matters relating to the Public Works Department, which is now under consideration.

27. Transfers are less frequent than they were a few years ago. The Government avoid making them as far as is possible with due consideration of the rights of officers.

28. Certain large proposals are under consideration at the present moment for increasing the number of districts, divisions and taluks. They have been approved generally, and are now under discussion in detail. When carried into effect, they will give a certain amount of relief; but the Madras districts are so large and the work which is under the raiyatwari system so detailed, that further measures will probably become necessary before many years have passed.

29. The Government upon the whole are not anxious to urge any large or far-reaching alterations in the system of appeals at present existing.

III.—REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

30. In the Revenue Department the bulk of the delegations which the Government propose to make are already within the powers of the Local Government, or will be, if the recommendation already made is accepted, that the Local Government may delegate powers which it has itself received by delegation. In a certain number of cases delegation or devolution of powers requires an amendment of the law. This is especially the case with the Sea Customs Act, 1878, an enactment framed to suit the circumstances of the country nearly thirty years ago, since when the growth of trade and the gradual development of uniformity of procedure in customs matters have rendered many of its restrictions unnecessary. A list of cases is shown in schedule C appended.

31. The Government further consider that wider powers should be conferred on them in the matter of the alienation of land and land revenue. The present powers of the Local Government in regard to the alienation of land are laid down in Standing Order No. 24 of the Board of Revenue, which is based on the resolution of the Government of India therein cited, and are as follow:—

(1) Sales of Government land for full value may be sanctioned up to Rs. 10,000.

(2) Sales of Government land on favourable terms for a public purpose may be sanctioned up to Rs. 1,000.

(3) Gifts or grants of Government land may be sanctioned up to Rs. 3,000, when intended as a site for the construction of schools, hospitals, dispensaries, or other public works to be erected at the cost of recognised local funds, up to Rs. 500 when given for any other public purpose, or to a private individual for services to be performed to the State, and up to Rs. 100, when the services are to be performed to the community, or when the grant is to a private individual for his private benefit, irrespective of any services to be performed. In all other cases the sanction of the Government of India is required. The Government consider that these restrictions on the power of Local Governments to alienate land are unnecessary. The greatest part of the land of the country is already private property, and the grants or alienations now made are, therefore, generally of waste land, and are almost always to local bodies for purposes of public utility. Experience has shown that references to the Government of India on these alienations cause considerable trouble and delay, and the Government consider that the limitations on the power of Local Governments in this respect may well be abrogated.

32. Under the existing rules which are summarised in the second part of the Board's Standing Order No. 24, Local Governments are authorised to sanction the alienation of land revenue, i.e., to exempt from payment of land assessment or ground-rent any land that is used for public purposes, such as roads, the sites of hospitals, dispensaries and the like, and which yields no return to local bodies or other owners thereof, provided that the market value of the occupancy right in the land, together with the capitalized value (taken at 25 years' purchase) of the revenue remitted does not exceed the limits prescribed for gift or grant of State land referred to above. For reasons similar to these already stated, the Government consider that all restrictions on the powers of Local Governments in the matter should be removed.

33. A question has been raised as to the comparative advantages of a Board of Revenue as it exists in this Presidency, or of Divisional Commissioners as they exist in other provinces. The powers and duties of the Board of Revenue, Madras, are defined in two legislative enactments, Regulation I. of 1803 and Madras Act I. of 1894. The latter Act repealed an earlier measure, Madras Act II. of 1883, the object of which was to enable any portion of the business of the Board to be disposed of by a single Member. Prior to that period, the Board, which then consisted of three Members, had dealt with all subjects collectively. It was decided in 1884 to separate and define the functions and duties of the Members, and to assign to each the charge of specific departments. At the same time, in order to mark the fact that the functionaries in charge of the departments of the Board belong to a collective body, they were gazetted as "Members of the Board of Revenue and Commissioners." The result of this reorganization was to convert the Board into a body composed of four Heads of Departments, capable indeed of collective action, but ordinarily acting singly, each having charge of branches of work with which the other Members have no concern, unless consulted by the Member in charge.

34. As thus reconstituted, the Board of Revenue comprises the following Members:—

(1) The Commissioner of Salt, Abkari and Separate Revenue, who has control of the Salt, Excise, Customs, Stamps and Income-tax Revenues and Emigration, and of the establishments employed in connection therewith.

(2) The Commissioner of Revenue Settlement, Survey, Land Records and Agriculture, who has control over the Revenue Settlement, Survey, Land Records and Agricultural Departments.

(3) The Commissioner of Land Revenue, who has control over the Forest Department.

(4) The Commissioner of Land Revenue, who is also Inam Commissioner, and who conducts the bulk of the work falling upon the Board in its capacity as Court of Wards under Madras Act I. of 1902.

The individual Commissioners carry on their duties independently, the collective action of the Board being confined to the following classes of cases:—

(a) Matters of personal conduct affecting officers of the Indian Civil Service.

(b) Matters of importance affecting estates under management of the Court of Wards.

(c) Matters involving questions of principle, or regarding which the opinion of the Full Board is expressly called for by Government. In a limited number of cases, the two Land Revenue Commissioners decide jointly on important papers connected with Land Revenue. The constitution is thus so arranged as to secure the benefits of individual initiative and responsibility without sacrificing the advantages possessed by a collective and consultative body.

(d) Matters referred to the Full Board by any Member.

35. As the Board is thus composed of Heads of Departments, it follows that the creation of Land Revenue Commissioners with territorial jurisdiction in Land Revenue matters would not enable the present Board to be abolished. This seems to be plain from the example of other provinces, as well as from the needs of this Presidency. Thus in Bengal there exist, besides a Board of Revenue composed of two members and six Divisional Commissioners, a separate officer who is Commissioner of Excise and Salt. Owing to the permanent settlement, there is no Settlement Department as in a raiyatwari province, so that in Bengal the two members of the Board plus the Excise Commissioner practically correspond to the Madras Board of Revenue, the six Divisional Commissioners being thus additional. In Bombay where there are Divisional Commissioners, but no Board of Revenue, there exist, in addition to three Divisional Commissioners and the Commissioner in Sind, the following appointments:—

(1) Settlement Commissioner, Director of Land Records and Inspector-General of Registration, Births, Deaths and Marriages.

(2) Commissioner of Customs, Salt, Opium, and Abkari and Reporter-General of External Commerce.

These two officers correspond to the first two appointments in the Board of Revenue, Madras, and even were the Board of Revenue to disappear, two appointments as Heads of the Separate Revenue and Settlement Departments must remain.

36. It would also be necessary to retain a third appointment for control of the Forest Department. In this Presidency the forest reserves are not collected in compact masses in sparsely populous regions, but are often scattered over well-populated areas. They are often close to villages and the regulation of grazing, the control of the removal of fuel and other forest produce for domestic and agricultural use, and the provision of depôts for the distribution of firewood are matters of vital importance to the comfort and welfare of the population. The Government are strongly of opinion that to hand over the control of these matters to a specialist brought up in the traditions of an expert department, would be fraught with the gravest danger to the well-being and content of the Presidency. The control of the Forest Department should be retained by a representative of the Land Revenue Administration, who will not be tempted, in the desire to promote scientific forestry and future forest development, to sacrifice the present interests of the raiyat population. An officer to be the Head of the Forest Department is thus essential. There remains the work of Inam Commissioner, which could not well be given to Divisional Commissioners. Questions connected with inams continually present problems of special difficulty, and it is most desirable that they should be dealt with by a central authority and on uniform principles. They are at present specially onerous, as the work of enfranchising and settling inams situated within permanently-settled and other estates is now in progress and will not be finished for another ten years. The work could not be undertaken by Government.

37. If the Board of Revenue were replaced by Divisional Commissioners, not less than six would be required, besides the four departmental Commissioners referred to above. The additional cost would probably amount to four lakhs, for no material reduction would be possible in the establishment of the Board of Revenue.

38. The question for consideration is whether the advantages that would follow from the creation of these Divisional Commissioners at a cost of about four lakhs annually would be equal to the heavy expense involved. The Government see much reason to doubt it. The Divisional Commissioner, if he is not to be a mere post-office, must encroach unduly on the functions either of the Collector below, or of the Government above him. Experience in other branches of administration suggests the probability of the Commissioner tending to become merely a forwarding officer. If, however, he is active and interferes, he is liable to stifle the initiative of the men below. In so far as personal influence and communication between Collectors and the higher officers are concerned, the Government believe that the present arrangement secures all that is necessary. The tours of the Members of the Board of Revenue are frequent and thorough, and every district of the Presidency is visited by at least one Member of the Board at least once a year. The Board in fact performs not merely its statutory functions, but to a great extent the duties done by Divisional Commissioners in other provinces. The smooth working of the Land Revenue system and the absence of discontent is in the opinion of Government largely due to the existence of the Board of Revenue. The Government are strongly of opinion that it would be a most retrograde and unfortunate step to substitute for the existing system that of Commissioners of Divisions. They have no doubt that such a change would not be popular or in accordance with native opinion.

IV.—PENSION DEPARTMENT.

39. The Government of Madras propose that certain powers should be delegated to them in the matter of pensions in some of the cases in which restrictions are imposed by the Civil Service Regulations.

I.—Restrictions which involve references to the Secretary of State.

It is proposed that when references regarding pensions have to be made to the Secretary of State, they should be sent direct by this Government, provided that such references shall be made only—

- (a) in the case of pensions of Provincial and Subordinate Officers;
- (b) on the condition that the cases so referred are special cases of individuals, and not the special cases of classes of officers; and

(c) when a favourable decision in any case will not involve a specified maximum expenditure.

It is considered that the Government of Madras, which retains the right of direct correspondence with the Secretary of State in other matters, may be given a similar right in petty pension cases.

II.—Delegation of powers regarding pensions by the Government of India to the Government of Madras.

The cases considered are cases in which restrictions are imposed by the Civil Service Regulations. They are scheduled below with reference to particular articles of the Civil Service Regulations:—

Item number.	Reference to article in the Civil Service Regulations.	Subject.	Delegation proposed.	Number of references.
1	Article 4 ...	Claims to pension governed by the rules in force at the time of entering the service.	The power to grant an officer pension according to the rules in force when he entered the service, i.e. , prior to the date when the new pension rules were brought into effect, now reserved to the Government of India, should be extended to the Local Government.	...
2	Article 357...	Military service to count for pension under the civil rules.	The power exercised by the Government of India to allow service which is pensionable under the military rules to count for pension on the inferior scale in special cases should be delegated to the Local Government.	...
3	Article 168...	Temporary service to count for pension.	The power to allow purely temporary service to count for pension if the pension does not exceed Rs. 10 per mensem should be delegated to the Local Government.	1
4	Article 422...	Condonation of interruptions in service.	The power to condone interruptions in service not exceeding 12 months and when the pension does not exceed Rs. 50 a month now exercised by the Government of India should be extended to the Local Government.	2
5	Articles 475 and 642.	Special additional pensions.	The power to grant an additional pension of Rs. 1,000 per annum to officers for approved service of three years rendered in certain appointments should be delegated to the Local Government.	5

III.—Delegation of powers regarding pensions now vested in the Local Government by the Civil Service Regulations and Civil Account Code to the authorities subordinate to them.

There are certain questions, such as that of the consideration of interruptions in service and the reduction of pensions for unsatisfactory service, which the Government of Madras consider should be reserved to them. The danger of delegation is that such matters might be looked at quite differently in different departments working in the same local area, with the result of unequal treatment, or treatment giving ground of complaint to the men in a particular department who can compare their cases with those of other men, of other departments, who are in close touch with them.

To the delegations proposed below this objection does not apply:—

Item number.	Reference to article in the Civil Service Regulations or Civil Account Code.	Subject.	Delegation proposed.	Number of references.
1	Article 478 (a) Civil Service Regulations. Government of India letter No. 2260, Home Dept. (Public), dated 18th July, 1902.	Reduction in pension in certain cases.	The power given to the Local Government to relax article 478 (a), Civil Service Regulations, in the case of certain subordinates of the Registration Department may be delegated to the Inspector-General of Registration.	12
2	Articles 520 and 521, Civil Service Regulations.	Re - employment of pensioners.	The power to sanction the employment under the Court of Wards of an officer who has obtained a superannuation or retiring pension should be delegated to the Court of Wards.
3	Article 524, Civil Service Regulations.	Re - employment of pensioners.	The power exercised by the Local Government to sanction the re-employment of pensioners when the employment is bona-fide temporary and lasting for not more than a year should be delegated to Heads of Departments.	21
4	Article 841 (b), Civil Account Code.	Overpayment of leave allowances.	The power exercised by the Local Government under this article should be delegated to— (1) the Board of Revenue to remit without restriction the leave allowances irregularly drawn by the applicants for pension more than three years before retirement; and (2) other Heads of Departments to forego such allowances up to say Rs. 30 in each case or three months' pay.	200
5	Article 919, Civil Service Regulations.	Power to grant pensions.	The power to grant pensions to subordinates drawing Rs. 100 and less where there is no question of the special application of a rule, or the extension to the case of a penalty or an advantage, should be delegated to Heads of Departments.	96

V.—LOCAL AND MUNICIPAL DEPARTMENT.

40. There are under the Madras Government 23 District Boards, constituted under Madras Act V. of 1884, with 82 taluk Boards and 382 unions subordinate to them. There are 60 district municipalities, constituted under Madras Act IV. of 1884, in addition to the Presidency Municipality. The Collectors of districts are ex-officio Presidents of District Boards, though the Act allows of the appointment of non-official Presidents. So also Revenue Divisional Officers are ex-officio Presidents of taluk Boards. The Local Boards Act, 1884, also admits of the election of Vice-Presidents.

41. Section 288 of the District Municipalities Act, 1884, and section 160 of the Madras Local Boards Act, 1884, authorise the delegation by the Local Government of all powers, except those specified in Chapter I. of those Acts. Similarly, section 159 of the Local Boards Act, 1884, authorises the Local Government to delegate any of the powers conferred on the Collector by that Act. Considerable powers have already been delegated in matters relating to Local Fund and municipal administration to Presidents of District Boards and Collectors, respectively. Only two years ago further powers were delegated to district municipalities. These bodies already enjoy a large amount of freedom in regard to expenditure from their balances which has not hitherto been possessed by Local Boards.

42. As recent changes in financial rules now permit of such a course, owing to the exclusion from the general provincial and imperial Budget of the funds of Incorporated Local Boards, the Government will be prepared to authorize Local Boards to incur expenditure from their balances, and to exercise powers similar to those at present possessed by the district municipalities in that respect.

43. Both Local Boards and municipalities practically settle their own programme, and the interference of Government is confined to reviewing their proposals as embodied in the annual budget. When the budget has been sanctioned, no further interference on the part of Government takes place, except in cases in which the sanctioned estimates are deviated from. In regard to establishments, the sanction of the Local Government is required both under the Local Boards and Municipalities Acts in all cases, except in regard to petty menial establishments in municipalities. Owing to the great likelihood of abuse of the power of appointment, the Government consider it desirable to retain this control in their hands.

44. The Government do not consider it desirable to give District Boards any power of control over the smaller municipalities. Of the 60 municipalities only three—two of which are hill municipalities—have a population of less than 10,000, while there are only five with a population between 10,000 and 15,000. The Municipal Councils have no official representation on District Boards, while their funds are raised from totally different sources.

45. In many of the cases in which the Government of Madras have proposed delegations of power, the number of references which have to be made is not very large, but the aggregate number which will be saved if the Government of India should find it possible to delegate these powers is very considerable. There is also another far more important consideration, and that is the saving of time which would result from all these references being unnecessary.

H. BRADLEY,

Ag. Chief Secy. to the Govt. of Madras.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

POWERS which are now exercised by the Government or the Board of Revenue, but which may be delegated to Subordinate Authorities.

Serial number.	Authority under which the reference has to be made.	Delegation proposed.
1	Rule 13 of the Mining Rules	Under Rule 13 of the Mining Rules should the Collector be of opinion that it is not expedient to grant a prospecting license applied for, or should he find that the licensee has not been approved by the Local Government, he shall refuse to grant the license, and shall forthwith report the matter to the Local Government which may pass such orders as it thinks fit. Such a report may have been necessary in the infancy of the mining industry, but it is no longer necessary now, especially as it is always open to the party aggrieved by the Collector's refusal to appeal against his order. The Government therefore consider that so much of the rule as requires the Collector to report his refusal of a prospecting license may be cancelled.
2	Rules 11 (3) of the Mining Rules ...	Under rule 11 (3) of the Mining Rules every application for a prospecting license shall be accompanied by the certificate that the applicant has been approved by the Local Government under the signature of one of its Secretaries. In granting or refusing such certificates, the Government is necessarily guided to a great extent by the report of the Collector, and as it is the same officer who has afterwards to grant or refuse the prospecting license, the Local Government's certificate is of little practical utility, and experience has shown that the rule enforcing it involves much waste of time and correspondence. The Government accordingly consider that the certificate of approval may be dispensed with.

6	Government of India Notification No. 3883-Ex., dated 6th July 1905.	To delegate to the Board of Revenue the power of sanctioning the bringing by or taking of intoxicating drugs prepared from the hemp plant from any foreign territory of Native State for the purpose of supply to any tract appertaining thereto which is surrounded by British Territory.

Section 135 (1) of the Indian Railways Act IX of 1899.	Under section 144 (1) of the Indian Railways Act, the power of authorizing the levy of these taxes should be delegated to the Local Government.

SCHEDULE F.

EDUCATIONAL DEPARTMENT.

Under the Public Service notification certain educational tests are required of candidates for employment in superior service, and in order to qualify for higher posts in that service. It frequently happens that persons possessing requisite qualifications are not available, especially for temporary appointments, and applicants have to be exempted from one or more of the tests. This gives rise to an immense amount of correspondence. These powers have, especially as regards temporary appointments, been delegated to a considerable extent to Heads of Departments and executive officers, and the notification is revised periodically. It is, however, necessary that there should be some central authority to grant exemptions within a well defined limit, as it is possible that exemptions may be granted wholesale by individual officers to the detriment of the Public Service and of qualified candidates. It is therefore proposed to raise the scale of appointments for which the general educational test is required from Rs. 15 to Rs. 20. This will cause a considerable amount of relief.

POWERS which are now exercised by the Local Government, but which may be delegated to the Director of Public Instruction.

Item number.	Subject.	Reference to Codes.	Remarks.

11	Declaration of backward classes ...	Article 15 of the Grant-in-aid Code.
12	Powers to sanction grants for furniture, apparatus and books.	Article 60 of the Grant-in-aid Code...	The Director of Public Instruction's powers of sanction may be extended from Rs. 200 to Rs. 500.
13	Admission into the Medical School and College of Engineering of pupils not possessing the requisite educational qualifications.
14	Payment of munshi allowance to European and Eurasian officers of the Educational Service.	Rule 6 in G.O. No. 573, Educational, dated 15th September 1896.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE THE

ROYAL COMMISSION UPON DECENTRALIZATION.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

RANGOON, Wednesday, 11th December, 1907.

PRESENT :

C. E. H. HOBHOUSE, Esq., M.P., Under-Secretary of State for India, Chairman.

Sir FREDERIC LELY, K.C.I.E., C.S.I.
Sir STEYNING EDGERLEY, K.C.V.O., C.I.E., I.C.S.
R. C. DUTT, Esq., C.I.E.

W. S. MEYER, Esq., C.I.E., I.C.S.
W. L. HICHENS, Esq.

The Hon. Mr. W. F. RICE was called and examined.

9972. (Chairman.) You have spent about eight years in district work and about four years in the Secretariat?—Yes; I became Chief Secretary in July of this year.

It is desirable to give larger financial powers to provincial Governments generally and to the Government of Burma in particular, but I am not prepared to say that a more complete separation than at present exists between imperial and provincial finances is desirable or to suggest any practical method in which this result might be effected. I would enhance the powers of the Local Government with regard to the creation of new appointments so as to enable it to make appointments up to Rs. 500 a month. I would give the Local Government similar powers with regard to abolishing appointments. The Local Government should have power to grant fixed travelling allowances and conveyance allowances, to fix special rates of travelling allowances for localities where travelling is expensive, and to sanction the grant of local allowances for officers stationed in remote and expensive places. The Local Government should be authorized to grant any special allowance such as a local allowance, a house allowance, a travelling allowance, a horse or conveyance allowance, as well as fees or honoraria.

In matters of general administration the degree of control must be left to the discretion of the Supreme Government, but where the power to take action or to make rules has been conferred by law on the Local Government, it should be left to exercise the power. In other cases the statutory power of the Local Government might be enlarged. In the majority of Indian Statutes the power of the Local Government is subject to the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, but in many cases this restriction seems to me to be unnecessary. When it is a question of taking action or of framing rules in matters of purely local importance, the power of the Local Government might be exercised subject only to the general control of the Government of India, which would have power to interfere if necessary, but much labour and correspondence would be saved if the previous reference, which is now required in each case, were dispensed with. As regards the remedy, specific amending legislation would be preferable to a general act of delegation.

In the departments with which I have had most experience I have noticed no tendency on the part of Directors and Inspectors-General under the Government of India to exercise administrative authority in matters which should properly be left to the Local Government. The assistance and advice of the Director-General of Education has been of much value to the Local Government and to the provincial Director of Public Instruction. Without the assistance of the Director-General of the Indian Medical Service it would be difficult, if not impossible, to select suitable officers to fill appointments requiring special professional qualifications.

Many useful administrative reforms have been initiated by the Government of India. I may instance the educational reforms arising out of the Educational Conference held at Simla in 1901.

I would not curtail the right of appeal in respect of administrative action, whether granted by law or by practice. The Government must have the power to interfere in all matters of administration.

The right of appeal now granted to officers of Government against orders affecting them personally is not too liberal, and I would not curtail it. The local Government is already vested with power to withhold a petition addressed to the Government of India in any case in which the petition is merely an appeal against an order of the Local Government upholding on appeal the dismissal, removal, reduction or other punishment of a Government servant whose salary was not more than Rs. 100 a month. As regards appeals to the Local Government, the rule at present in force is that no appeal is entertained by the Local Government against the order of a Commissioner or Head of a Department upholding on appeal the dismissal, removal, reduction or other punishment of a Government servant whose salary was not more than Rs. 50 a month.

The demand for returns and information continues to increase. This Government is at present engaged on an exhaustive enquiry into the influence of the opium policy on crime, as evidenced by the relative statistics of the last 20 years. This information has been called for by the Secretary of State for India.

Extended powers may suitably be delegated to the Financial Commissioner, Commissioners of Divisions, Heads of Departments and Deputy Commissioners, both in regard to financial matters and matters of general administration.

I am not prepared to say that the influence of the provincial Governments is in the direction of excessive rigidity or uniformity, or that they are too much dominated by considerations of revenue. The Commissioner is always consulted in this province in all matters of importance affecting his division, and his views are duly considered.

In the majority of districts in Burma the office work is excessive, and the opportunities of Executive Officers for personal contact with the people are thereby unduly curtailed, but I find it difficult to suggest a practical remedy. The province is rapidly developing and work is constantly increasing. Much of it is, no doubt, inevitable, but the labour now expended in the preparation of reports and returns might well be reduced. This question was examined a few years ago under the orders of the Government of India, and some reduction was effected. The relief was, however, inconsiderable, and on a re-examination further relief might be granted. With the development of the province, increases of establishment are constantly required and are sanctioned from time to time. No general increase in the administrative staff is required at present, and no general reduction in the area of district or other charges is desirable. Executive Officers in Burma possess sufficient knowledge of the vernaculars.

Care is already exercised in the selection of Commissioners, Deputy Commissioners and other responsible officers. I do not think that the grant of larger powers will render necessary greater care in the selection of officers than is exercised at present.

Transfers of officers are no doubt frequent, but not unnecessarily so. Officers fall sick and go on leave, and transfers are therefore inevitable. They are less frequent than in former years, and are certainly avoided as much as possible.

There are no District, Sub-divisional or Local Boards or village unions in Burma, and I am not in favour of the creation of Advisory or Administrative Councils to assist Divisional or District Officers. I do not think that it is either desirable or possible to give village communities in Burma greater powers in the disposal of local affairs. Village headmen are already empowered to dispose of petty criminal and civil cases.

9973. Will you tell us why—in practice, not in theory—there is such a considerable difference between the legislation of Upper and Lower Burma? I understand that nearly all your laws relate separately to Upper and Lower Burma?—Yes, a good many laws in Lower Burma have been in force there longer than those in Upper Burma.

9974. Is there any reason why they should not now be amalgamated?—There is a tendency, and a desire, to amalgamate the law as much as possible, but it cannot all be done at once. A new law amalgamating the village law in the two sections of the province will come into force within a week or two.

9975. But is there any practical reason why the laws and the general administration of Upper and Lower Burma should not become identical?—There is no reason why it should not become so in time, but at present it could hardly be done. The revenue system, for instance, is different in the two sections of the province; we inherited a revenue system when we annexed Upper Burma, and we kept it with as little alteration as possible.

9976. Is it desirable to maintain the alteration between the two sections?—Not permanently, I think. A beginning has been made towards amalgamation.

9977. You think the law and administration will be advantageously amalgamated at no distant date?—Yes. For instance, the Registration Law is different; in Lower Burma the Indian Registration Law is in force as in other parts of India; in Upper Burma there is a special Upper Burma Registration Regulation which is of a simpler character, because the people of Upper Burma are thought to be not yet capable of carrying out and observing the intricate provisions of the ordinary Registration Law. That is a sample of the difficulty of amalgamating the law immediately.

9978. Do you find any difficulty in obtaining suitable representatives of the natives of Burma for the Legislative Council?—I think there is no difficulty, because the number of members is at present very small.

9979. How many Commissioners' divisions have you?—Eight.

9980. It has been suggested to us that the Commissioners in Burma have, for one reason or another, a somewhat less free hand than they have in other parts of India?—I cannot say.

9981. Are the powers which they exercise under revenue enactments sufficiently extensive?—They might be enhanced with advantage.

9982. You say that Commissioners are responsible to the Local Government. Does the Commissioner of a division correspond with the Secretary of the Government in the appropriate department?—Yes, he also corresponds habitually demi-officially with the Lieutenant-Governor himself.

9983. What is the average size and population of a Deputy Commissioner's district?—They vary very much. The district of Hanthawaddy, I should take as a fair average; that is 3,023 square miles, population 484,000; the population there is probably more than the average, because that district is surrounding Rangoon. I should think the average would be about 300,000. The area of the smallest district (Kyaukse) is 1,274 square miles, population 141,000; the area of the largest district (Chindwin) is 19,062 square miles; population 154,000.

9984. After how many years' service does a man become a Commissioner?—The most junior Commissioner in Burma, who was appointed in November of last year, commenced his service in 1885.

9985. Then above the Commissioners there is no one but the Financial Commissioner and the Lieutenant-Governor?—That is correct.

9986. Some of your Assistant Commissioners are Covenanted Civilians and some are members of the Indian Army?—Yes, and some are Uncovenanted Civilians.

9987. In the future is it proposed to have nothing but Covenanted Civilians?—Covenanted Civilians and members of the Indian Army; no doubt in the future the cadre will be closed to the Indian Army as well.

9988. Is it practically now so closed?—No, not yet.

9989. With regard to township officers, who are the ultimate representatives of Government in most direct contact with the people, what is their position?—A township officer is an Executive Officer. He is technically an ungazetted Officer, but for certain purposes myooks, as we call them, are treated as Gazetted Officers. They are members of the Subordinate Civil Service. Their salary ranges from Rs. 175 to Rs. 250 a month.

9990. The revenue is collected through the agency of the village headmen, who are remunerated by commission?—Yes.

9991. Is that a satisfactory system?—Very, I think.

9992. Satisfactory from the point of view of revenue?—From the point of view of the administration of the country.

9993. Would not the fact that a man is paid by commission incline him to get in his revenue at all costs, because his salary depended upon it?—I do not think so. He has no authority to remit revenue or to enhance revenue; he merely has to collect what he is told.

9994. Would there be any inclination on his part, under the present system, to point out to the Divisional Officer that remissions were needed?—I do not think that the consideration of his commission would stop him from doing so. The commission is not very large, and the headman is very much on a level with the rest of his villagers, and his sympathy with the villagers would probably be greater than his desire for his own commission.

9995. The sympathy would extend to his depleting his own pocket if necessary?—Yes, I have no doubt it would.

9996. There are two judicial jurisdictions in the province, one in Upper Burma and one in Lower Burma?—Yes. There is a Chief Court in Lower Burma and a Judicial Commissioner in Upper Burma.

9997. Does that arrangement lead to divergent expressions of judicial opinion?—It has done so on occasions; rulings have differed, but not very often. I remember no serious inconvenience as having been caused by it.

9998. The Judicial Commissioner is entirely independent of the Chief Court?—Quite; he exercises an independent jurisdiction altogether.

9999. Do you know of any other province in India where a similar state of things obtain?—I believe there is a Judicial Commissioner of Oudh and in Sind.

10000. Would any good purpose be served by amalgamating the two judicial authorities?—In time they will be amalgamated. There would be a certain amount of inconvenience to the natives of Upper Burma in having to come to Rangoon for their final appeals; they find it convenient to be able to go to Mandalay.

10001. Do not many of your Commissioners exercise judicial powers?—Yes.

10002. Is that satisfactory?—It is satisfactory where their other work is not so heavy that they have no time to do judicial work.

10003. Does judicial work interfere with their revenue work?—It was on that ground that separate Divisional Judges were appointed in three divisions.

10004. Are the relations between the Commissioners and the police satisfactory?—Yes, I think so.

10005. Does the system under which the District Superintendent is under the control of the Deputy Commissioner work well?—I think it works quite well in practice.

10006. There is no undue interference of the one with the other?—I think not.

10007. You tell us that "in the control of sanctioned working plans the Chief Conservator has taken the place hitherto occupied by the Inspector-General of Forests"?—Yes.

10008. What is a "working plan"; is that the delimitation of forest?—It is a programme of work for the Forest Officers to deal with.

10009. You advocate the plan of local allowances; does that affect pensions in any way?—No, a local allowance does not affect a pension.

10010. The freedom which has been nominally given to you by the Government of India has been limited by a series of executive orders?—There have been instances in which the Government of India have sent model rules, or a set of draft rules, with the suggestion that they should be framed by the Local Government under an Act, when the Act gives power to the Local Government to frame rules.

10011. Would you give us an instance?—I will instance the Poisons Act, which gives power to the Local Government to frame rules subject to the control of the Governor-General in Council. The Government of India sent us a set of model rules which they said they wished to have framed, on the ground that it was desirable to have uniformity in the rules as to poisons adopted in the different provinces.

10012. Would you consider that the circumstances in different provinces were not such as to require uniformity in the matter of the sale of poisons?—I am not prepared to say; I do not know enough about the circumstances of other provinces; but, if the aim was to secure uniformity, it seems to me that it would have been desirable in framing the Act to reserve the power to the Government of India to make rules.

10013. Did you as a matter of fact adopt their suggestions?—We returned the rules with suggestions for their alteration; I believe the case is not yet completed.

10014. Is there any other case to which you would draw our attention?—The Petroleum Act has been mentioned as another instance, but I am not prepared to speak as to that of my own knowledge.

10015. However, you think, that that is not an isolated case?—I think not; there is a tendency in that direction.

10016. Do you think that the action of the Government of India is, not merely in theory but in fact, detrimental to the provincial Government?—Yes, the Local Government is better capable of judging what rules are required in a case like the Poisons Act; the rules that were sent down were a good deal more elaborate than are required in Burma.

10017. Suppose the circumstances were more or less uniform throughout India, and the rules varied considerably in each province, might that not occasion a considerable amount of correspondence with the Government of India, and a comparison of what was taking place in different provinces?—I should think not.

10018. What do you mean by "general control"?—I mean by general control that any rules or orders framed by the Local Government under an Act should be published in the official Gazette, and copies supplied in ordinary course to the Government of India, and if they thought there was any reason to object they could say so, and suggest to the Local Government that they should alter the rules.

10019. "Suggest" or "require"?—Require the Local Government to alter the rules.

10020. Under that system would there be a less prejudicial interference with your freedom than there would be under the rules which require interference?—I think there would be the same amount of control but less correspondence; because there would be no correspondence except where the Government of India thought that interference was required.

10021. It was suggested to us the other day at Madras that in practice the Medical Service was a provincial Service—though nominally there is a central control; practically when a man is sent to a province he remains there permanently, or until he gets on to what is called the Selected List. Is that so, in practice, in Burma?—To a great extent it is true. I have known cases of transfers. There was an officer in the Indian Medical Service who was a Civil Surgeon in Burma; he recently applied to return to India, and he was transferred to India for military employment.

10022. Without the leave of the Local Government?—The Local Government sent on his application and said they had no objection.

10023. You do not think that the control of the Director-General of the Indian Medical Service is in any way, therefore, harmful?—I think not.

10024. Who is the Head of your Medical Service?—The Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals, who has the rank of a Colonel.

10025. You do not think that at any stage there is any desirability of curtailing the present right of appeal?—Do you refer to personal appeals, or to appeals on public questions?

10026. I will take both.—No, I think there is no occasion to curtail the right in either case.

10027. Would a great many appeals come through you as Chief Secretary?—Yes.

10028. And through you to whom?—To the Government of India.

10029. Not to your own Government?—There are a number of appeals to the Local Government from persons who have been punished or censured by Heads of Departments.

10030. Are most of them on trivial questions?—Many of them are appeals against orders of dismissal or removal.

10031. What about fines?—Fines are practically forbidden as a punishment in this province.

10032. And in regard to minor punishments, whatever form they may assume?—There are very few appeals to the Local Government against any punishments except reduction or removal.

The Hon. Mr. W. F. Rice.

11 Dec., 1907.

*The Hon. Mr.
W. F. Rice.*

11 Dec., 1907.

10033. Do you generally find that you uphold the decision of the officer who has ordered the punishment?—I could not say that; there are many cases in which the order is reversed.

10034. A sufficient number of cases to make it desirable in your judgment to retain this right of appeal?—I think so, certainly.

10037. You tell us that "The Commissioner is always consulted in this province in all matters of importance affecting his division; and his views are duly considered"; that may mean anything or nothing?—I did not mean nothing; I mean that they are considered.

10038. But are they adopted; has the Commissioner really a more or less deciding voice in what is going to be done in his division, or not?—I think he has. The Lieutenant-Governor may, and does, overrule him if necessary.

10039. You would lead us to believe that on the whole the Commissioner is the person who really runs the division?—Yes.

10040. You have told us that the Commissioner corresponds with the provincial Government through the Secretary in certain departments. Suppose there is a difference of opinion between the Secretary and the Commissioner; the Commissioner takes one view and the Secretary holds another; the Secretary takes his view to the Lieutenant-Governor; are we to take it that, as a rule, the Commissioner gets his way, or that the Secretary gets his way, with the Lieutenant-Governor?—There are instances of both, I cannot say which is most frequent.

10041. With regard to the office work being excessive, as you tell us it is, whose duty do you think it is to endeavour to reduce the office work, the duty of the provincial Government or of the Government of India?—The provincial Government.

10042. Have the provincial Government done anything towards that end?—They have tried, I think; they are always trying.

10043. But have they succeeded?—Not to any great extent.

10044. We are told that a great deal is going to be done in the way of delegation, but, as far as I can gather, nothing has yet been done?—The reason for the increase of office work in Burma is mainly the development of the province. It is not the fault of any system, so much as the natural increase of work owing to the increase of population, cultivation, trade and commerce.

10045. Would this increase of general activity account also in any way for the increase in the number of returns and statistics which you mention?—I do not deal myself with commercial or agricultural affairs, so I can scarcely answer.

10046. So far the provincial Government have not done anything very actively to reduce this excessive office work?—The Lieutenant-Governor recently appointed a small committee. About a year ago he appointed two Commissioners of experience, Major Maxwell and Mr. Todd Naylor, to hold a special enquiry and try and evolve a scheme by which work might be decreased; their proposals have been received and are being considered, and they will, I think, give some relief.

10047. Do their proposals go outside the actual authority of the Lieutenant-Governor?—Some of them do.

10048. When did these gentlemen report?—About six months ago.

10049. Nothing has yet been done?—Yes, something has been done. I am not prepared to give details at a moment's notice. A good deal of it entails an increase of establishment, which will require reference to the Government of India and to the Secretary of State in some cases. Some of it also will probably require legislation.

10050. But what has been done which would not require a reference?—There were certain suggestions that could be carried out without a reference; they are now under consideration, but the most important proposals would entail a considerable increase of establishment.

10051. It comes back to this, that nothing has yet been done by the provincial Government?—The provincial Government are taking action on the report now.

10052. You tell us that Executive Officers in Burma possess all the knowledge of the vernacular that is necessary?—I think they have a fair knowledge of it.

10053. How many languages or dialects are common in Burma?—There is one main language; the Burmese language is common all over Burma proper. In the Shan States there is the Shan language, and in the outlying hill districts the hill tribes have dialects, but they are people that the ordinary District Officer seldom sees, and has no experience of. There is also a Karen language but, generally speaking, Burmese is the one language which is used throughout the province.

10057. When do they pass the Higher Standard?—As soon as possible; they generally pass it within two years or eighteen months.

10058. Do officers when they have been home on eighteen months' or two years' leave come back rather rusty in their knowledge of the vernacular?—No, I do not think that a knowledge of the vernacular would be lost in so short a time.

10059. But would they not come back rather rusty?—I think not; I went myself on two years' leave, and I do not remember that I found difficulty with the language when I returned.

10060. It would not be necessary in any way to require officers after a considerable period of leave, such as that, to show that they had not lost command of the language?—I think not.

10061. You say that transfers are less frequent than in former years?—I believe so.

10062. Who settles the transfers?—The Lieutenant-Governor.

10063. Has the Commissioner got power to transfer his Deputy Commissioners and Assistant Commissioners from district to district inside his own division?—No.

10064. That is all done by the Lieutenant-Governor?—Yes, with officers of that rank. The Commissioner transfers officers of the Subordinate Civil Service, but not beyond that.

10065. Not officers of the Provincial Service?—No. That is done by the Lieutenant-Governor in the Chief Secretary's office.

10066. Practically by you?—No, by the Lieutenant-Governor personally. The Lieutenant-Governor passes orders on these matters.

10067. At all events, as Chief Secretary, you see all the transfers that are made?—Yes.

10068. And you tell us that they are less frequent than in former years?—I believe there is no doubt that they are.

10069. Did you yourself as a Deputy Commissioner experience the necessity of staying a considerable time in a district before you could know it?—Certainly.

10070. And you recognise, therefore, that from the point of view of value to the Service, they ought to be kept as long as possible in the same district?—Undoubtedly.

10071. You tell us quite certainly that they are now so kept a longer time in their district?—Yes, unless some special reason arises making it desirable to transfer them.

10072. Deputy Commissioners appear to have been about a year or 15 months in charge of their districts; is that a satisfactory length of time to keep an officer in charge of a district?—They are kept longer than that in many cases.

10074. At the present moment the average service of one of these Deputy Commissioners in his present charge is about a year?—The average shown by these figures may work out at about a year, but the figures are merely the dates on which the officers last assumed charge possibly on their return from leave. The true average would probably be longer. Certainly many instances would show longer periods than one year.

10075. Is it a satisfactory length of time for which to keep a man in a district which may cover an area of 19,000 square miles, and which, on the other hand, may only be 1,000 square miles?—No, but the time is not limited to that. If we could see these same officers after another year, many of them would be still shewn as in charge of the same district as they are at present.

10076. And a great many may have been moved?—Some of them would have been moved.

10077. How long would it be desirable from the point of view of the district itself, that an officer should stay in charge of it?—It is impossible to give a definite period. The value of an officer is greatest in charge of a district when he has been there long enough to get to know the district and the people thoroughly.

10078. How long would you give him to know a district of, say, on the average, about 3,000 square miles?—He is not likely to know his district well until he has been there six months or a year, at any rate.

10079. In six months could he get all round his district?—He could visit most parts of it.

10080. Until six months are over he is not of much value?—I do not say that he is not of much value; he is not of the same value that he will be when he knows the district better.

10081. Therefore, it is desirable that a considerably longer period than a year is the time suitable for retaining an officer in a district?—Yes, in my opinion a longer period than a year is desirable.

10082. Are the Assistant Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners often moved about from district to district inside the same division?—Yes; they are moved when necessity arises, but such transfers too are regarded as undesirable.

10083. Why are they more or less constantly moved?—Generally owing to other officers going sick, and going on leave.

10084. The pay of a Deputy Commissioner depends not upon the station that he is in, but upon his length of service?—Upon his rank in the Service.

10085. Because one officer is moved up it would not be necessary to transfer a great many others?—Not necessarily.

10087. What does he do?—He is generally in charge of a sub-division of a district. Some of them are headquarters Assistants or hold special appointments; most of them are in charge of sub-divisions.

10088. Then you suggest that the number of transfers, which is considerable, is due entirely to promotions?—To promotions and to officers going on leave, and to casualties owing to deaths and sickness.

10089. Could the number of these transfers be reduced?—I do not think so; I believe that every effort is now made to reduce them as much as possible.

10090. You have no District Boards or Local Boards in Burma, outside the municipalities?—No, the municipalities and the Rangoon Port Trust are the only local bodies.

10091. Have you any district cesses?—There is a district cess in Lower Burma, not in Upper Burma.

10092. Are there any Acts in existence which give the provincial Government power to delegate authority which delegation they have not exercised?—I cannot recall any such Act.

10093. You deal with promotions subject to the authority of the Lieutenant-Governor?—Not all promotions, only promotions in certain departments.

10094. Since you have been in the Secretariat has it been necessary to pass over officers because they are not up to the standard of efficiency which you would expect?—Yes, not many, but I have known cases.

10095. You are guided in your promotions by the rule of seniority first?—Subject to efficiency, yes.

10096. Suppose that there was not much, but still some, difference between two men, would seniority give the particular post to the man who was senior?—Yes, as long as the senior man was regarded as fit for promotion.

10097. Up to the standard, though not the better man of the two?—Generally the senior man would get the promotion, I think. I am talking of ordinary promotions, not special posts for which officers are selected.

10098. Might that lead to a low standard of efficiency being set in order not to get rid of a certain man?—No, I think not. An officer would not be got rid of, even if he was passed over; he would remain in a lower position.

10099. Do the officers, after they have been passed over, still remain in the lower grades?—I am talking now of the Covenanted Service?—There have been such cases.

10100. How many cases have there been in the last four years, say, since you have been in the Secretariat?—I have known some cases.

10101. Have there been half a dozen such cases?—No, not so many.

10102. Three or four?—Three or four probably 10103. In the last four years?—Yes.

*The Hon. Mr.

*The Hon. Mr.
W. F. Rice.*

11 Dec., 1907.

10104. Suppose you had to judge of the claims of two officers, of equal standing, for a particular post, what would you set most store upon in deciding as to which officer was to get the post?—A good deal upon the opinions of the officers under whom they had served.

10105. What would their recommendations chiefly be based upon?—Upon the capacity of the officer in question for administration, and his tact and method of dealing with the people.

10106. Would a good deal of merit be assigned to his power to write a good despatch?—It would depend a great deal upon the particular appointment that there was a question of promoting him to; a judicial appointment, an administrative appointment, and an executive appointment, would require different qualifications.

10107. In the case of an appointment to the Secretariat, would the first qualification be the power to write a good letter?—That, I imagine, is a necessary qualification; I am not sure that it is the first.

10108. Have most of the officers at present at the head of the Government in Burma been through the Secretariat?—The Financial Commissioner has served in the Secretariat, the majority of the Commissioners have not.

10109. Might it not, therefore, be possible that the first recommendation for a man to get to the top of the tree would be the power of writing a good despatch; that would first of all pass him into the Secretariat, and then lift him out of the Secretariat?—I do not think that the power of writing a good despatch is the only qualification required in the Secretariat.

10110. I do not say that, but would it not be a very important factor in taking him to the top of the tree?—I think it would be a factor, no doubt.

10111. But not, in your judgment, an important factor?—No, I think not.

10112. Suppose a man was a good linguist, very much in touch with the people in his district, and constantly in the habit of travelling about his district; would that be as likely to bring him to the notice of the provincial Government as his power of putting things clearly and tersely on paper?—Certainly, I think it would; his being in constant touch with the people would be regarded as a valuable trait in his method of administration.

10113. Quite as valuable as the other?—I should think more so.

10114. That is your experience; if you think over the persons who are now going up the ladder, you think that that has been a determining factor in their success?—It certainly has.

10115. With regard to Advisory or Administrative Councils, you do not think that in Burma these could be created advantageously?—I think not. It is unlikely that the people who would be appointed to them would take any real interest in the work, or that their services would be of any great value. It would be of assistance to the District or Divisional Officer to have the opinions of the natives of the country on proposals that might be made, but they get those already by consulting persons with whom they are acquainted. The officials in this province are generally well acquainted with the people, and are in the habit of conversing with respectable Burmans—elders of the villages and towns in which they live—and they can get as much advice in that way and in as useful a way as they would by having Advisory Councils.

10116. Is the idea of what in other parts of India is called a panchayat quite foreign to the Burmese temperament?—There is no such thing as a formal village Council in Burma.

10117. Was there no form of village government previously to the British Government taking over Burma?—Certainly, a very complete form of village government. There is a headman who is generally elected by the villagers themselves and commonly appointed by the Deputy Commissioner on the election of the villagers as long as there is no objection to him otherwise. He is the headman of the village and he exercises considerable powers in the village with regard to sanitation, petty crime, the collection of revenue, prevention of cattle disease, and matters of ordinary local interest.

10118. He is a sort of benevolent autocrat?—To a certain extent in minor matters; he is himself one of the villagers.

10119. Is there any cess levied in the village?—In Lower Burma there is a district cess, in Upper Burma there is not.

10120. How is all that sort of petty expenditure provided for; suppose you wanted a village well in Upper Burma, where would the funds come from?—The villagers would build it themselves; the village community is regarded under this system as being jointly responsible for what occurs in the village.

10121. Would it not, therefore, be just as wise to recognise the existence of that village community?—It is recognised.

10122. I thought you said that there was nothing like a village Council?—There is no Council, but there is the village itself and its headman. The elders of the village collect and talk things over among themselves, but there is no formal Council.

10123. For the purpose of petty criminal and civil jurisdiction would it not be as well to have, even perhaps as assessors, somebody to assist the village headman?—The system was not introduced by us; we found it in the country and it satisfies the people of the country, and I think there is no reason to alter it.

10124. With regard to District Boards, speaking here with the authority of the Government of Burma, you think it is undesirable that there should be a system of District Boards?—I think the people of the country are not sufficiently educated up to the idea of self-government to render District Boards desirable.

10125. In other provinces there are District Boards, with a Divisional Officer as President, and more or less nominated members. Do you think that the Burmese are not prepared for such a system?—I myself believe they are not. There is a District Fund in each district, which is administered for local needs by the Deputy Commissioner without the aid of a District Board.

10126. That comes from a cess upon land?—In Lower Burma it comes from the district cess; in Upper Burma it is chiefly derived from rents from bazaars and other similar sources.

10127. Although there is a district cess, no matter how raised, do the Government of Burma think that it is undesirable at present to create any local bodies to deal with the expenditure of these funds?—Yes, I think so. I may mention that District Boards were introduced into Burma some years ago, but were not a success; there was no strong objection to them, but they excited little interest.

10128. What was the composition of those Boards?—I cannot say exactly; I think the local officers appointed or nominated respectable members of the community to serve on the Board, and the Boards simply died out; when members resigned or died no reappointments were made, because little interest was taken in the matter by the local people.

10129. Were any powers assigned to those Boards?—They were Advisory Boards, I think.

10130. Did the fact that they were only Advisory Boards create apathy in regard to their proceedings?—I do not think that that is so; I think that if we introduced District Boards now they would generally do what the Deputy Commissioner suggested to them; the result would be much the same as the Deputy Commissioner administering the District Fund as he does at present.

10131. (Sir Frederic Lely.) You say that members of the Legislative Council are nominated by the Lieutenant-Governor with the sanction of the Government of India. If that sanction was dispensed with would there be any objection?—I know of no objection.

10132. You say that the eight Commissioners are responsible to the Local Government for the working of all the departments in the Public Service. You deal with police matters; do you say for instance, that the Commissioners are in any way responsible for the police work in their own divisions?—Certainly, but not for questions of internal discipline or economy.

10133. Suppose a Commissioner forms a strong opinion as to the conduct of the police of a particular district, how would he enforce his opinion?—By a report to the Local Government in some cases. In others he would give advice or instruction to the District Magistrate. He exercises no statutory authority.

10134. The Deputy Commissioner's responsibility would be enforced by his power to give orders to the Superintendent of Police?—Yes. He has authority as District Magistrate.

10135. But has the Commissioner any direct power?—I think not, but he exercises a general supervision and control over the action of the District Magistrate in respect of police matters. His only resource would be to report his opinion to the Local Government or to the Inspector-General of Police.

10136. If the Inspector-General of Police received such an opinion and did not agree with it, what would happen; would he let it drop?—If the Inspector-General of Police disagreed, he would have to refer it to Government, or, if he did not refer it, the Commissioner would probably do so.

10137. That is really the only connection between the Commissioner and the police?—Yes.

10138. Have there not been very numerous changes in the organisation of the police lately under the orders of the Government of India?—Yes.

10139. Have they not gone into excessive detail?—Yes, I think they have probably.

10140. They have gone so far as to prescribe the pay of the police; their uniform; even down to buttons?—Yes.

10141. Is that advisable?—Certain details might have been left to the Local Government; as to the uniform itself, it is a good thing that the police should have one uniform throughout India.

10142. Is not the organisation of the local police a matter that might well be left entirely to the provincial Government?—I think that an Imperial Police Service is valuable.

10143. I mean the provincial police who are responsible for law and order within the province; might that not be left to the Local Government entirely?—Yes, certainly.

10144. Have you to apply to the Government of India for sanction for every increase in the numbers of the provincial police, however small?—Yes. The sanction is necessary under section 2 of the Police Act, 1861.

10145. Have not the orders that have been issued under the new police organisation left the provincial Government very little power of deviating from them even on small matters?—Yes.

10146. Has not the effect of the recent changes in the police been to tighten, what I may call, the screw of departmentalism?—I am not sure.

10147. For instance, has the control of the District Officer and of the Commissioner been lessened thereby?—I do not think so.

10148. Is the appointment of the Inspector-General of Civil Police a new appointment?—No.

10149. As to the subordination of the police officers and the relationship of the District Officers to the police officers proper, has that been altered substantially in the recent re-organisation?—I do not think that there has been any substantial alteration in this province.

10150. Is not the Deputy Inspector-General for Railways and Criminal Investigation a new appointment?—Yes.

10151. Has he any powers within a district and off the railways?—He exercises no direct authority over District Police Officers.

10152. Not over the District Superintendent, but over the officers subordinate to the District Superintendent?—No, he would exercise no such authority over the head of the District Superintendent.

10153. Suppose he had reason to believe that there was need for a special enquiry in a district, has he power to send his own detectives into that district to take up the enquiry?—Yes, but he would no doubt inform the District Superintendent.

10154. He would, no doubt, if he was a man of tact, but would he be obliged to?—If he liked, he could send his own men into any district.

10155. Without any reference to the authority responsible for the peace and order of the district?—I believe he could do so. I think he probably would not do so.

10156. Is not the system which makes that possible rather fraught with possibilities of friction?—I do not think there is any possibility of friction; his rank as Deputy Inspector-General enables him to avoid that.

10157. But if the Superintendent of Police came to know that the Deputy Inspector-General had sent his men into the district, with the power to communicate with the local police and to conduct an enquiry quite apart from him, would it not be natural for the Superintendent of Police to be annoyed?—I do not think the Deputy Inspector-General would do that without informing the Superintendent of Police.

10158. As a matter of fact, is that never done?—I am afraid I cannot say whether it is ever done; I think the Deputy Inspector-General would always inform the Superintendent of Police.

10159. Among the subjects under your purview is that of language examinations. Do you think the examinations of junior officers are sufficient?—I think so.

10160. As to the selection of Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners, as a matter of fact would you say that none are ever appointed now-a-days who are unfit?—I think I can say that.

10161. If the claims of two men clash with each other, or they are in rivalry at all, suppose both men are fit, but the senior is not so fit as the junior, would you still appoint the senior?—If the senior is fit, I think he would be appointed first. I again speak of ordinary promotions, not of selections to special appointments.

10162. Then in other words, your system is not the selection of the fit, but the exclusion of the unfit?—That is so.

10164. We have had it in evidence that on a certain date last year the average time served by each officer in a district was something under 12 months. Do you not know cases in which there have been two or three changes in a year in a single district?—Yes; such cases do occur.

10165. The figures which we have got for this year may probably be taken as of an average year, and the figure next year would probably work out to the same result?—Yes. But I should like to explain one point which shows that the average time referred to is not the true average. I will give an instance. In the Bassem district the Deputy Commissioner went on leave for three months recently; a junior officer was posted to replace him, and the original Deputy Commissioner of the district, who went on three months' leave, on the expiry of the three months' leave is now returning to the district. That would be shown as two changes in the year; in reality it is not a change at all; it is merely the original man returning to his district after three months' absence.

10166. His term would count from the time of his return?—In the column of the Civil List at which you are looking, it would count from the time of his return; the book would show that he had been there only two or three months, whereas in fact he may have been in charge of the district for two or three years.

10167. You are not in favour of the creation of Advisory Councils or District Boards?—That is correct.

10168. You recognise that it is desirable to enlist popular opinion and help in the work of governing the country?—Certainly.

10169. In considering what machinery should be set on foot for gaining that assistance, what would you suggest; if you do not have District Boards, and if you do not recognise the village, what would you suggest?—All the administration of the province is based on the village as the unit.

10170. You think that that is sufficient for the present?—I think so. The village is represented by its headman instead of by a village Council, but the headman is equally representative because he is elected by the village.

10171. He is a single man?—Yes. He exercises authority over the village.

10172. There is no sort of assembly of village elders?—In practice the village elders do assemble no doubt, but there is no responsible assembly of village elders.

10173. You say that these village headmen, assisted or not by the village elders, undertake the public works of the village?—Yes.

10174. The schools?—No, they do not undertake the schools. There is a very complete system of Buddhist monastic schools; almost every monastery throughout the country is a vernacular school.

10175. That is done in conjunction, and, sympathy, with the people?—Yes.

10176. They are not under a Government department?—Many of them are not; some of them come voluntarily under the rules of the Education Department, but it is an indigenous system altogether.

10177. It is essentially a village agency?—Entirely so.

10178. Then as to sanitation?—The headman of the village is responsible for village sanitation.

10179. As a matter of fact does he meet that responsibility?—To a certain extent.

10180. What, for instance, would happen if the village entirely neglected sanitation?—They could not entirely neglect sanitation. They have their own ideas; they are not the most modern ideas of sanitation, of course, but they have rules which they carry out about segregating diseased cattle, and keeping their villages clean, and simple rules of that sort.

10181. If the village fails in its responsibilities, is there any means of bringing it to book?—Certainly; there are penalties which can be imposed under the Village Act in Lower Burma and the Village Regulation in Upper Burma for neglect of their duties; every headman under the Act is obliged to perform the duties imposed on him by law as headman, and every villager is obliged to assist the headman in the performance of his public duties; in default he can be punished.

10182. Have they power to levy any cess on the members of the village community?—No, the headman has no power to levy a cess.

10183. Then it would be hard to hold him responsible, for instance, for keeping the village clean?—No, because the villagers have to turn out and do the work.

10184. But suppose they did not turn out and do the work?—Then the headman can punish them himself; he can make them turn out; it is his business to see that they do turn out.

10185. It has been said more than once that the officers in Burma know the people well. To what would you attribute that, supposing it to be true; that they know the language better than officers know the language in India?—I have no experience of India myself, but if it is true, it may be due to the fact that the Burmese as a race, are a liberal and friendly people, with no caste or class prejudices, and are easy and pleasant to deal with.

10186. Also, the one language area must be an advantage?—No doubt that is an advantage.

10187. And generally your methods of Government in Burma are less complex than those in India?—I cannot say; I have no experience of any other province.

10188. (Mr. Dutt.) Apparently, of the Deputy Commissioners, 14 have ceased to have any concern with the administration of civil justice?—That is so.

10189. How many districts are there altogether in Burma?—There are 37 districts in the whole of Burma.

10190. In the majority of cases in Lower Burma, has the duty of civil justice been taken away from the Deputy Commissioners and entrusted to other officers?—Yes, to Divisional and District Judges.

10191. Are they men from the Indian Civil Service?—Not all; two appointments of District Judges are filled by members of the Provincial Service, and some are uncovenanted members of the Burma Commission.

10192. Are all the districts in Lower Burma divided into sub-divisions?—There are two districts, the Hill Tracts of Northern Arakan, and the Salween district, that are not.

10193. Are Sub-Divisional Officers generally taken from the Provincial Service?—They are taken some from the Provincial Service, and some from the Subordinate Civil Service, and some from the junior members of the Commission—Assistant Commissioners.

10194. How is the Provincial Service recruited?—It is mainly, but not entirely, filled by natives of the country, or Statutory Natives of India. Direct appointments are by nomination entirely, but there is an examination to the Subordinate Civil Service, and promotions are made to the Provincial Civil Service from the Subordinate Civil Service.

10195. Are any educational qualifications insisted upon in the Provincial Civil Service; must candidates be graduates or under-graduates or anything of that kind?—I think there is no definite qualification laid down; of course reasonable educational qualifications are, in practice, required. Their pay ranges from Rs. 300 to Rs. 800.

10196. You have told us that the village headman is generally elected by the people of the village?—He is appointed by the Deputy Commissioner, but he is usually appointed after an election is held; the Deputy Commissioner is not bound to accept the selection of the villagers, but he generally does so, as a matter of practice, if there is no reason to the contrary.

10197. Who holds the election; is there any special form of election?—No, there is no prescribed form. Hereditary claims are also observed. Other things being equal, if a headman dies, his son or other heir, if he is fit, is generally selected, and appointed to be the next headman.

10198. When there is a vacancy either the Deputy Commissioner, or the Sub-Divisional Officer, or the township officer, requires the people to name their own nominee?—That is so.

10199. And generally that man is appointed?—Yes.

10200. You have told us that he has very considerable powers, both with regard to sanitation and with regard to other village affairs?—He has power in minor matters; his powers are strictly limited; he can fine a villager up to Rs. 5 for refusing to perform his public duties; he tries petty cases of theft— theft of property not exceeding Rs. 5—and other minor cases, and in some cases he is given civil judicial powers up to Rs. 20.

10201. You find that that system works satisfactorily on the whole?—It works admirably.

10202. Does he keep any kind of record of his decisions?—Yes, he keeps a register of cases in which he enters the names of the parties and the nature of the case, and the order that he passes; he also keeps a register of the fines which he imposes.

10203. Are his decisions generally final?—They are always final; they are subject to revision, but there is no appeal.

10204. Are there many applications for revision?—There are applications for revision, but they are not very frequent.

10205. You say that the District Superintendent of Police is in some respects subordinate to the Deputy Commissioner; I suppose you mean in the way of dealing with crime?—Yes.

10206. In important cases, would the Deputy Commissioner see the reports when the cases are under investigation?—He might, and in important cases he probably would.

10207. Would he in such cases send his instructions to the police as to the further investigation of those cases?—He could do so.

10208. Is not the Civil Surgeon generally the Superintendent of the Jail?—In most cases; there are three jails in Burma which have a separate Superintendent—Mandalay, Rangoon, and Insein.

10210. There is no friction in the working of the system?—I have never heard of any friction.

10212. Then it says "It has been ruled that the sanction of the Government of India is necessary to enable the Local Government to transfer a person who is not a Native of India from the Subordinate Civil Service to the Provincial Civil Service." Do you not think that in that case the sanction of the Government of India is desirable, the Services being entirely distinct?—It does not seem to me to be necessary. The object of the rule is that the Government of India should be enabled to see that a sufficient proportion of the natives of the country are employed in the administration. It does not matter whether a particular officer is employed in the Subordinate Civil Service or in the Provincial Civil Service; if he has already been given an appointment, the Local Government might be left to transfer him from the Subordinate to the Provincial, or from the Provincial to the Subordinate Service, without reference to the Government of India.

10213. The rules in the Provincial Civil Service are quite distinct from the rules of the Subordinate Civil Service, and it is in evidence before us that in some provinces lower officials, beginning with a very humble pay, are promoted to the higher Service, and we have had evidence from other witnesses that that was undesirable. In your opinion is not such frequent promotion from the Subordinate to the Provincial Civil Service likely to affect the morale of the higher Service?—I do not think so. The Provincial Civil Service in Burma is not entirely filled by promotions from the Subordinate Civil Service; it is filled partly by persons selected from the Subordinate Civil Service, and partly by persons selected from outside.

10214. In what proportion—about half and half?—Perhaps half and half; that is approximately correct.

10215. Do you think that the system answers well?—I think it is satisfactory.

10216. You would not make it a rule to recruit the Provincial Civil Service entirely from a better class of men than those who enter the Subordinate Civil Service?—I think that the present system improves the class of men who enter for the Subordinate Civil Service, as they know that they have a chance of rising later to the Provincial Civil Service.

10217. As to the appointment of members to the Local Legislative Council, that does not involve much correspondence; you simply ask for sanction and you get it?—In itself it does not involve much correspondence.

10218. So that if that power was granted to the Local Government it would not save much time or correspondence?—Not that individual matter, but all added together increases the volume.

10220. (Chairman.) When you talk about a Sub-Divisional Officer, he controls, not part of a division, but part of a district?—Part of a district—a sub-division of a district.

10221. (Mr. Hichens.) And so you get up to the Commissioner?—Yes.

10222. Who appoints the Commissioner?—The Lieutenant-Governor, on his knowledge of the officer's service.

10223. Off his own bat?—He may consult the persons under whom the officer in question has been serving. A Commissioner would be appointed from among the Deputy Commissioners, and the Lieutenant-Governor, if he did not know the officer well himself—he probably does know him well—would very likely consult the Commissioner under whom the Deputy Commissioner in question had been serving.

10224. Is there any likelihood of his knowing all the Deputy Commissioners?—It depends upon how long he has served in the province; when the Lieutenant-Governor is an officer whose service has been in the province, he would know them all, I think, pretty well.

10225. How many Deputy Commissioners are there?—There are 37 districts, and there is one Deputy Commissioner for each.

10226. (Mr. Meyer.) With regard to the extension of further powers to the Commissioners, would you allow them to post all officers to whatever district or sub-division or township they liked, below the rank, let us say, of Deputy Commissioner?—That I think would probably be inconvenient, because an Assistant Commissioner, for instance, who may be serving in a division, is not only required for service in that division; he might be required at any time to be posted to a district to act for a Deputy Commissioner, or to be posted to another sub-division, and the central Secretariat alone would know the requirements of the Service sufficiently.

10227. Suppose an Assistant Commissioner is required for a certain district; would not the Commissioner be as likely to know as well as anybody else the best man to put in?—If there is a man available in his own division, yes; I see no objection to that.

10228. And if there is no one available, it is always open to him to ask the Government for someone?—Quite so.

The Hon. Mr. W. F. Rice.
11 Dec., 1907.

The Hon. Mr. W. F. Rice.
11 Dec., 1907. 10229. Then where does the objection lie?—He might wish to post an Assistant Commissioner in his division, and the Assistant Commissioner might be required in some other part of the province.

10230. Then the Government would ask for him?—Not necessarily; it could be done without asking.

10231. They could say, "We want so-and-so for such-and-such a place"?—Yes.

10232. Then the Commissioner would make his own arrangements subject to what the Local Government had told him?—Yes; but he probably would not have anybody to put in the place of the officer withdrawn from him.

10233. He could ask for somebody; and when the somebody else came he might post him where he wanted him. Is there not some advantage in that?—It might be done; I do not think it would reduce correspondence in any way; it would increase it.

10234. Do most of the postings that occur not occur within the division?—Transfers do not all take place within a division.

10235. Do you mean that if an Assistant Commissioner is to be transferred from one place to another, in the majority of instances he would go from one division to another division?—In many cases he would; it is difficult to say whether they would be the majority of cases or the minority.

10236. If Commissioners were allowed to settle these questions for themselves would they be able to adjust a very large number of transfers and postings without any reference to the Local Government at all?—I do not think that would be the result; there would be some cases, no doubt.

10237. Would you allow the Commissioner full power to give anybody leave up to say 6 months, if he could do so without having to get provisional assistance?—I do not think that would be convenient, except perhaps in the case of the Subordinate Civil Service, where the Commissioners have already the power of transferring members.

10238. Have they the power of giving leave?—No, they have not, but it would be inconvenient if a Commissioner could give leave to an Assistant Commissioner, because he does not know the requirements of the Service as a whole; it might happen that a man was required for some post, and the Commissioner would not know it.

10239. But would it be inconvenient so far as the Subordinate Service is concerned?—I do not think it would, provided the Commissioner could find a substitute within his own division.

10240. I understand that the Commissioner appoints his own office clerks?—He appoints his own office staff.

10241. Does he appoint nobody else?—The Commissioner does not appoint the office staff of the officers subordinate to him; the Deputy Commissioner appoints the staff of his own office.

10242. But other appointments, such as that, for example, of the myook, are they made by him?—No.

10243. Are appointments in the Subordinate Civil Service made by the Commissioner?—No; all appointments to the Subordinate Civil Service are made by the Local Government.

10244. Might they be made by the Commissioner?—No, I do not think I would delegate the power of appointing to the Subordinate Civil Service to anyone but the Local Government. The members of the Service are not appointed to serve in a particular division only; they are appointed to serve all over the province. The Commissioner at present nominates candidates for appointment to the Subordinate Service, but the appointments are actually made by the Local Government.

10245. It is your aim to avoid transfers as much as you can?—Certainly.

10246. If the Commissioners had more power to appoint their own staff (within their own divisions I mean) and to make transfers and postings, would that tend substantially to reduce the number of transfers?—I do not think the fact of a Commissioner appointing members to the Subordinate Service would tend to reduce transfers in any way.

10247. You do not think that it would tend to make each division a separate unit of its own, and more self-contained?—The Service would tend to deteriorate if the officers were appointed to it only to serve in a particular division.

10248. Then do you say that it would be desirable to transfer from one division to another?—No, but it is desirable that officers should be appointed to serve throughout the province, wherever they may be desired to serve.

10249. But at the same time that they should be retained within their district?—For a reasonable time. I would not retain an officer permanently in any district.

10250. I understand you to say that you thought Regulations should be made by the Local Government concerned, without reference to the Government of India?—I referred to rules relating to purely local affairs.

10251. And these rules might be made by the Local Government without reference to the Government of India?—Where the law lays down that the Local Government may do so, they should be allowed to do so.

10252. But in practice the Government of India require the rules to be submitted to them?—Not quite. In the particular case of poisons the Government of India drafted rules and sent them to the Local Government.

10253. Did they intimate that you had got to accept them?—They asked the Local Government to accept them, on the ground that they wished to have uniform rules in every province.

10254. But you are not in a position to say that they insisted?—No, I am not; I do not know that they did.

10255. If they merely desired uniformity as far as it was possible, and were prepared to give way to you where you objected, do you see any objection to what they did?—There was some unnecessary correspondence. If the Poisons Act is an Act in which uniformity of rules is desirable, it would save trouble and correspondence if the Act itself said that the rules should be framed by the Government of India for the whole of India; but where the Act has said that the rules should be framed in each province by the Local Government subject only to the control of the Government of India, it seems unnecessary in practice to withdraw that power.

10256. Who is in charge of the district treasury?—There is a Treasury Officer, but the Deputy Commissioner is responsible.

10258. How are the myooks appointed generally?—Partly by competitive examination, partly by direct appointment.

10259. You said that you did not see any special good in putting the myooks into a divisional list and letting the Commissioner appoint them. Is it not desirable that a myook should have a very detailed knowledge of his township?—Yes.

10260. Is he not likely to acquire that more if his service is limited to a particular division than if he is liable to be moved about the province?—Yes, that is so; if he is transferred too frequently, that is undesirable; but it is possible for an officer of the standing of a myook to get rather too well acquainted with his township—to get too much mixed up with local affairs—and a transfer is sometimes advisable.

10261. Would it, not be sufficient, then, to transfer him within the same district or to an adjoining district, instead of to another part of the province?—Yes; that is done; they are not transferred to another part of the province as a rule. If a myook goes on leave, on his return to duty he might be posted elsewhere, but that is not a transfer.

10262. Are you aware that in Bombay the mamlatdars (who correspond to myooks here) are on divisional lists and are appointed by the Commissioners?—I was not aware of it.

10263. And that in Madras the tahsildars are appointed by the Collector, subject to the veto of the Board of Revenue only?—I was not aware of that.

10264. Have you ever considered whether the Commissioner might not be granted powers to invest the Magistrates with magisterial powers?—Yes; I think he might, in minor cases.

10265. Subject, of course, to general considerations of fitness, prescribed by the Local Government might he not give powers to Magistrates of good standing and capacity?—I see no objection.

10266. Would you let him appoint Magistrates of the first class?—I think not, I think that power should be kept in the Local Government.

10267. Then, there are certain other powers under the Criminal Procedure Code, power of taking evidence in English, power to take action in cases of nuisance, breach of the peace and so forth, that all require separate investiture by the Local Government at present. Might not Commissioners be invested with those powers?—I think so, or even the District Magistrate.

10268. Has the Commissioner here power in Court of Wards cases?—There is no Court of Wards in Burma at all.

10269. The State takes no responsibility for taking over the charge of minors who hold large properties?—No; there is no Court of Wards.

10270. Do you think the Commissioner might have, subject to budget provision, some power of creating small permanent appointments—clerkships on Rs. 15, say?—Yes, I think he might, subject to budget provision.

10271. In forest matters is the Commissioner adequately consulted by the officers under him?—Yes.

10272. You spoke about giving full powers to the Local Government to grant local allowances in addition to salaries in certain cases. Are you aware that the Government of India themselves do not possess full powers in that matter?—Yes, I am aware that certain cases of local allowances have to go to the Secretary of State.

10273. A local allowance, on whatever ground it is justified, is really an addition to the officer's emoluments?—That is so.

10274. Therefore if, under rule, a certain increase in an officer's emoluments has to go to the Secretary of State, the same would apply to a local allowance?—Under the rules as they are at present, yes.

10275. Do you desire that the Secretary of State should give the Burma Government only, or all Local Governments, an absolutely free hand in regard to local allowances?—I imagine that every Local Government should get the same power.

10276. You do not ask for it by reason of any special circumstances in Burma?—There are special circumstances in Burma. I imagine that local allowances are more frequent in Burma. There are many unhealthy and remote tracts in Burma where allowances are sanctioned.

10277. Are you aware that the Government of India have recently received power from the Secretary of State to create appointments up to Rs. 500, and to raise the pay of an existing appointment up to Rs. 750?—Yes.

10278. Suppose that power were passed on to the Local Government in respect of appointments paid from provincial funds, would not that give you sufficient power in regard to local allowances?—It would give sufficient power in many cases.

10279. It would give sufficient power in regard to relatively petty local allowances?—Yes.

*The Hon. Mr.
W. F. Rice,

10280. Are not model rules generally sent round with the idea of being a framework on which the province should graft anything it thinks fit with reference to its own special conditions?—Yes, I think that is the usual intention.

10281. Do you see any particular objection to that?—No; but as regards the special instance that has been discussed, that is not exactly what happened.

10282. You say that in that case it would have been better for the Government of India to have passed an Imperial Act, or to have said in the Act that the framing of the rules should be left to the Governor-General in Council. Is it not possible that circumstances might alter from time to time, and that a thing that might safely be left to the Local Government in ordinary circumstances might become an inter-provincial matter in which the Imperial Government would have to intervene?—That is no doubt possible. In the particular case I mentioned, most people in Burma, I believe, thought that rules were not required at all; and if the Local Government had been left to its own discretion under the Act the rules, if any, would have been very simple.

10283. Take that very question of poisons. It might be very inconvenient for a person to find that what he was free to deal with in one province was a poison in another?—Yes, that might be inconvenient.

10284. As regards the first point in His Honour's Memorandum, the general proposition that where a law gives power to the Local Government, the Government of India should not intervene; is it not possible that, although the Government of India may desire that the Local Government should generally have a free hand, there may be occasions in which questions of high policy require them to intervene?—That is possible, no doubt.

10285. You are not in favour of any material alteration in the appeal rules? In the Civil Procedure Code there are rules, are there not, which forbid a second appeal on questions of fact?—Yes.

10286. Would you see any objection to applying that generally to administrative actions?—Not as long as an appeal was barred solely as regards questions of fact.

10287. Has not the Local Government of late gone up to the Government of India to try to get relaxation of certain articles of the Civil Service Regulations, or rather delegations as to subordinate appointments?—Yes, they have got sanction for certain delegations. They have generally got what they asked for.

10288. When a Deputy Commissioner goes on privilege leave, do you put in the next senior man in the district if he is fit?—Yes; the custom is to put in the next senior man, if there is any one fit, at the station itself if possible, or in the neighbourhood; not to transfer an officer from a distance.

10289. Suppose the Deputy Commissioner takes six months' leave, and there is in the district an Assistant Commissioner who is quite fit, but there is another Assistant Commissioner two or three districts away who happens to be somewhat senior to the man in the district; which would you put in?—In the case of six months' leave, probably the man at a distance.

10290. And with regard to a longer period of leave?—I should put in the man at a distance.

10292. Then if leaving for longer than six months, a man would have no guarantee that he

The Hon. Mr. W. F. Rice. would return to his district; he might be posted to somewhere else?—Yes.

11 Dec., 1907. 10293. You have spoken of the Village Act and the Village Regulations. Speaking generally, what do they lay down?—They lay down that every district is divided up into villages; a village I may explain means a village headman's jurisdiction—not only the collection of houses, but all the cultivated area round as well. The entire district is divided up into villages; the Deputy Commissioner appoints a headman to each village. The rest of the Act enumerates and defines the duties of the headman and the obligations of the villagers.

10294. You have referred in your memorandum to the village elders; have they got any legislative recognition?—No. In Lower Burma there are rural policemen, but they are different.

10295. Who are these elders?—It is just a customary way of describing respectable persons of standing in the village. There is no definite distinction between a person who is an elder and one who is not an elder.

10296. You say the headman is elected subject to the approval of the Deputy Commissioner; is that for life or for a period of years?—He remains for life if he behaves himself.

10297. And if he becomes unpopular in the village, what happens?—He is not removed merely because he becomes unpopular; he cannot be removed except for misconduct of various kinds.

10298. You spoke about a headman's remuneration by commission; was there not a recent change by which the raiyats were relieved from cesses in respect of certain village officers in Burma?—There has been no recent legislation of that sort in Burma.

10299. Was there not legislation in 1905-06?—I think not. Act IV. of 1907 has no application to Burma.

10300. You spoke of District Boards having failed; do you think it would be possible to repeat the experiment under better auspices over a smaller area—say a township?—It could be tried again, of course.

10301. The District Board failed because the people did not take sufficient interest in it?—That must be taken to be the reason; it died out.

10302. Might they not take more interest over a township area?—It is possible; it would have to be tried before anyone could say.

10303. Would you be in favour of trying it—not all over the province, but in two or three selected districts?—There is no particular call for District Boards in Burma.

10304. There used to be an officer in Burma called the thugyi?—Yes, there are some still. He is a revenue-collecting officer. There was a circle thugyi, that is a man in charge of a circle, in Lower Burma, and he collected the revenue from a group of villages.

10305. Was he generally appointed like the headman, or was he the nominee of Government?—I think he was purely a nominee of Government. We do not make the appointments now; there are a few thugyis surviving still, but as they die out the circles are broken up.

10306. When the thugyi has finally disappeared, there will be no intermediary between the myook and the village?—That is so.

10307. Referring to the Lieutenant-Governor's memorandum, you want certain power under Section 78 of the Registration Act. Have you thought about Section 14, which requires you to go up to the Government of India about the remuneration of Registration Officers?—I could not say without reference to the Act.

10308. Take the Burma Civil Courts Act; there is a section of that Act which requires you to go to the Government of India about any addition to, or alteration of, jurisdiction; do you think that that is necessary?—I see no particular objection to it.

10309. You consider the ordinary financial restrictions are insufficient?—The ordinary financial restrictions would not necessarily prevent the alteration of the jurisdiction of a Court.

10312. Then with regard to the Rs. 200 rule, there are certain department to which that does not apply—the Departments of Opium, and Salt, and Police?—Yes.

10313. You object to the restrictions under which officers who are not Statutory Natives of India, though they belong to the Subordinate Service, cannot be appointed to appointments carrying Rs. 200 or upwards per month without the sanction of the Government of India. Were not the rules framed under an Act of Parliament of 1870, which was expressly designed for the employment of natives of India?—Yes.

10314. When you are applying the rules in a way which the framers of the Act had not primarily in mind, is it not reasonable that there should be some special sanction required?—The proposal would possibly require legislation; it is merely put forward as what seems reasonable.

10315. When you come to the higher appointments, Collector or Judge, you have to go for sanction; you cannot appoint a man who is not a member of the Provincial Service, say, a native barrister, without the sanction of the Government of India; would you give the Provincial Government latitude there?—I have never had any practical experience of that; in Burma there are only four listed appointments altogether, and they are of recent creation.

10316. You want the law altered so as to give the Local Government a free hand with regard to the appointment of a Judicial Commissioner in Upper Burma. The Judicial Commissioner there corresponds to the High Court?—He has the powers of a High Court.

10317. Do provinces in which High Courts exist have the power of appointing Judges themselves?—I imagine not; the Judges of the Chief Court in Rangoon are appointed by the Government of India.

10318. Has not the general rule been that the Local Government shall not appoint the Judges of the highest Court in a province, which may have to deal with litigation in which the Government itself is concerned?—Yes; that has no doubt been the rule.

10319. As to the police; you ask for full power to make certain concessions in regard to warm clothing and compensation for losses and so forth to your military police?—Yes.

10320. Are there not also native regiments serving in the province?—Yes.

10321. Men perhaps of much the same class—Punjabis and Sikhs and so forth—as members of the police force?—Yes.

10322. If the Local Government were allowed to make these concessions to the military police, it might stir up discontent in the army, and the Government of India would be asked to grant the same concessions all round?—I imagine that that is the reason of the present restriction.

10323. You want full power to define boundaries of cantonments and revise taxes within them. Are you aware that cantonments are now under the Army Department of the Government of India?—Yes.

10324. Then the Army Department of the Government of India must surely be consulted before a Local Government starts altering the rates charged within the cantonment?—Any proposal to do so would be discussed by the Local Government with the local military authorities, and the local military authorities might obtain the concurrence of the Commander-in-Chief.

10325. But is it not as simple that the Local Government should obtain the concurrence of the Army Department?—In minor details, such as alterations of cantonment limits and taxation, there is a vast amount of correspondence at present which would be very much reduced if the Local Government had power to deal with the matter.

10326. But practically your proposal would involve the delegation of the powers of the Army Department to the Local Government?—Yes, it would amount to that, no doubt.

10327. You speak of examination rules and rewards. Do those rewards sometimes take the form of recurring allowances; a man gets so much a month extra for passing in some language?—In certain cases it is so. In so far it is an addition to salary.

10328. Therefore, it must come under the general financial rules for reference to the Government of India or to the Secretary of State?—Yes, that is so; the proposal is that the rule shall be altered.

10329. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) As to cantonments, your suggestion is to bring the cantonments sanction more on to the level of what is necessary for the municipality?—Exactly so.

10330. You do not have to go up to the Home Department for sanction to limitations of the municipality, and the suggestion is that you ought not to have to go to the Military Department about the cantonment?—Yes.

10331. Then about the military police; are they given the same terms exactly as sepoy?—Not at all; they are on a different footing altogether. I do not know what the details of service and pay of sepoy are precisely, but the Military police pay differs, and their terms of service differ. I believe they are more liberal, but I am not sure.

10332. Then as to the village elders; do you notice any tendency to their influence dying out and the headman standing alone?—No, I do not think so; they say that in the younger generation of Burmese the young men pay less attention to the words of their elders than they did in former generations; it is difficult to form an opinion.

10333. Do you see any diminution in the influence of the headman?—I do not think so.

10335. Will they not gradually die unless you do give them some recognition?—I think not; the elder men of the village will always exercise influence.

10336. Suppose that for certain duties you insisted on the headman calling together two or three of the elders, would that not help to keep up the old village system?—I think it is unnecessary; the present system really is the old village system, and there is no sign that it is dying out.

10337. You said that if a man went on furlough and somebody came from another district there would be a diminution of transfers, because the man need not go back to that district after long leave?—Would there not still be the original transfer of the person to fill his place?—Yes.

10338. And in the case that Mr. Meyer put, that might have been supplied out of the district itself?—Yes.

10339. So that there would be a small increase in transfers?—That would be so, if promotions did not go by seniority at all. I have not considered that as a practicable suggestion, because the whole principle of the Service is that there must generally be promotion by seniority.

10340. Would it be very unfair to individuals if you took the man on the spot to a far greater extent than you do at present?—I think it would.

10341. Would it be any solution if you gave the man whom you did not bring from another district half the acting allowance, dividing the acting allowance between the man who had the seniority claim and the man you would actually put in?—The man who did the work ought to get the whole of the acting allowance.

10342. Even though it is not his to claim by seniority?—It is remuneration for the more responsible work that he performs.

10343. Still, he gets the chance out of his turn?—Yes.

10344. You do not think he would be glad to do the work on a smaller allowance?—I daresay he would, but he ought to get the full allowance.

10345. Do you think that the officer whose turn it was to be transferred would be glad to avoid the transfer in consideration of half the allowance?—I think the officer would rather be transferred and get the higher appointment.

10346. I suppose the judicial system is not by any means settled; you are moving more to independent Judges?—Yes; doubtless there will be in the future separate District Judges throughout the province.

10347. You have got a grade of District Judges and a grade of Divisional Judges?—What is the dividing line in their functions? Is the District Judge a Sessions Judge?—No, the Divisional Judge is the Sessions Judge.

10348. What are the powers of the District Judge in criminal work?—In criminal work he is generally invested with special powers under Section 30 of the Criminal Procedure Code. He tries any cases not punishable with death; his powers are limited to 7 years' imprisonment; but he is not the District Magistrate.

10349. You are the Legislative Secretary?—There is no Legislative Secretary; there is an Assistant Secretary in the Legislative Department; he is a barrister, not a whole time Government servant.

10350. Should the legislation which all these various delegations of authority might cause be specific and not general?—That would be more convenient.

10351. Why do you think it would be more convenient; do you mean convenient strictly?—I regard it as a matter of legislative drafting; I am not very competent to express an opinion, but in any Statute where at present the words "With the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council," are inserted, if it is desired to amend the law, it would be better to have the provision modified in the enactment itself.

10352. Looking to all this mass of detail that you have collected together on the subject of the delegation of powers, and looking to the fact that Burma ten years hence will be a very different thing from the Burma of to-day, do you really think that specific legislation is more convenient than a general Act, which could be used from time to time as necessity arose?—I was merely referring to restrictions which are now imposed by law, not to restrictions imposed by rules of practice.

10353. But do you suppose that you have found out, and put down, and given to us now, all the modifications which you think you will want at the end of, say, five years?—No.

10354. Then you will have to have another Act five years hence. Do you think that continual legislation is more convenient?—No, if a single Act can be drafted to remove the existing restrictions, I have no objection to it in principle.

10355. The only Imperial Director-General that you come across now is the Director-General of

The Hon. Mr. W. F. Rice.

The Hon. Mr.
W. F. Rice.

11 Dec., 1907.

Criminal Intelligence?—Yes, and the Director-General of Archaeology.

10356. Does the Director-General of Archaeology do much good?—I have not personally met him.

10357. Have you a Superintendent of Archaeology here?—Yes.

10358. Do you find any particular interference by the Director-General of Archaeology?—No, I have not noticed any.

10359. As to the Director-General of Criminal Intelligence, does he come to Burma often?—He has been to Burma; he was here last year, I think.

10360. Was that the only visit?—I do not remember; I never met him personally; he has not been to Burma since I have been Chief Secretary.

10361. Have you any idea how long he stayed here?—I do not know; I did not meet him at all; I had no official dealings with him; I merely heard that he was here.

10362. I think in your last contract the Government gave you the whole of the money necessary to reorganise the police?—Yes.

10363. Have you submitted schemes to the Government of India for spending the money?—I think we have got the schemes for the reorganisation of the police complete now. I believe everything is sanctioned by the Secretary of State.

10364. Did you get it through on the lines upon which you wished to have it?—Yes, we got it through on the lines laid down by the Government of India after the report of the Police Commission.

10365. And you thought that those lines were suitable to Burma?—Yes, I am not prepared to say that they were not.

10366. (Chairman.) I understand that you are here officially to present the views of the Government of Burma?—I have been authorised to represent the Local Government except where I have limited my reply to my own personal opinions.

10367. Speaking generally, have you voiced to-day the views of the Government of Burma?—Yes, except where I have understood questions asked me as intended to elicit my own personal opinion.

10368. Do you find that your geographical position, your distance from India, is any serious let or hindrance in the way of getting decisions quickly, or does it make questions more difficult to deal with?—There is the obvious delay in getting an answer to a letter, but the geographical distance operates rather in regard to personal visits and consultations being less frequent, I think. I refer to Committees of Inquiry.

10369. Do you find that when Commissions are held in other parts of India they do not come here?—There have been Commissions that have not visited Burma at all.

10370. Have they made representations to the Government of India in regard to matters in which Burma has been interested?—Yes.

10371. What are the cases to which you refer?—The Conference on Education held at Simla in 1901; the Indian Famine Commission, 1901, the Irrigation Commission, 1901; the Police Commission, 1902 (the Police Commission visited Burma, but had no representative of Burma among its members); the Survey Committee, 1904 (this Committee visited Burma, but had no representative of Burma among its members); the Excise Committee, 1905; the Stores Committee, 1906; the Telegraph Committee, 1907 (this Committee visited Burma, but had no representative of Burma among its members). Then there is the Factory Commission now sitting. The Commission it is understood will visit Burma, but it has no representative of Burma among its members.

10372. Do you find that a long time elapses before you get replies from the Government of India to your letters and queries?—The time varies with the intricacy of the subject. We get replies to ordinary references on simple matters with reasonable rapidity.

10373. You have nothing to complain of in regard to that?—No. When we require an early answer we generally ask for a reply by telegram, which I think, we invariably get if we ask for it.

10374. Do you find that, besides the occasion of the Educational Conference to which you have referred, occasions have arisen when the Government of India left you out and consulted the other provincial Governments?—I believe that that has happened in certain excise and revenue matters.

10375. You point out that, with regard to all the inquiries of which you have given us particulars, Burma was not treated exactly on the same footing as the other provinces?—Yes, in that it had no representative on the Commission or Committee.

10376. Is that caused by the fact that your population is so different from that of the rest of India, or is it caused by your distance from the rest of India, or both?—I think that any answer that I could give would be rather conjecture than anything else, because it was the Government of India who appointed the Commission or Committee in each case.

10377. But how would it strike you?—I think that owing to our geographical position here, and the fact that the race inhabiting the province is different, Burma has been rather left out of consideration.

10378. Has the Lieutenant-Governor himself an office in the Secretariat here?—No, his work is done at Government House.

(The witness withdrew.)

Mr. G. F. ARNOLD was called and examined.

Mr. G. F.
Arnold.

11 Dec., 1907.

10379. (Chairman.) You are Financial and Revenue Secretary to the Government of Burma?—Yes. With the exception of a little under eight months in the Legislative Department of the Government of India my fourteen years' service have been spent in Burma.

As Revenue Secretary I am concerned with land revenue, excise, customs, forests, finance, mining, agriculture, salt, co-operative credit societies, town lands, disposal of land, telegraphs, post offices, railways (to a slight extent), irrigation, kheddahs, treasuries, district and district cess funds, famine, defalcations, stores, ferries, stamps, income-tax, trade generally, fisheries, art, printing and stationery, veterinary, and economic products.

I do not desire that Burma should be separated from India and placed direct under the Colonial Office. But I do think that the connection of Burma with India is in many ways detrimental to her as it now exists. I see no reason, however, why that should be so, as far as the Government of India is concerned, if that Government would alter their views towards Burma in certain points and would truly recognize the fact that Burma is a country to which the majority of the ideas prevalent in other provinces of the Indian Empire are unsuited, because the conditions here are so entirely different. The Burmans are racially and by religion so different from any class of native of India, and all classes seem to come over to Burma now, that there is no a priori reason why institutions that succeed in India should do so in Burma. The Burmans approach nearer to the Chinese, with whom they have certainly more affinity. The people with whom the Burmese women intermarry are the Chinese, and the mixed race which results does not differ greatly from the pure Burman race. Whereas the intermingling of Burmans and natives of India produces a degraded and demoralized race.

To the resident of Burma it is not a pleasing sight to see the Burmese, who are a superior race, displaced by the indigent population of India, and Rangoon filled with Chittagonian beggars.

The Government of Burma has not, so far as I know, ever shown any anxiety or wish to invite to their shores the coolie population of India. Such emigration schemes as there have been have arisen from the desire of the Government of India to get rid of their surplus population in India by throwing it on to Burma or from proposals of Public Works Officers who have come from India to import Indian labour to execute their works cheaply. The merchants of Rangoon, Moulmein, Bassein and Akyab, i.e., the ports generally, have also welcomed the advent of the Tamil, Telugu and Koringhi coolies, because cheap labour in their mills has enabled them to export more rice and timber to Europe; but they have never looked at the problem of Government in Burma from any but an entirely economic standpoint. As a matter of fact the uneducated Indian cooly, who has no intelligence and will work for a few pice and do as he is told, suits the English merchant of Rangoon far better than the more independent and educated Burman, who will only work for what he considers a wage that compensates him and when he cannot get other employment more to his liking.

Thus the native of India has come into the country, and his existence there is now made the plea for governing Burma to a certain extent on lines which have been laid down for India. The Burman, for example, by his religion is forbidden to touch spirits and distilled liquors. He was at one time an abstainer from alcoholic beverages. The Madrassi cooly on the other hand is inclined to drunkenness, and to supply his wants liquor shops have had to be started all over Burma. The Burman, however, is quick to copy other races, and unfortunately imitates their vices rather than their virtues. The liquor shops created for drunken Madrassi coolies have been the means of demoralizing the Burman youths, and the time when they would refuse to drink these liquors is now gone.

The Government of India cannot view the matter in the sympathetic manner so far as the Burman's interests are concerned, which is the habitual attitude of the Local Government. Almost every officer who comes from the outset to Burma and goes among the people and talks to them and learns to understand their ways, at once recognises that he has found here a superior race endowed with qualities which are even lacking in many of his own countrymen. The Government of India inevitably must look at the matter entirely differently. As the head of an Empire which consists of a large number of provinces and with an immense population, it must consider the interests of that population as a whole. It must do the best it can for the sum total of those which it governs. Its officers do not know Burma; they have never served here, until very recently; indeed there was no instance of an officer from Burma being ever placed in the Government of India in a position in which his views could have the slightest influence on their policy. It follows that the sympathy which springs from personal knowledge of a race has always been entirely absent from the Councils of the Government of India. The Government of India has never been anything but a purely impersonal one so far as Burma and the Burman are concerned. To govern the Burman however on impersonal lines is a method which would appear to anyone who knows the country to court failure. The Burman, in whatever capacity he is to come in contact with the European, must know the latter personally and be able to speak to him. An officer who is unable to speak Burmese can never succeed in any administrative post in Burma. The Burmans will not come near him or attempt to acquaint him with their wants and ideas. An assistant in a business firm who can talk Burmese and go among them individually is well known to be of far more assistance to that firm than an assistant who does not. An officer who only knows Hindustani cannot get a Burman servant to stay with him. The Postal, Telegraph, Survey, Military Police, Accounts Departments, and to a great extent the Public Works Department, which consist mainly of officers who do not know Burmese, are altogether out of touch with the people and hardly come across them at all. The officers of these departments come and go without gaining any knowledge of the Burman and rarely speak of him in appreciative terms.

It is indeed hardly to be expected that a personal form of Government could be obtained from India in the circumstances noted above, where lack of personal knowledge and counter interests combine to make it impossible. I think, however, that it might be made less impossible if the Government of India would regard the proposals of the Local Government more as sui generis, and not to be weighed and tested by comparison with institutions in other provinces; if they would listen more to the advice of this Government and take steps to have some officers who know Burma at headquarters and on the Committees and Commissions which are appointed from time to time to investigate matters of policy. So far, however, from doing this they appear to exclude Burma officers from all part in their Councils. Until the recent appointment of the present Home Member, no one from Burma had ever served on the Indian Council nor even acted as a Secretary in any Department of the Government of India. No one from Burma is ever appointed to be on the Committees of investigation, and these Committees do not often visit Burma at all. The Government of India, however, seem to consider that the way to govern Burma is to place officers of Indian experience in the highest appointments here. For many years an officer was regularly sent over from Bombay to fill the appointment of Judicial Commissioner of Lower Burma, and the remonstrance of this Government at last prevailed only about ten years ago, although there had been qualified men who knew Burma for years in this province. Similarly, the office of Financial Commissioner was regularly filled until five years ago by officers taken from one of the Indian provinces, while the Head of the Public Works Department, the Medical Department, and the Education Department has always been so appointed and still is so. Finally, the most important post, viz., the Head of the Province, has habitually been taken from India time after time, and it is only in the case of the present Lieutenant-Governor that Burma has been allowed to have as its ruler a man who knew the country and the people after a service of any length here.

I think, therefore, that the present relations of the Burma Government with the Government of India could be greatly improved if more officers from Burma were placed in positions in which they could personally influence the policy of the Government of India and be personally consulted as advisers. In other respects these relations would be improved if a less number of questions had to be referred to the Government of India and the Secretary of State. A communication to the Government of India of minor importance usually does not receive a reply much under six months; one of more importance takes frequently a year to obtain an answer, while matters which have to be referred to the Secretary of State are sometimes protracted, if they are of any magnitude, to nearly 18 months.

In financial matters, I am in favour of dealing with lump sums in every case. The Local Government should be allowed to arrange its financial affairs free from any control of the Government of India on its guaranteeing to pay a fixed contribution to the Government of India from year to year. That contribution should represent a fair debit on account of imperial charges, and I see no reason why it should be particularly divided up into heads as is now done when framing the provincial contract. The Local Government should then, in its turn, assign to each department under it a lump sum calculated to be sufficient for its needs for the year, and should allow the departments to make the best use of the money they can. The Head of each Department should similarly give to each District Officer or Divisional Officer under him a lump assignment to be spent according to that officer's discretion, who would only have to show how he had spent it at the end of the year. It should never be necessary for him to ask sanction for any reappropriation during the year, or to refer to any higher authority for sanction to expenditure unless he had exceeded his total grant. To provide for such excesses, each Head of a Department should keep a small reserve fund, and similarly the Local Government should retain as a reserve such an amount as is found by experience to be required for distribution to the various departments over and above their original lump sum grant. In short, the scheme would be on the same lines as what is known in the Accounts Department as the system of contract contingencies for District Officers, but on a much wider and larger scale.

If, however, the present system is to continue, it should be improved on the following lines:—

It is unnecessary that all the details of the provincial budget should be submitted to the Government of India in the present way. I think there should be a system by which the Local Government should arrange its budget subject only to certain principles, e.g., that it should have a closing balance for the province of a certain minimum amount, and that it should observe the declared proportions in its receipts between provincial and imperial. The Accountant-General is practically the officer of the Government of India who is here to watch that the province does not become insolvent, and so long as that is ensured there is no reason why the Government of India should seek to control the estimate of receipts of revenue or of the expenditure which the Local Government considers should be incurred.

The advantage of a provincial contract should be that the necessary control is established once for all by the limits entered in the contract, and it should be unnecessary that all the details should be annually examined and controlled by the Finance Department of the Government of India, and the latest actual returns telegraphed and so forth at the conclusion of the year. Apart from the question of controlling the budget, a system which looks merely to details and units such as is contained in the Civil Service Regulations, and the Civil Account Code, gives an enormous amount of unnecessary work. I mean, for example, that instead of fixing a limit of expenditure in, say, 2,000 or 3,000 separate cases, in all of which the Local Government cannot go beyond the sums laid down without obtaining the sanction of the Government of India or the Secretary of State, in cases in which no recurring obligations will be involved, the Local Government should be allowed to sanction expenditure until their total expenditure has approached or exceeded a certain grant total. To take an example, the Local Government cannot sanction at any one time items of capital expenditure exceeding Rs. 10,000 under Article 160 (iii.) of the Forest Department Code. It can, however, apply to the Government of India for sanction to the expenditure of amounts in excess of this any number of times in a year. Say that it does so on ten occasions and obtains sanction to sums whose total amounts to Rs. 2,00,000. These ten applications for sanction would be unnecessary if it were simply laid down that, when a Local Government has spent in all, on such capital expenditure, a total sum of Rs. 2,00,000 in one year, it must explain this total expenditure before it can spend more on such objects in that year. It is possible also that a similar system might be similarly applied in cases of sanction of salaries and pensions; but as these charges would be recurring, the effect of such sanctions would require more watching.

Because the receipts under one head are classed as wholly imperial or half imperial, that is no reason why the power of the Local Government should be wholly or proportionately curtailed as regards expenditure connected with those heads. For example, "Customs" is an imperial head, but it is quite inappropriate that the Government of India should control the Subordinate Customs Service of the province, and that the Local Government should not be able to sanction the appointment of an appraiser or a preventive officer when required. Here again this would be avoided by dealing with totals rather than items, and a system might be devised by which the Local Government were only required to ask for sanction when it had exceeded in the year a total expenditure (to be fixed) on customs objects. I would advocate amendments of Articles 278 and 278A of the Civil Account Code, with this object. The sanction of the Local Government should not be needed to any re-appropriations. As the Local Government always acts on the Accountant-General's report in such cases, I see no reason why the Accountant-General should not sanction such re-appropriations himself. The Local Government can convey to him information from time to time as to sources from which re-appropriations can conveniently be made, when they become aware that some expenditure which has been provided for in the budget is not likely to be incurred within the year.

I think there should be no such thing as lapses. Particularly in the case of the administration of District and District Cess Funds, it is extremely inconvenient to lose the provision, or what is unspent of it, for Public Works on March 31st. There is no advantage or reason that I can see why an unspent balance should go into a closing balance of the fund and be locked up for a whole year, when it is wanted immediately for the continuance of a work.

Unless the Local Governments are entirely freed from the financial control of the Government of India, I am not in favour of giving Local Governments borrowing powers, as I do not think it is necessary if provincial contracts are framed on sufficiently liberal lines. It will also introduce complications with reference to the times at which such loans, and other loans, are to be floated.

I see no reason to restrict Local Governments to the creation of appointments the salaries and allowances of which are limited combined to Rs. 250 per mensem. Local Governments should have full power to sanction local allowances in localities which are expensive and unhealthy to live in, and also to give enhanced travelling allowances in districts and tracts where travelling is difficult and expensive. Both local allowances and all such special allowances should be considered as apart from the permanent salary, and it should be within the powers of the Local Government to grant them whether their condition will or will not have the effect of raising the total emoluments above a certain figure.

No native of India should be considered to have any claim to an appointment in Burma, and that so far as this country is concerned the expression "native of Burma" should be substituted for those of "native of India," "statutory native," &c. Placing natives of India in appointments in Burma has, in my opinion, a disastrous effect on the country and the people, and placing them in educational posts to teach Burmans is simply madness.

What is wanted in Burma is to give the Local Government larger administrative powers, but to leave it to that Government to follow out a policy which it will devise for itself as suited to Burma. Burma being a separate country, it cannot be successfully fitted into a general scheme which includes the other provinces of India. In particular, if any real good is to be done in preventing the spread of the opium habit among the Burmans, the Local Government should be given a free hand to follow out its own policy on this matter. This is certainly not done at present. I also think that it should be left entirely free to shape its own policy with reference to education and to carry it out through the agency of officers who have served in Burma and know the people. The management of its police is also a matter in which it should be left uncontrolled. The conditions in Burma are, further, not those which lend it to an excise administration on the lines of those which appear to have been recently investigated in India by the Excise Committee. As regards the administration of the forests in Burma, the Local Government have been allowed a free hand. Burma should, in my opinion, be a self-contained province. It should have its own Medical and Veterinary Training Schools, and should not have to send Burman students to Calcutta and Madras to study these subjects.

There is no question, I think, that the influence of the Government of India is in the direction of excessive uniformity. Its object seems to be to introduce into Burma alien notions taken from Indian provinces. The argument which is so frequently used to Burma by the Government of India, "you cannot have this or that because no other province in India has it," should be definitely recognised as of no force whatever and should cease to be put forward in the future.

It seems to me inevitable that a department like the Finance Department is bound to regard questions primarily with a view to the effect which the measure will have as regards increasing or decreasing the revenues of the country. I have always thought it unreasonable of a department which is merely consulted on a question to resent it, if their advice is not taken. The Finance Department, however, is particularly strong in this respect, because they are, in a way, as intimately concerned with any question which involves expenditure as the other department whose special subject it is.

There was at one time a strong impression in Burma that too great a portion of the revenues of this province was taken by India. An examination of the subject was made at that time by the Accountant-General under the orders of the Lieutenant-Governor, and the result was held to show that Burma did not pay an undue contribution to the imperial revenues. I think that the decision regarding the allotment for Public Works in the present settlement is to be regretted, and particularly when it is justified by the appeal to what goes on in the other provinces of the Indian Empire.

I would next refer to a doctrine which is current in the Irrigation Department, that an irrigation work should not be undertaken by the Public Works Department unless it is shown that it will pay, or, in some cases, will come up to a certain financial standard. Even those works which are classed as "protective" as contrasted with those which are classed as "productive" have to satisfy a certain financial test which has reference not only to their earning capacity, which is below the standard fixed as remunerative, but to losses which are incurred in seasons of scarcity to Government and the expenditure required in famine relief. An example of the application of this principle recently came to my notice when it was found necessary to classify canals in Burma into "major" and "minor" for the purposes of the Burma Canal Act, 1905. There were in the dry zone of Burma a number of tanks and small canals which originally had been made by the Burmans themselves, and some of which had been maintained by them, while others had been maintained in recent years by the Public Works Department. It is well known that irrigation in most parts of the dry zone of Burma is precarious and therefore apt to be neglected by the Burmans, but there is no question of its utility when it is attended to in earnest and by skilled workmen. It would therefore seem preferable that doubtful irrigation works of this class should be handed over to the Public Works Department, in order to ensure that they should not be abandoned or fall into disrepair and the lands watered from them pass out of cultivation. When reporting, however, which canals should be assigned to the class "major," and which should be assigned to the class "minor," which latter class it was proposed should be handed over entirely to the cultivators to look after for themselves, the Public Works Department officers soon showed that they held no such view. Their test in each case was whether the work would pay or not.

The same spirit is also displayed in cases in which the Irrigation Department have assumed charge of a canal and have a voice in the assessment of the land revenue or water-rates levied. In the year 1900 I was for a short time in charge of the Kyaukse district, one of the irrigated districts in Burma, and the Chief Engineer in the Irrigation Department was the present Inspector-General of Irrigation. He frequently pressed for reclassification of the irrigated lands with a view to placing them in the classes in which they would be subject to land revenue at the highest rates, merely, as far as I could see, to increase the credit to the Irrigation Department and so prove that the canal had been a paying work.

In my opinion the Irrigation Department are there to make irrigation works where they are most needed for the welfare of the people. The considerations which should guide them in deciding whether a work should be executed or not, are whether it is needed, or to what extent it is needed; and whether it is likely to be successful, not in producing a remunerative return, but in providing the quantity of water required to enable the people to cultivate. Most absurd controversies arise and most unnecessary calculations are called for over the matter of Irrigation credits. It should be absolutely immaterial whether the land revenue which results from the cultivation of land irrigated from a canal is shown in the accounts under the head of "land revenue" or under the head of "irrigation" or "water-rate." The attempt to split up these receipts into proportions which are supposed to represent the value of the water as apart from the land, and which proportions in the end are always arbitrarily fixed, merely entails much useless and unnecessary labour on hard-worked officials.

I would also cite the system on which the Postal and Telegraph Departments conduct their work. The system of furnishing guarantees when telegraph offices are opened springs from a wrong view of what the function of such departments should be. Their work should be to assist the administration of the country, and they should exist for that object wherever they are needed regardless of whether their receipts cover the expenditure on them or not. In the case of the Postal Department in Burma it is particularly inconvenient to have this theory that a post office must pay for itself put forward, because so many of the steamer lines to which the Local Government formerly paid a subsidy are established both for the conveyance of mails and also for administrative reasons. Formerly, when these subsidies were paid wholly or partly from provincial funds and were debited to the head of "15 Post Office," no difficulty was experienced. The Local Government could subsidise these lines to the extent required to keep them in existence, merely receiving a contribution from the Postal Department for what they chose to assess as the postal value of the line. Now, however, it was otherwise. In November 1906 the whole of this expenditure was imperialised and it was ordered that no postal expenditure whatever should be incurred from Provincial revenues. In consequence the Local Government now has to look to the Postal Department to subsidise lines which are mainly required for administrative purposes. The Postal Department, however, is inclined to pay only what they consider the postal value of the line.

I think the proper sphere of Directors and Inspectors-General should consist in advising and not in controlling the officers who are actually working in the various provinces. They should certainly abstain from interference with the movements and work of the latter officers, but should come at intervals and make acquaintance with those officers, give them and the Local Governments the benefit of their experience by suggestion, not by orders, and should be at liberty to raise general questions relating to the subjects with which they deal at any time. On such questions they should invite the opinions of the local officers and when they have considered them advise the Government of India as to what they think is required, or, if the matter is one with which they think the Government of India should not be troubled, acquaint the Local Governments or provincial Heads of Department with their conclusions and leave them to make such use of their suggestions as the latter think fit. I would select as a concrete instance of an officer whose attitude seems to me a very proper one, the Inspector-General of Forests. I know of no instance in which the Inspector-General of Forests has attempted to force on Burma suggestions unsuited to the province, and hence it is that his advice is valued. Similarly, he is remarkably free from any desire to interfere in Burma.

As a concrete instance of an officer whose attitude I do not consider proper with reference to the Local Government, I would give the present Director-General of the Geological Survey of India. I consider that the action of the Director of Geological Survey has certainly tended to reduce the influence of the advice and recommendations of the Local Government with the Government of India in mining matters. I think that the Commerce and Industry Department of the Government of India look to the Director of Geological Survey to advise them not merely on geological questions, but on commercial and administrative ones, and that in these matters they put him in the place which the Local Government ought to occupy. He may or may not be an authority on companies and syndicates, and the financial aspects of mining, but it seems to me clear that he has become an adviser on such matters to the Government of India and does not confine himself to scientific matters sufficiently. In the distribution of the oil-fields the Local Government is strictly controlled by the Commerce and Industry Department of the Government of India.

One would imagine that inasmuch as Burma is perhaps the most undeveloped province of the Indian Empire, she would benefit most of all by opportunities of learning the results of the experience of the older provinces. The drawback, however, in the case of Burma is that the conditions here are apparently so different from those which prevail in India that proposals based on Indian experience are not of much value. Unless, therefore, these Heads of Imperial Departments have at some time in their service been stationed in Burma, they do not advise successfully when attempting to improve the administration here. I think it, however, not unlikely that the experience of the Inspector-General of Irrigation will be useful in imparting ideas taken from the provinces of Upper India, in which more attention is necessarily devoted to irrigation than Burma, as it is more liable to famine. On the other hand, I feel sure that education in Burma would have been much more successful if no officer connected with India had ever been placed in charge of it. There was an excellent indigenous system in Burma that only required to be encouraged and possibly adapted in some respects to produce satisfactory results. I regard education in Burma as a lamentable and melancholy failure due in a large measure to the fact that the Department was presided over for years by an officer who came from Bengal, who is reported to have known the native of India thoroughly, but who did not know the Burmans or the conditions of Burma. I do not think it very likely that periodical conferences between provincial Heads of Departments would benefit Burma. My impression is that each person wishes to press the system in force in his own province, because he does not really understand any other, and he is not likely to be convinced by a few hours' conversation, with persons who come from elsewhere. Further, I do not think it a promising method of administration to be frequently making comparisons with other administrations in order to see what you can alter. Such a method leads to frequent changes, purely to secure efficiency, but this is not what the Burman wants, nor, I believe, any Eastern race.

I think if the Local Government were left to itself it would adopt very little in the way of reform taken from other provinces, and I do not think the administration would suffer on that account. I cannot at the present time call to mind instances in which reforms have been introduced from other provinces except the introduction into our liquor administration of the contract distillery system, which comes, I understand, from Madras. I am doubtful, however, whether it was really required.

I think that latterly, particularly in the last few years, there has been an unusual activity on the part of the Government of India in the way of suggesting measures to Local Governments.

The procedure is generally first to appoint a Committee and then to consider the Committee's report and frame Resolutions, copies of which are sent round to Local Governments who are then called on to report how far they have adopted, or are prepared to adopt, the suggestions contained in these Resolutions. The cases which I have particularly in mind at the present time are the Resolutions issued in the Revenue and Agricultural Department of the Government of India on the report of the Irrigation Commission held a few years ago, and the Resolutions issued in the Finance Department on the report of the Excise Committee which concluded its sittings about two years ago. In neither of these cases, however, was anyone in Burma invited to be on the Committee, nor did the Committee visit Burma. In consequence Burma has derived practically no benefit from the suggestions in these Resolutions. A very large part of the Resolutions connected with the Irrigation Committee are connected with subjects like private irrigation from wells, which seems to be common in India, but does not exist in Burma. Suggestions for sub-soil surveys, well-boring in the arid zones, and the like, are made. But in Burma there is no irrigation from private wells for cultivation purposes, and the geographical strata of the dry zone have been examined, and it has been concluded that no well-boring there is likely to be successful in finding water at a depth at which it can be used. In consequence the suggestions in these Resolutions are practically barren as regards Burma, and the only effect of them is to cause much useless consultation of officers resulting in negative reports. If, instead of calling for these reports, the Government of India had left it to the Local Government to decide what action could usefully be taken on the suggestions in their Resolutions, much profitless enquiry would have been saved. As it is, about five or six Resolutions on irrigation subjects and agricultural loans for irrigation and other purposes have been issued calling for reports in each case on subjects which have no application to Burma. Similar remarks apply in great measure to the Resolutions issued by the Finance Department on the subject of Excise as a consequence of the investigations of the Excise Committee. These have dealt with the Excise Committee's report, chapter by chapter, and have in many cases called on the Local Governments to report the action taken by them. In Burma, however, the conditions are so different from those enquired into by the Excise Committee that it is difficult to furnish such reports, and the prevailing impression received from a perusal of the Resolutions is that they were not called for so far as Burma is concerned. Indeed, the contract distillery system which is being introduced experimentally into some portions of Burma is simply accepted in deference to the wishes of the Government of India, and because apparently it has had some success in Madras. That it is really required in Burma or that anything was particularly wrong with the outstill system that was in existence before, seems at least doubtful.

Other instances in which perhaps it might be said that the Government of India have initiated reforms are in the matter of famine and settlements. In Burma, however, there is no serious prospect of a famine; even in the dry zone when there is some scarcity it could always be relieved by the local officers with local works or spontaneously by the temporary emigration of the population to Lower Burma. All the elaborate arrangements connected with famines in India and the urgent and other reports to be submitted are really quite uncalled for here, and the officers of this province much resent having to supply them, because they feel that they are simply being worried by a system which may be necessary in India but is quite superfluous here. While throughout the province District Officers are solemnly called on to keep up and revise, from time to time, programmes of famine works in localities where there is a steady rainfall from year to year of 90 or 100 inches.

In the matter of settlements it may perhaps be claimed that the Government of India have instructed this province in the principles of equitable assessments and introduced reforms into the methods of calculating the proposed land revenue rates. I cannot, however, myself see that the Government of India have really assisted the Government of Burma much in this respect. There have been interminable discussions as to the principles on which to assess rates, which are represented by two bound up volumes of published settlement papers and other communications subsequent to these. But the Government of Burma seems nowhere nearer deciding on what is a fair standard than it was 15 years ago, and the latest communications on the subject contain a proposal to re-examine the matter and begin again the weary discussion which it was thought had at last found a termination in the adoption of the standard of one-fourth of the net produce. The Government of Burma, I believe, are quite satisfied that on the materials before them at the conclusion of a settlement they can fix rates which will be such as the people can pay without hardship. Should excessive rates happen to be assessed on any occasion, the District Officers would at once become aware of the fact and would propose that the rates should be lowered. There appears to me to be no reason why the Government of India should be continuously challenging the principles on which these rates are assessed and re-examining the grounds on which they are based, and so far from introducing any reforms of value in this field, the results of their efforts to do so have merely been to induce uncertainty and confusion.

I believe that the Agricultural Department in Burma has been introduced at the suggestion of the Government of India rather than of the Local Government, and that this institution has been copied from similar departments previously existing in India. Similarly, the creation of co-operative credit societies in Burma and of the post of Registrar of these societies has, I think, been due to the initiative of the Government of India, and has had good results. The attempt to create District Boards was made years ago, at the time I think when Sir Charles Bernard was Chief Commissioner of Burma, entirely at the suggestion of the Government of India. The system, however, was quite unsuited to Burma and they gradually died out. I am not aware that they ever did any useful work. Another example of an administrative reform due to the Government of India is the Imperial Customs Service. Unless I am mistaken this was forced on them by complaints of the mercantile communities of the frequent changes in the officers who presided over the customs. The change is no doubt an improvement, and the customs will be better administered.

The Government of India have refused to grant the request for a local University in Burma, I am not qualified to say whether the request was justified or not, but it is a common opinion, in which I share, that the standards and examination tests of the Calcutta University, which are made the qualifications for entry into the Public Service in Burma, are totally unsuited for the Burmans.

I would curtail the right of appeal to the Government of India now granted to the officers of Government against orders affecting them personally, by refusing it to any one whose salary did not exceed Rs. 250 per mensem. This, of course, is an arbitrary limit, suggested because that is the limit up to which the Local Government can create posts. It is certainly somewhat of a scandal the time which is now taken up by writing out accounts of cases, précis, etc., in which the memorialist has already had at least two appeals, viz., to the Head of his Department and to the Local Government. I would also abolish the rule that memorials which ask for clemency should invariably be sent on. This is in many cases taken advantage of really to dispute the correctness of the decision as regards the facts. I would not curtail the right of appeal to the Government of India in administrative matters, where it is allowed by law or rules having the force of law, i.e., appeals presented by non-officials. I would curtail it in other cases. I would curtail the right of appeal to the Local Government by refusing it to Non-Gazetted Officers, subject to the proviso that every public servant should be allowed one appeal from the authority which passed the order of which he complains and no more. In administrative matters I would only allow appeals to the Local Government which are granted by law or by a rule having the force of law. I do not think it would be of any use to prescribe that an order appealed against must be accompanied by a certificate from the authority passing the order.

I find that in 1902 twenty-one returns were discontinued altogether, six were delegated to lower authority, and four were prescribed for submission at longer intervals. Since 1902 the Government of India and the Local Government have each prescribed eighteen additional reports and returns. This Government also receives printed statements from the Director-General of Commercial Intelligence on various subjects with requests to fill in the latest figures: these are over and above the periodical returns. These figures appear in the various statistical publications of the Government of India and are doubtless necessary. At the same time, my opinion is that the creation of the office of Director-General of Commercial Intelligence has tended to increase the amount of statistical information called for from the Local Government. I am unable to say whether these additional returns and calls for information were due to the initiative of the Secretary of State or Government of India.

I think that Executive Officers have not sufficient opportunities for personal contact with the people. This is on account of the enormous amount of office work demanded from them. This office work arises very largely from the specialization of work in higher circles. For example, the creation of special posts, such as Excise Commissioner, Registrar Co-operative Credit Societies, Director of Agriculture, &c., means that you have a number of men enquiring their whole time into special branches of the Administration. These men ask for much information from Deputy Commissioners, and they also make a number of proposals on which they ask Deputy Commissioners to state their opinion. When any measures are introduced on account of their exertions, these practically have to be carried out through the agency of the Deputy Commissioner. Similarly, the creation of these various Committees, such as the Excise Committee, eventually entails extra work on Deputy Commissioners, who are asked to report on the practicability of the Committee's proposals and as to whether defects, reported to have been found by the Committee, exist in their districts, &c. The opium administration is an example of a case which has very largely increased the work of Deputy Commissioners, and it seems likely that excise administration will do the same.

I think that Executive Officers on the whole have a good knowledge of the vernacular, although Burmese is a decidedly difficult language to acquire. This is because the Burmese are an attractive people to have to do with, and officers like to converse with them. It is noticeable that unless officers have served in India they have a very limited knowledge of Hindustani, although there are many natives of India in Burma.

Increase in the administrative staff is required in almost all Lower Burma Districts. I think a class of officers dealing with revenue matters only, like Deputy Collectors in Bengal and Madras, should be created in Burma. At present special myooks (township officers) and various Revenue Officers are frequently appointed for terms of six months, a year, &c., to do work which should be done by the permanent staff, if they had the time.

Transfers are not unnecessarily frequent. They arise usually from officers taking leave, which cannot be avoided owing to the trying climate of Burma and the enormous amount of work to be done.

10380. You hold the view that the connection of Burma with India is, in many ways, detrimental to Burma?—I should say detrimental to the Burmese people.

10381. What are the grounds upon which you hold that view?—The Burmese are a particularly well-endowed race, and especially superior to the other races I have met. We get a large number of different kinds of races in Burma. But the Burmese are being gradually pushed out of things. They are people who enjoy life as much as any race I have ever met, and they enjoy it in a very moral way. If the result of the English coming to the country is that these people are to be gradually pushed out and supplemented by another race, which leads an inferior kind of life altogether, that is rather a calamity. The Burmese are getting pushed out through their meeting with other races, and at the same time the connection with the Government of India, unless the Government are carefully advised about matters that are special to Burma, tends to the country being administered much in the same way as are the different provinces of India, and that does not suit the Burmese at all. Had Government started some years ago on lines based on the customs of the country, the Burmese would have been much happier.

10382. You think all this has re-acted adversely upon the Burmese?—Yes. Then also the intermixture of races would have come from the other side if it had not been for the fact of the connection with India; the Chinese would have come in where the natives of India have come in, and the admixture of races that would have resulted from the connection of the Chinese and Burmese would have been a much better one than the admixture of Burmese and Indians.

10383. If Burma were rendered independent of India, would that tend towards stopping the influx of Indians into Burma, or would it in any way increase the admixture of the Chinese with the Burmese race?—The natives of India have been encouraged to come over here because of the connection with the Government of India.

10384. But suppose the union of India and Burma was not continued, would the tendency which you have brought to our notice cease, facts being as they are to-day?—The natives of India would not come as part of a scheme of emigration. They have come in some cases as part of a scheme of emigration which has been started from the Indian side.

10385. Do you suggest that there have been organised schemes by the Government of India to introduce Indian coolies into this country?—Yes, and certain Steamship Companies have been subsidised to bring coolies over.

10386. Do they settle here permanently?—In some cases they do, in some cases not.

10387. That has been a considerable detriment, and has stopped the natural development of the Burmese?—The Burman is developed now; he is in a high state of development.

10388. Then I will say, stopped the further development of the Burman; or has he attained to the highest level of civilization?—He has not attained the highest level, but he has attained a very high degree of development, and it is not increased by his connection with the natives of India.

10389. Has this difference between the two races caused the Government of India to act in a manner which has been prejudicial to the Government of Burma?—The Government of India have introduced a number of things that were fitted more for the natives of India than for the natives of Burma.

10390. Have they introduced and forced upon the Government of Burma a certain uniform practice derived from their experience in India, which has crowded the Burmese out of Government employment, or driven them out of trade, or acted generally adversely to their interests?—The qualifications required for the Public Service out here, that is to say the examinations, are not suited to the Burmese, and these have been borrowed from India. The standards that are set are those now prevalent in the Calcutta University; and in order to obtain certain appointments in the Government the Burmans have to pass those examinations.

10391. May it not be that the rules for examination and employment in Government service are not really indigenous to either country, but are due to pressure from without?—But I suppose that they have been adopted in the Calcutta University on the experience of people who have known the people over here, and have thought that they were suited to them.

10392. You tell us that the Burman is particularly susceptible to the use of his own language?—That is so.

10393. He does not learn English in the way that the Bengali does?—No, not nearly so many of them, but those who do learn it do not learn it badly.

10394. Is that due to their reluctance or inability to learn it, or is it because schools have only been more or less recently established in the country?—Previously we used to do a great deal of work in the vernacular in Burmese, but latterly, as work has increased, it has been almost necessary for the Burmese, if they are to get to any high posts, to know English. It was a long time before we could get English-speaking Burmese, except just a few who were well-to-do and who had been put into these colleges—some of them indeed had been sent home.

10395. Is it the pressure of work that has necessitated the use of English? May we not say that the use of English has necessitated the employment of people who speak English, and the people who speak English are natives of India and not Burmese?—Yes; there are more Indians who know English than English-knowing Burmese in Government employment here.

10396. Has there been a falling off in the knowledge of the Burmese language by British officers?—No. I think the knowledge of Burmese amongst European officers is very good. I have been out only 14 years, and I think it is as good as it was when I came out.

10397. You urge that the Government in Burma ought not to be weighed and tested by comparison with institutions in other provinces?—That is done to excess. It is a very difficult thing to do successfully, because the conditions of Burma are so totally different from those of India.

10398. Have you served outside Burma?—I was for eight months in the Secretariat of the Government of India in the Legislative Department.

10399. During the time you were there was there any disposition to study the special requirements of Burma?—It was not a department that gave me much opportunity of judging. All the work that I had to deal with was on the legal side, and in looking over the papers and Bills that came up, it was pretty clear that the necessities of Burma were not understood.

10400. Were the matters to which you refer really of importance, or merely matters of minor detail?—One point I remember was rather immaterial, still it was a suggestion to put something in a Bill to provide against a matter which did not exist in Burma at all; that was quite unnecessary for Burma.

10401. Was that a Bill specially for Burma?—It was a Bill that came up from Burma, and the suggestion made by the Government of India was to add something which was not in the Bill. The reason it was not in the Bill was that there was nothing in Burma to provide against in connection with the subject matter of that Bill.

10402. Would that have been due to carelessness in the Legislative Department, or to real lack of opportunity of knowing what the requirements of Burma were?—It had nothing to do with the Legislative Department; it was the Revenue and Agricultural Department which made the suggestion; the Legislative Department was merely asked to see that it was put in the right form.

10403. You suggest to us that not only is the Government of India very ignorant—necessarily ignorant—of the conditions of life in Burma, but that they did not, until quite recently, practically ever employ members of the Civil Service in Burma in important positions in the Government of India Secretariat?—That is so.

10404. It is 20 years, roughly speaking, since the annexation of Burma?—The annexation of Upper Burma was in 1885.

10405. Until the annexation of Upper Burma was the number of Civilians in Burma small?—I cannot tell you that, because Civilians were not employed quite so much; the additions that were made on account of the annexation were rather taken from outside sources; they wanted men quickly.

10406. Were they taken from the Indian Army?—From the Indian Army, and selected men from other departments. Since then the number of Civilians has been gradually recruited from year to year.

10407. Until the Civilian service of Burma has got a certain age, would it not be impossible to put its officers into the higher places?—Into the highest places, yes.

10408. Then it may have been due to that fact that there were not any senior officers until quite recently, to be put into the higher places?—But there have been a number of Civilians, since I came out, who have retired after over 20 years' service, and who have never been offered a post.

10409. Now, however, the Government of India have made a new departure?—They have appointed one man to be Home Member of Council.

10410. Would it not be impossible to take for the Secretariat at Simla or Calcutta members in turn (irrespective of personal ability and worth) from each of the provinces?—I think it is possible; of course they might not be able to find in the province the man that some particular occasion required.

10411. You might possibly go 7 or 8 years without being able to find the man in Burma who would do, and in the next 5 or 6 years you might find a dozen who would be suitable?—You might find at any time a man who would do for one of the departments; you might not be able possibly to find a man who would be suitable for any particular department of the Government of India in Burma.

10412. With regard to advancement and promotion, should a man be put into a post in the province simply because he knows the province, irrespective of whether there is somebody else available who is better qualified?—I do not say that, but it is doubtful whether anybody who has not served in Burma at all could be better than the best man who has served here.

10413. Until quite recently the Lieutenant-Governor has been someone from outside, and looking at the geographical position of Burma and its people and its language, you suggest that the Lieutenant-Governor should always be an officer of Burmese experience?—I think so.

10414. Is not the Head of the Government of Bombay or Madras chosen from outside?—Yes, that is so.

10415. And does it happen that in other provinces of India the Head of the Government is chosen from outside?—It is rare. I have in mind one or two cases; the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab seems to have been regularly a Punjab man, and I think the same holds good with regard to Bengal.

10416. What you would suggest as a remedy for all this is that, first of all there should be a greater number of superior places in the Government of India placed at the disposal of Burmese Civilians, and that the head of the province of Burma should also be an officer in that Civil Service?—Those are two of my suggestions.

10417. Would you suggest, as an alternative, that the Government of Burma might be more completely separated from the Government of India by the formation of a Governorship, or something of that sort, with a Council?—My present view is that it is better that Burma should be connected with India.

10418. Notwithstanding all these drawbacks?—Yes, I think it is better, assuming that the Government of India has more opportunities of being advised by someone who knows Burma.

10419. You know that the Government of Bombay and Madras is that of a Governor in Council; are they separated from the Government of India completely?—They are not completely separated, but they have a greater latitude than other provinces.

10420. Would an arrangement of that sort meet the requirements of Burma?—I do not know sufficiently what extra powers, as compared with a Lieutenant-Governor, the Governors in Bombay and Madras possess.

10421. You desire to see an arrangement made by the Imperial Government by which Burma should pay a fixed contribution to the Government of India from year to year? On what basis would that contribution be calculated?—I imagine it would have to be calculated in consideration of what the Government of Burma has been considered to be able to do with in the past, combined with some allowance for what it should have in the future, having regard to its expansion.

10422. You would not take any fixed basis of revenue or population?—I should not take it with reference to population.

10423. That of course would work out rather badly for Burma?—I do not see that it is a subject that need be considered; it would work out very badly for Burma; the population is very sparse in the country.

10424. Therefore you would not have any fresh basis of revenue, but you would simply take the calculations based upon past years, giving the Government of Burma complete freedom to deal with the sum they receive, and to spend it as they liked?—Yes, I think the contribution should be fixed in consideration of what their total revenue amounts to, combined with what total expenditure is found to be necessary.

10425. You are in charge of a great number of Departments—Land Revenue, Excise, Customs, Forests, Finance, Mining, Salt, Post Offices, and so forth. Some of these revenues belong partly to the Government of India and partly to the provincial Government?—Yes.

10426. Under your scheme, would there be a fresh redistribution of these items of income and expenditure?—It would not be necessary to divide these heads in the way now adopted in the provincial contract; I want to have a whole lump sum arrangement.

10427. But how are the Government of India to arrive at what the lump sum should be?—They would undoubtedly have first of all to calculate the total amounts of revenue that are received, but that could be ascertained; take customs, which is at present purely an imperial head; you could obtain the receipts of the province from customs pretty easily.

10428. Instead of taking half the customs and half the salt, you would have the Government of India say, "It does not matter whether you get more or less than you do at present from salt, and so on, in the future; here are 100 lakhs, and that must last you for ever; this sum will be paid annually, and that is what you must take and you can do what you like with it"—I have no objection to having provision for a fixed contribution from time to time.

10429. You would do away altogether with these proportions of revenue, and have a fixed sum, with a fixed contribution to the Government of India?—Yes.

10430. What would happen if the expenditure of the Government of India went up?—If the Government of India could not pay its way, it would have to call upon the Government of Burma for more.

10431. In that case the provincial contribution would not be fixed?—It would be fixed until it was shown that the Government of India must have more funds.

10432. Then if the Government expenditure went up year by year, the contribution would have to vary?—Not unless the Government of India were becoming bankrupt.

10433. Has not the expenditure of the Government of India increased every year considerably?—I am afraid I do not know.

10434. Then, in suggesting this scheme to us, you have not taken into account the expenditure of the Government of India, but only the expenditure of the Government of Burma?—Yes, I am speaking from the point of view of Burma.

10435. You think that Burma alone ought to be considered, and not the other various provinces which go to make up the Government of India; it is the part, and not the whole, which deserves your first consideration?—I think it is undoubtedly to the detriment of Burma that it should be limited because of what another province requires.

10436. But a great deal of the expenditure of the Government of India is not provincial?—No; I imagine that a very large part is not.

10437. Therefore the thing which affected the contribution from Burma might be, not the interests of some other province, but the general policy of the Government of India?—It is conceivable no doubt that something would happen in other provinces. If the Government of India desired to make a large imperial grant to another province, and they had not funds to do it, Burma might be affected, because they would want more money from Burma; or if Burma said, "We cannot give any more," another province might have to go without the extra grant.

10438. Suppose this increase in expenditure consisted of military expenditure, and not of a grant to some other province, it might cause a demand upon Burma, not from the point of view of some other province, but from the point of view of the general policy of the Government?—That is so.

10439. You say that the Local Government is to assign to each department a lump sum, and the Head of the Department is to assign to each District officer a lump sum, and the Head of the Department and the District Officer are to spend that money more or less as they please?—On the recognised lines of course; they know the recognised lines on which the department spends money.

10440. Might that not do away with budgeting and estimating altogether?—It would to a great extent.

10441. Would that be in the interests of good finance?—Yes.

10442. In the same way you think it ought not to be necessary to ask for sanction for any re-appropriation during the year, or to refer to any higher authority for sanction as to expenditure; a man should be left to spend his lump sum just as he thought best?—Yes, on the recognised objects of the department.

10443. Would that not involve the framing of an infinity of rules by the department?—No, I do not see why it should.

10444. Suppose you had a stupid officer, he might spend the money not upon the recognised lines, because he would not understand what the recognised lines were?—If you had a stupid officer, yes.

10445. Then in order to safeguard yourself under your system, a great number of complex rules would have to be framed in order to guard against stupidity or criminality?—No, I do not think so.

10446. You think it is quite unnecessary that all the details of the provincial budget should be submitted to the Government of India, and that the Accountant-General would watch that the province does not become insolvent. Is not the principal duty of the Accountant-General to see that the money is properly spent, and properly brought into account?—To see that it is brought into account, but not to see that it is properly spent.

10447. But if it is spent on a wrong object, does he not bring that to the notice of the Local Government and the Government of India?—I do not think he should be the judge of whether the object is wrong or not.

10448. You think the Local Government ought to be the judge?—Yes.

10449. But then the Local Government are not going to be the judge under your plan, because they are going to hand the money over to the Head of the Department?—Yes, but if the Head of the Department does not spend according to what they approve of, they can at the end of one year stop the expenditure.

10450. Do you not think that that would cause a great deal of correspondence between the Head of the Department and the Government?—It would cause less than at present.

10451. You do not think that, unless the Local Government is entirely freed from the Government of India, they ought to be allowed to borrow on their own account?—It is difficult for them to borrow; they ought to be able to get money through the Government of India better for themselves than if they borrowed in the market.

10452. That would be one reason, from your point of view, for not entirely cutting yourselves adrift from the Government of India?—Yes, that is one reason.

10453. You say that so far as this country is concerned the expression "native of Burma" should be substituted for "native of India." Would that lead to retaliatory measures on the part of the other provinces; would they not wish that the expression "native of India" should exclude natives of Burma?—The Burman would not mind that in the least; he does not go out of his country if he can help it.

10454. Would the Civil Service like it?—But that is not the proposal.

10455. The Lieutenant-Governor under your scheme is to be a member of the Burmese Civil Service; is the Secretariat of India to be closed to members of the Burmese Civil Service?—It is the other way; I have advised that they should take more people from Burma.

10456. So that special posts should be reserved in Burma for the Burmese Civil Servants, and they should also have a further number of posts open to them in the Government of India?—I think it is necessary that there should always be one man there whose advice will carry weight; I do not want more than that; I am satisfied now with the Home Member.

10457. There should be exclusion on one side and the open door on the other?—Only for one appointment. I have not the least objection, if officers come over to Burma and serve in Burma, to their appointment then as Heads of Departments here, and I think the Inspector-General of Forests is an excellent example.

10458. He does not serve in Burma exclusively?—No, but he is a man who has served in Burma and got to know the country, and then gone to India again, and then been appointed Head of the Forest Department.

10459. All you mean with regard to the exclusive retention of the Governorship is that it should be for officers who have served for some time previously in Burma?—Some time before their appointment, sufficient to get to know the country.

10460. You think the creation of District Boards or municipalities is bound to be a failure?—I would not be so confident as to say "bound to be," but most probably it will be.

10461. Although a considerable local revenue is raised in Burma, you think that the Burmans themselves are not capable of carrying on the administration?—They have not got those particular qualities that are wanted.

10462. So that they must be left outside any scheme of local self-government that may be suggested elsewhere?—No, I would not suggest leaving them out if they will come in, but I think they will not come in; they do not want it.

10463. It has been suggested to us that occasionally, when it was suggested to turn a place into a municipality there was great objection on the part of the people to the creation of the municipality, because taxation would follow; have you ever known that to occur in Burma?—Yes. I have sometimes heard of it, and I had an instance in a sub-division that I was in charge of. I have known cases of Burmans petitioning to be put outside a municipality in which they were already living.

10464. Are not a few members of the Burmese municipalities elected, while most of them are nominated?—Nearly all; except in Moulmein.

10465. Do they work pretty well?—I do not think they do anything.

10466. Is it all run by the Government officers?—Practically, except in Rangoon; they occasionally make suggestions at the meetings there.

10467. You tell us that the Finance Department of the Government of India is very disinclined to provide any money?—Do you think that that is a disposition common to all Finance Departments?—That is the only one that I have had experience of.

10468. During your experience of the Finance Department have you been very disinclined to provide money?—No, I do not think so. The Local Government is inclined to be liberal.

10469. Where does your official liberality particularly display itself?—I think the Local Government does not make any objection when it is asked to sanction appointments which are required for the country, or to spend money on communications and general development, if the money is there to spend. I had a good instance the other day; without hesitation it guaranteed a wireless telegraphy system, which it may have to pay upon.

10470. You referred that to the Government of India?—Yes.

10471. You got sanction at once?—Yes.

10472. So that, in that particular direction, the Government of India were liberal too?—The Government of India put it to the Government of Burma, "Will you guarantee it?"

10473. In the matter of collecting revenues, which you are interested in as a Revenue Officer, were you very liberal?—I think we gave remissions very liberally—quite freely.

10474. Are most of your remissions upon the wet crop?—If there is failure of irrigation; what happens then is that the land is assessed on the dry crop.

10475. Have you much dry crops in Burma?—Yes, in the dry zone they are nearly all dry crops.

10476. Who has the power of granting remission on wet crops?—It is according to the amount.

10477. Either the Deputy Commissioner or the Commissioner?—It goes lower than that; the Sub-Divisional officer can remit also.

10478. Has the Deputy Commissioner or the Commissioner power to remit on dry crops?—In the case of dry crops, if they do not come to maturity they are not assessed; the rule is that only the mature crops are assessed. The assessment is from year to year; they take it at a particular time of the year. It is because of the precarious climate of the dry zone in Upper Burma.

10479. So that, in that particular, you differ from the rest of India?—I do not think they have that system in India.

10480. The assessment of the dry crop is made after the crop has reached maturity?—Yes, when it is known that there is going to be a crop.

10481. Is it not dependent upon the crop of the previous year?—It is, as a matter of fact, generally the same from year to year.

10482. But is the assessment made upon the crop which is actually growing, or is the assessment made before the crop has even begun to sprout?—The revenue is paid on the crop actually grown. It is made in the course of the year before the crop is actually reaped.

10483. When the dry crop fails has the Deputy Commissioner or the Commissioner power to remit revenue on the dry crop?—It simply is not levied.

10484. In other words he remits it?—That is the standing rule; it does not require any power.

10485. Suppose there is a considerable failure of dry crops, the revenue is not reduced?—No; that is only as to the dry zone, of course.

10486. It is not absolutely remitted, but it is reduced to what is called fallow rate?—That is in Lower Burma; when land is purposely left fallow it pays a particular rate which is called the fallow rate.

10487. Therefore you do not find that there is any difficulty in the Commissioner remitting or not levying revenue upon dry crops?—No.

10488. We were told elsewhere that there would be great difficulty in making remissions on dry crops, but in Burma you have not found that difficulty?—No; that is only in Upper Burma.

10489. Have you found the financial settlement recently made by the Government of India sufficiently just?—I do not think it is satisfactory. I think the allotment to Public Works is sufficient. Otherwise it is satisfactory.

10490. You are in favour of all these Inspectors-General as imperial officers; do they do their work satisfactorily?—Not all of them, but some. I think the Inspector-General of Forests is a decided advantage to Burma.

10491. You say: "It is not unlikely that the experience of the Inspector-General of Irrigation will be useful in imparting ideas taken from the provinces of Upper India in which more attention is necessarily devoted to irrigation than in Burma?"—I think the province gains by his advice, but if he is responsible for the system on which the accounts are credited, I think he is not of any assistance to Burma. As an adviser on irrigation subjects he is useful so long as he does not interfere with the administration.

10492. The reforms which have been forced upon you by the Government of India have been on the whole harmful rather than beneficial?—Yes, I think they have been given a great deal of work that has not had any result.

10493. In the various Commissions and Committees that have been appointed Burma has had either no invitation to attend, or no representative on the enquiring body?—Yes.

10494. If it was obligatory upon the Government of India to put a representative of every province on every Commission that was formed, might that not tend to make the size and proceedings of the Commission lengthy and cumbrous?—In the case of a Commission such as the present, if every province had a representative upon it, that would be so, but in the case of purely Indian Commissions I do not think if every province had one representative the Commissions would be too big.

10495. Take the Stores Committee, for instance, you do not think that 12 members would be too big—one for each provincial Government and one for the Government of India?—I think 12 would be rather an unnecessary number.

10496. If you reduce it below that you would have to omit some province?—You would have to omit a province, but it does not follow that you should always omit Burma.

10497. You say that in Burma there is no serious prospect of famine, and that in case of scarcity it can always be relieved by the local officers with local works, or spontaneously by temporary emigration?—In certain districts; in fact in the whole of Burma we never have a famine. Since I have been here, there has been one small famine in a single district.

10498. From your point of view famine programmes in many districts are unnecessary? Do they cause you much trouble to keep to?—We have to keep up a programme and to revise it from year to year.

Mr. G. F.
Arnold.

Mr. G. F.

10499. Do you as a matter of fact revise it?—Yes; we make enquiries as to whether these works which are put down are still required, or whether they have been rendered unnecessary.

10500. You do not think that officers, knowing that there is not going to be any famine, simply take the last scheme for granted?—I think there is a great temptation to do that.

10501. You say that the Local Government has since 1902 asked you for eighteen additional reports and returns. What were they about?—One I remember was regarding the administration of District Cess Funds and District Funds generally; another one was in connection with the reorganisation of the police—as to how certain enquiries were progressing which resulted from the Police Commission. It is now an annual return.

10502. Are all these 18 returns annual returns?—I think they mostly are.

10503. And they entail a great deal of labour and office work?—That depends on how many people are concerned with them. They entail a considerable volume of work taken altogether. For instance, the District Cess Fund return is one that I have had to do with; it entails a note as well as statements attached.

10504. Are the statistics which are given to you, and which you pass on, accurate?—I think they are generally accurate.

10505. Up to within what limit?—I think if you wanted to get a general idea of any question you could rely upon them to that extent.

10506. Within 5 or 10 per cent., say?—I think so. In some cases they are more accurate than that; and in some cases less.

10507. Do officers tend to guess at the result, hoping that they will not be found out?—No. I think they only guess when they have not the means of finding out; I do not think they guess for the sake of saving themselves trouble, if they can get the information.

10508. (Sir Steyning Edgerley.) As regards your budget scheme. I suppose you do not expect us to adopt the lump sum principle?—I do not know whether you would adopt it or recommend it, but I think it is the line on which reform should be made.

10509. I understand that your position is that the contract is practically the frame-work; that it contains safeguards, and that the Audit Officer supports that, and has only to see that the frame-work is not broken?—The duty of the Audit Officer, as I understand, is merely to see that the money is spent on the objects recognised by Government, and that the province does not become bankrupt.

10510. When you say the objects recognised by the Government, does that mean that the money for one major head is not wrongly spent on another major head?—No; I meant rather that the Government should spend it on objects which are recognised objects.

10511. In order to get your independence would you be prepared to provincialise all expenditure?—I should not have any objection to do that.

10512. You make a suggestion that there should be no lapses in the future; how would you work that?—It seems to me that when there is a lapse at the end of the year it is too late to enter it in the budget for the next year; it is generally ascertained too late, and in consequence it lies locked up till the next year, because no provision has been made for its use in the coming year. I should give permission simply to put it again in the budget next year.

10513. Speaking generally, would you allow Local Governments to borrow?—I think they ought to be able to borrow through the Government of India; if they cannot get what they want through grants from the Government of India, then I have no objection to their being allowed to borrow themselves.

10514. For instance, you do not think that you would get capital for small Public Works?—No; that is it; the loans which the Local Government would raise would be small, and the rates at which they borrowed would be high.

10515. As to these Inspectors-General and Directors-General; do you think that they ought to enter into correspondence with the local Head of the Department?—I see no objection to that.

10516. Would that in any way tend to lead the local Head of a Department to look past his own Local Government?—I am not prepared to say it might not; I think it would depend very much on the Head of the Department.

10517. Would it not tend to duplicate the administration?—I do not think that the Head of the Imperial Department should correspond with the Head of the local Department in order to administer the department at all; my idea of his correspondence was that the Director-General should learn what are the difficulties of the local man, and advise him.

10518. Is there not the great danger of allowing correspondence to spring up?—Yes, I think that danger exists.

10519. Suppose the Government of India sent the Director-General a case to report upon, and he gave a strong opinion as the result of correspondence with the provincial Head of the Department, might that not lead to the Local Government being put on one side?—Yes, but he ought not to correspond with the provincial Head of the Department on an actual question that has arisen. He should merely correspond and advise upon general or scientific questions. I was thinking particularly of the way in which the Inspector-General of Forests advises the Chief Conservator here on questions of forestry when he corresponds direct.

10519A. But the other danger is not inconsiderable?—No; the danger exists.

10520. You have noticed in the case of other Inspectors-General that the danger had been experienced?—That is not the case, because in the case I have mentioned there is no local Head of the Department here to correspond with; that was a case in which the Director-General of the Geological Survey sent his own men over here, and there was nobody under the Local Government at all.

10521. You mention also the Director of Commercial Intelligence?—I have mentioned him as causing demands for statistics; since his employment I think the number of calls for statistics has increased.

10522. You think that so long as these Directors-General do not trench on administrative matters they do good?—Yes.

10523. (Mr. Meyer.) You would like to keep out the native of India altogether, and trust the development of Burma to the Burman and the Chinese?—Yes, that is rather my idea.

10524. Would that extend to defence also?—No; as to defence, I think the connection with India is necessary; that is one of my reasons for desiring to be connected with the Government of India.

10526. In fact, you desire to be connected with the Government of India only so far as you can get some advantage from the connection?—Yes, but I am willing to pay for it.

10527. You would have Indians to defend you, but in no other capacity so far as you can help it?—I am quite willing to have Europeans, too.

10528. You referred to the Government of India assisting emigration from India to Burma. How did they assist the emigration of natives of India to Burma?—They have in the past written and proposed emigration schemes, and they have also proposed subsidies for bringing Indian coolies here, which the Local Government have had to pay; that is to say, for every cooly who comes across from Eastern Bengal and Assam, the Government have to pay a certain proportion of the fare to the Steamship Company.

10529. For what purpose are the coolies brought?—Just to bring them over here; they are not necessarily coolies, but natives of India, who get a cheap passage in order to come across here.

10530. Do you mean that for every native of India who comes over to Burma to work as a labourer, say, the Government of India or the Government of Burma have to pay a certain part of his passage?—I do not say it is so as to every cooly, but I know the case of a Steamship Company which did receive a subsidy from the Government of Burma.

10531. For what purpose were the coolies brought; might it be that they were brought for some Government purpose?—No, they were not brought for any Government purpose; it was simply an arrangement with the Steamship Company that they should give coolies cheap passage to Burma.

10532. You say the Government of Burma had to pay. Was the Government of Burma consulted in the arrangement, or was it ordered by the Government of India?—I am afraid I do not know.

10533. Was this long ago?—This year; it was stopped this year; it went on yearly up to this year.

10534. Why did it stop?—Because the Lieutenant-Governor objected.

10535. Did the Government of India press him to continue the system?—No, he simply stopped it.

10536. Without any reference to the Government of India?—Yes.

10537. Then I put it to you that it was a Burma arrangement?—It was an arrangement with the Government of Bengal.

10538. Then the Government of India were not in any way responsible for it?—I do not know how it was started originally.

10539. Ordinarily the native of India, other than Government servants, who comes over here, comes at his own risk?—I suppose he does in other cases.

10540. You have spoken of Indians getting clerkships in preference to Burmans. Let us take the superior Subordinate Service, the myooks, and Extra Assistant Commissioners; are Indians ever appointed to that Service?—Some men are appointed to the Service whose fathers have been Muhammadans and mothers Burmese.

10541. But taking the bulk of the Service, so far as it is not pure Burman, it is European?—Yes, that is so, with regard to the myooks.

10542. And the Extra Assistant Commissioners, so far as they are not European, the bulk of them are what?—European, Eurasians, natives of India, and Burmese.

10543. Natives of India in large proportion?—No; a very small proportion. My remarks were about clerks principally.

10544. You complain that the high offices in Burma have been mainly filled from outside; for instance, it is alleged that up to five years ago the Financial Commissioner was an outside officer; is that so?—Yes.

10545. Was not Mr. Smeaton Financial Commissioner some years before 1902?—Yes, but he was from India.

10546. The India list shows that Mr. Smeaton came to British Burma in 1879, and had served 12 years when he first became Financial Commissioner in 1891?—I was not aware of it; but my point is that he did not know the Burmese; Mr. Smeaton never knew the Burmese; he could not talk Burmese to the people; when he came it was to take a position in which he never came into contact with the people; he was too high up.

10547. In the old days Burma had no separate recruiting class; were not Civilians who came to the Burmese Government largely transferred from other provinces?—I think the first man who came out straight to Burma has now got about 20 years' service.

10548. That is to say, you may practically date it at about the annexation of Upper Burma?—Yes. I am thinking of men in the country now; I do not know whether everybody who has already retired came out straight to Burma.

10549. A large number, collectively, of Civilians in the old days were transferred from the United Provinces, Madras, Bengal, or elsewhere, to Burma, and they served in Burma the rest of their service?—Yes.

10550. Would you not call those Burman officers?—Yes.

10551. It is also said in the same memorandum that the present Lieutenant-Governor is the first Burmese officer who has held that post?—I said for any length of time.

10552. May I put the case of Sir Frederick Fryer; had he not served a considerable time in Burma?—No, not much before he was Chief Commissioner; he had been Finance Commissioner.

10553. He was not brought to the province from outside; he had held high office in the province before he became Lieutenant-Governor?—He had been Finance Commissioner, yes.

10554. Then you imply that the present is the first case in which an officer who has had experience of Burmese administration has been at the head of the Home Department of the Government of India; is that quite correct?—I do not know anyone else.

10555. Was not Sir Alexander Mackenzie Home Member after having been Chief Commissioner in Burma?—But Sir Alexander Mackenzie was not a Burman Civilian; he could not talk Burmese.

10556. He had been Chief Commissioner of the province for a while?—I do not know when he was Home Member; he was Chief Commissioner at one time.

10557. Then was not Sir Charles Crosthwaite a former Chief Commissioner?—Yes, but I do not regard him as a Burma man.

10558. Though you would not regard him as a Burma man, my point is that these officers had at least some knowledge at first hand of Burma administration?—You mean, as Chief Commissioners? That is so, but I do not think persons who are Chief Commissioners come into contact with the people in such a way as really to get to know them.

10559. You state in your memorandum that "A communication to the Government of India of minor importance usually does not receive a reply under six months; one of more importance takes frequently a year to obtain an answer"; is that the fact?—I think letters of ordinary importance take six months.

10560. Could you furnish us with a statement showing in the last couple of years the number of letters addressed to the Government of India and the dates upon which they have been replied to?—I will do that.

10561. You are aware that under the India Act of 1858 the revenue and expenditure of India have been placed by Parliament under the Secretary of State in Council?—Yes.

10562. How does he come in under your financial proposals? Your arrangement is, I understand, that each province should pay a lump assignment to the Government of India, and that it should then manage its own affairs practically as it likes without interference from India?—I have not made this proposal with regard to any other province than Burma. I do not know the circumstances of the other provinces.

10563. (Chairman.) Do you intend this arrangement to be applied to Burma only, or to be applied to every province in India?—Generally, my views are that unless I had reason to suppose that there was anything unsuitable for my proposal in another province, I should apply it to any other province.

Mr. G. F.
Arnold.

11 Dec., 1907.

10564. (Mr. Meyer.) Then what you say is, that what you consider suitable for Burma is prima facie suitable for other provinces?—With the same object as I have here, so far as I know of the other provinces, I should advocate it.

10565. Then what control is the Secretary of State to have over the provincial budgets?—As far as I know he would have the same control as he has now—the same control as the Government of India has.

10566. Do you know how the Secretary of State exercises his control now?—No.

10567. The control of the Secretary of State is two-fold, first, he sees the budget proposals, and secondly there are other rules in the Civil Service Regulations and the Civil Account Code which require his sanction to various specific items of expenditure. Your proposal would do away with budgets altogether practically. Do you propose to continue the specific restrictions as to expenditure—possibly modified as has been suggested (the Rs. 250 rule being increased to Rs. 500 and so on)?—No, I do not propose to continue them.

10568. Then the Secretary of State is practically to abrogate the control over the revenue and expenditure in India, with which he has been invested by Parliament?—I propose that he should do it through the Government of India. He would see that the Government of India got the lump sum contributed from the provinces; he would be able to control that.

10569. You think that that is all he need do—to see that the Government of India gets its lump sum contribution?—And that it is properly fixed originally.

10570. You are aware that a quasi-permanent financial settlement with the provinces has been recently substituted for a settlement revisable after five years?—Yes.

10571. You have seen the reasons that have been given for that change—they were stated by the Finance Minister in one of his budget statements—that the old system led to continual bickerings between the provincial Governments and the Imperial Government?—Yes.

10572. Would not your scheme, which involves the provincial Government giving a lump sum to the Imperial Government, which has to be perpetually revised according to the alterations in imperial circumstances—military expenditure, a possible fall in the opium revenue, war, and the rest of it—involve infinitely more bickering than even the system of quinquennial settlements?—I think there is no reason to suppose that it would involve more.

10573. You would not feel any dissatisfaction if you were suddenly asked to increase your contribution by reason of, say, a famine in the United Provinces?—That would be so, if we were frequently asked to do so, but I do not see why it should be asked for any more frequently than under a settlement which had to be revised at intervals.

10574. Because in those days we had a fixed share of growing revenues. I understand that you would give the Government of India a fixed lump sum?—Yes, but calculated so as to be sufficient for a period. I would not propose that the fixed sum should be what is suitable simply on this year's accounts.

10575. You say that there are two or three thousand separate cases in all of which the Local Government cannot go beyond the sums laid down without obtaining the sanction of the Government of India. How many budget heads are there?—I was not referring to those; what I was referring to was the number of restrictions in the various Account Codes.

10576. The Civil Service Regulations and the rest?—Yes, and in the letters that have laid down restrictions which necessitate the Local Government going to the Government of India.

10577. Has not some regard been paid to the special circumstances of Burma even by the Government of India as now constituted? Your salt tax was for years below the ordinary Indian level, was it not?—Yes.

10578. Has income tax been introduced universally in Burma?—No. It is according to the salary in certain towns.

10579. Is income tax levied in Upper Burma?—Only in cases where a man's salary comes to a certain figure; in other cases they pay thathameda tax. I regard the thathameda tax as an income tax. So also is the capitation tax in Lower Burma.

10580. The thathameda is partly a land tax and partly an occupation tax?—It is split into two halves, agricultural and non-agricultural. In a settlement the thathameda is fixed so that it is only charged on non-agricultural income; so that the thathameda is no longer supposed to be any part of the land tax, or any part of Agricultural income.

10581. You say that the Public Works Department made difficulties over allotments for works that were necessary. Were you referring to the provincial Public Works Department?—Yes.

10582. Could not the Government of Burma make them take up any project whether they were pleased with it or not?—The rule they go upon is that they classify works in certain ways, and they take up those which are remunerative.

10583. You are perhaps thinking of productive works which are financed from borrowed money?—They may be financed from borrowed money; they have got two classes of works, and it is very difficult to get them to take up works which are not going to pay a certain return on the money put into them.

10584. Is not the bulk of the expenditure incurred in the province incurred by the provincial Government out of revenue, not out of loaned capital at all?—Yes.

10585. And therefore the provincial Government has full latitude in spending it, subject to having to go up to the Government of India and the Secretary of State when a project exceeds 12½ lakhs in cost?—Yes, but this is an instance that I gave of talking too departmental a view.

10586. But it is a case of the provincial Government and its own engineers, it is not a case of the provincial Government being overruled by the Government of India?—No, I did not give it as an instance of that.

10587. As regards the allotment to Public Works in the existing settlement which you complain of, will you explain exactly what that allotment means?—It is the allotment to civil works under the provincial settlement.

10588. It does not mean that they were limited to that amount?—No, it does not mean that we are limited to that, if we can find other funds elsewhere.

10589. It means that the Government of India, in settling your normal expenditure, upon which they based the final settlement, said that 80 lakhs was your normal expenditure on Public Works?—Just so.

10590. Are you aware that that is a larger margin than has been given to any other province?—Yes.

10591. And that you have also had a lump initial grant to be spent mainly on Public Works?—I was not aware that it was to be spent mainly on Public Works.

10592. And out of your growing revenues you are supposed to spend on Public Works?—It was said that we could spend out of growing revenues, but it was not guaranteed or shown that there would be further funds forthcoming. Further, the expense of executing works in Burma is nearly double that in other provinces, and Burma is not nearly so well equipped with roads and buildings as other provinces.

10593. There was a complaint that Burma was not represented on the Excise Committee. Was it not stated in the Resolution appointing the Committee that their investigations would not extend to Burma, because the excise problems there mainly concerned opium, and the Committee was appointed to deal with liquor?—It may be so; but in most of the Resolutions which are now issued, Burma is asked to send a report as to what they are going to do as to the result of the Excise Committee's report.

10594. It is quite open to you to say that you do not see any call to do anything in particular?—But it is made clear that the Government of India thought that there were excise liquor problems in Burma.

10595. You speak of the Madras contract distillery system having been rather forced on this province by the Excise Committee of the Government of India; is that so?—It is a suggestion that came from them, otherwise it would never have been taken up here.

10596. As a matter of fact that suggestion relates to the reduction of your out-still areas?—That is the object.

10597. It does not in the very least affect the management of your existing distilleries?—I am not prepared to say that it does not affect the management of our existing distilleries.

10598. You deprecate the interference with mining matters of the Director of the Geological Survey; will you give me specific instances?—I think the advice of the Local Government has been negatived. In a competition between a syndicate and a company here for the lease of certain blocks of the oil fields, the advice of the Local Government was not accepted on account of the recommendations of the Director of Geological Survey.

10599. It was in any case a matter which would have had to go up to the Government of India under the mining rules?—Yes.

10600. Have you any instance to allege in which the Director of Geological Survey has interfered in matters which under rule would ordinarily rest with the provincial Government?—The mining rules are rules of the Government of India and the Government of Burma is unable to give more than certain areas; that involves frequent references to the Government of India, and it is allowed to charge certain rents and royalties in certain places.

10601. The point that has been alleged by various persons in various provinces is that the Heads of Imperial Departments tend to intervene, not merely in matters which by law or rule or executive order are reserved to the Government of India for final disposal, but upon matters which the provincial Government might finally dispose of themselves. You have given an instance in which, by rule, the Government of India have the disposal; is there any other instance in which the provincial Government have been interfered with by the Director of Geological Survey?—I do not think the Director of Geological Survey ever goes to the Local Government and advises them to do a thing; what he does do, I think, is to influence the Government of India in these matters.

10602. In regard to mines, in the Lieutenant-Governor's memorandum it is suggested that the Local Government should have much more power under the mining rules than now exists—that certain maximum restrictions as to concessions should be done away with. Are you aware that these restrictions were primarily imposed by the Secretary of State?—No, I was not aware of that.

10603. And that the object was to prevent capitalists from monopolising valuable mining property?—I was not aware of it, but I imagine that is one of the reasons why they are restricted in area in that way.

10604. Do you think if the Local Government had a free hand, and if the matter had not to pass through more than one authority, there would be no danger of concessions to capitalists of practical monopolies over mining or prospecting areas?—The Local Government would not necessarily give monopolies; these areas which are put down in the mining rules are so small that it is not at all a question of a monopoly.

10605. But you want the restrictions done away with?—Yes I do, because of the inconvenience.

10606. The Lieutenant-Governor in his memorandum says, "So far as the disposal of land at market rates is concerned, I think that the Local Government should have very full powers. The question of the disposal of land free of revenue or at favourable rates is more difficult." Are you aware that restrictions on alienation of land were laid down in past years by the Secretary of State?—I do not know that they were laid down by the Secretary of State.

10607. Is there not the possibility of risk under the too free assignment of land in growing cities like Rangoon, where the value of land may be said to increase year by year?—Yes, certainly; the Local Government is alive to that.

10608. And has always been so?—I see every sign of its being alive to-day, whatever it may have been in the past.

10609. Then His Honour says, "I do not recommend the extension of power to grant land for purely religious purposes"; nevertheless in the specific delegations to Heads of Departments I find "grant of land free of revenue"?—I think the same rule deals with religious purposes and public purposes. The Lieutenant-Governor, I think, means by that, land for a public purpose, but the rule is quoted which deals with both.

10610. So far as those entries are concerned, they would increase the existing powers of Commissioners would they not?—Yes.

10611. One is for the Financial Commissioner and the others are for Commissioners?—Yes.

10612. Are those powers within the present powers of the Local Government, or do they involve increase in the powers of the Local Government also?—The present power of the Local Government to grant land for religious or public purposes is limited to Rs. 200.

10613. Whereas you propose to give the Commissioner power up to Rs. 500?—Yes.

10614. Therefore, it is not quite correct when the Lieutenant-Governor says in his memorandum, "I do not recommend the extension of power to grant land for purely religious purposes"?—The limit of Rs. 500 was only intended to refer to land for public purposes.

10615. There is no intention to increase the power to grant land to religious bodies for religious purposes?—There may be a discrepancy; I will not be positive; or it may be reconciled in the way I suggest.

10616. Is not Burma the only province where the Government does grant land for religious purposes?—I do not know that.

10617. Would you recognise that there might be some risk of accusations of partiality if the local officers got a freer hand in the making of grants to religious bodies which were possibly in rivalry?—The amount of Rs. 500 is rather small to be the basis of a charge of that kind.

10618. You ask for larger powers in regard to settlements; have sufficiently definite proposals of settlement been laid down in Burma yet; were not matters in a state of flux a few years ago?—You cannot even now say that every settlement question has been settled in Burma.

10619. But would you recognise that, until some settlement proposals have been approved by the Government of India, they must keep more control than when such proposals have been approved?—No; it is the Government of India who will not fix a principle, and continually challenge the settlements.

10620. What you mean is that you, and the Government of India, have not yet been able to agree on fixed principles?—I think the Local Government would have adopted fixed principles before this if they had not been challenged.

10621. However, they are still in controversy?—Yes, because the Government of India have recently written to say that they wanted re-examined what they considered a fixed principle.

Mr. G. F.

Mr. G. F.
Arnold.

11 Dec., 1907.

10622. You would like the Local Government to have a free hand in respect of local allowances?—Yes.

10623. Has the Government of India got a free hand?—I do not know.

10624. You want the Local Government to be able to grant a fixed travelling allowance?—Yes.

10625. Are you aware that the Government of India are not in favour of fixed travelling allowances, on the ground that an officer has no special inducement to travel if he gets a fixed sum whether he travels or not?—I do not know whether that is so or not, but at the same time they have sanctioned it in a number of cases.

10626. But not as a general rule; they always sanction it with reluctance. You ask that in Article 278A, Civil Account Code, which allows a Local Government, within certain limits, to sanction certain expenses not justified by ordinary rule, the words “and that it does not establish a new rule or practice involving expenditure” should be omitted; would that not allow a Local Government to spend money on objects of which the Government of India and the Secretary of State might disapprove?—It would allow them to spend money on objects not provided for in the ordinary rules.

10627. Suppose the Secretary of State had disapproved of the grant of some assistance to a religious body; under this section might not the Local Government give it?—I suppose it could use it in that way, but it is not the type of expenditure that the Local Government, so far as I know, has ever attempted to use the section for.

10628. You also desire that the Accountant-General shall not be able to challenge the section?—Yes, the reason is that we never use it at all, or very rarely; he challenges it on the ground that it is a new rule or practice.

10629. You refer to “the grant of leases of land in Upper Burma otherwise than is provided by the rules”; you say that in that matter the sanction of the Governor-General in Council might be dispensed with. To what leases do you refer?—As the rules now stand, leases can be made only in certain ways which are laid down by the rules.

10630. What is the character of the leases; for what purpose are they?—They are for cultivation generally; it is not like a lease in a town of land which will be built upon, or anything of that sort; it is simply the kind of terms on which the land can be leased for cultivation.

10631. They are not what you might call a quasi-permanent grant—a lease for 99 years or something of that kind?—No.

10632. In various things, matters of remission, for instance, the Deputy Commissioner, and the Commissioner, in Upper Burma have larger powers than in Lower Burma; is there any valid reason for the difference?—I am not sure, but I should say the explanation is that for a long time the District Officers were left with greater powers all over Upper Burma in every respect.

10633. Would you see any objection, where the powers in Lower Burma are smaller, to raising the powers of the Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner to the same level as those in Upper Burma?—No; in fact such proposals have been made.

10634. Are you prepared to give the Commissioner and the Deputy Commissioner larger powers in respect to granting agricultural loans, or is there no special demand for them in this province?—There has been a demand for them in recent years, and we have now made some rules in respect to which we grant higher powers, though they are not actually published.

10635. Then you ask that the Local Government may be granted discretion “in the case of grants of compassionate allowances to the families, and educating the children, of officers who have rendered important service to Government.” Is not that a very special concession that is not covered by the ordinary rules at all?—That seems to me a matter of opinion.

10636. Is not the general financial rule that the State does not undertake to provide for the families of its deceased officers in civil employment?—That is the general rule.

10637. Therefore this is a departure from that rule? Do you think that the Secretary of State would consent to leave that in the hands of the Local Government?—I do not see why he should not.

10638. (Mr. Hichens.) Does land revenue settlement all come under you?—Yes, and, of course, the Financial Commissioner as well. He advises on things first, and then they come up to Government.

10639. Does the Settlement Commissioner correspond directly with the Financial Commissioner?—Yes.

10640. That class of work does not come to you at all?—Yes, in some things; the Financial Commissioner settles a great many things, but those which he does not feel that he can settle himself come to Government, and there are certain things that must go up to the Local Government.

10641. In practice, do a large number of matters come up to Government for settlement?—Yes; first of all notes are written by the Financial Commissioner, and then a resolution is passed upon the matter.

10642. Are the general principles of land settlement now being discussed between the Local Government and the Government of India?—They have been discussed for years. They are not settled yet, not all of them.

10643. Do they resolve themselves into broad principles?—Yes, I should say they are sufficiently settled now, with the exception of finding a satisfactory theoretical principle as to the legitimate amount of produce by which to fix the land assessment. The question is whether it should be a share of the net produce or the net profits.

10644. Broadly speaking, the only point that requires settling between the Government of India and the Local Government is the proportion that is to be received by the Local Government?—That is the point with regard to particular settlements, but there are also questions as to the length of time that settlements should be allowed to last before a subsequent re-settlement; questions of that sort are still under discussion.

10645. But the Government of India does not interfere in matters of minor detail?—No, I should not quite say that, because every time the rates have to be fixed after a settlement, the Local Government have to submit these rates to the Government of India before it actually issues the notification assessing the land at those rates; so that it seems to me that the Government of India does supervise the details very much.

10646. Is that not because you have not agreed on general principles?—That may be the reason why the Government of India require it. I do not think the Local Government consider it necessary.

10647. You would agree that it is reasonable that the Government of India should be consulted on certain general principles?—Yes, but I do not think it reasonable that every time there is a settlement the rates should first of all be sent up to the Government of India in each individual case before they can be notified.

10648. What do you mean exactly by each individual case?—Every time the district or tract is settled, the report of the Settlement Officer is sent in, and notes are recorded on it by the Settlement Authorities who have studied the special subject, and then the Local Government frames a resolution which it has to send up with a schedule of the rates which it proposes, giving all the details in all the townships, and so on. It seems to me that that is unnecessary. It cannot be issued until the approval of the Government of India is received.

10649. Does the Local Government have a fairly free hand in the matter of remissions?—Yes; and we are now trying to increase the limits within which the local officers might have powers.

10650. Practically speaking, the Government of India does not interfere at all with regard to remissions?—I think that is so practically; I have not found a case in which they have said anything about the amount remitted.

10651. So that if you could get some general settlement, for a period of 20 years or something of that kind, with the Government of India, you would have no further reason to complain?—When once there has been a settlement and the rates have been fixed, they hold good for a period of, say, 15 or 20 years.

10652. Does land alienation come within your scope?—Yes.

10653. What are the principles underlying the alienation of land?—Government has powers to alienate land by granting leases of Government waste land; it gives out leases or grants at its discretion for certain towns and with certain exemptions, which are laid down under the rules in the Land Revenue Act. Those rules have been framed with the sanction of the Government of India, so that the Local Government cannot go outside the principles which are embodied in those rules.

10654. That is to say, you cannot alienate land outright?—Government could alienate for the market value; it is only when it wants to do it on favourable terms that it has to obtain the sanction of the Government of India.

10655. The Government has a certain amount of land in and around Rangoon?—Yes.

10656. Does it in practice sell that land in freehold?—It does sometimes; its policy is not to sell at all, but to give leases with terms of renewal.

10657. For what length do the leases run?—Thirty years, with renewal for another 30 years.

10658. That is the policy which is adopted generally with regard to land within towns?—Yes; within Rangoon, Government is particularly careful, but generally it does grant leases in towns in the same way, at a rental of so much for the first 30 years, and with the option of renewal with revision of the rent for another 30 years.

10659. With regard to waste agricultural land, does it do the same?—No, it is much less careful; it gives a lease or a grant—simply so many years exemption until the land is cleared; after that the tenant simply pays his rent.

10660. Is it your view that the question of the principles of alienation should be left to the Local Government entirely?—This Government has referred to a number of cases in which it is limited; if the market value is more than so much, and it proposes either to give lands free or to give them on favourable terms, that has to go to the Government of India, and it seems to me that in the majority of cases that is not necessary.

10661. Could you sweep the whole thing away and let the Local Government decide for itself?—Personally, I do not think there would be any harm in that. Land is very valuable in Rangoon, and possibly the Government of India might desire to prevent the Local Government alienating the land outright, but then they have prevented that in a general way; they have written letters to the effect that in their opinion it should not be done, and that expression of opinion is observed by the Local Government.

10662. The Local Government, which knows the local conditions, is at least as likely to appreciate the fact that land is valuable as the Government of India?—I think so; they do undoubtedly.

10663. And there is no a priori reason why the Local Government should not decide at least as wisely in regard to these matters as the Government of India?—It seems to me that it depends on local conditions and local knowledge to a great extent.

10644. There is no general question of policy underlying the alienation of land in regard to which uniformity is desirable?—It is undesirable as a general principle to alienate land in large towns; it should be given out on leases and not sold. In Burma, especially, things grow so quickly that the value of land becomes a very important matter in all large towns; the value is extraordinarily enhanced, and therefore the Government would be throwing away a very large future asset if it sold land outright. Everybody would be agreed as to that.

10665. In Rangoon have you made over any land to the municipality except for public purposes?—No land has been made over to the municipality, but the rents of land have been allotted to them for a certain time.

10666. The rents of land which they have improved, do you mean?—Yes; they have got a fund which they spend on the drainage of land, and so on, in the interests of sanitation, and afterwards the receipts from this land would be given to the municipality for a certain number of years.

10667. Then it falls into the Government?—That is my impression.

10668. It is not the policy of the Government then to alienate their land permanently to a municipal body, and give it what is known as the unearned increment?—No, it does not permanently alienate land unless it is for a special municipal purpose—not with the object of making revenue out of it; it never does that.

10669. You say, "I regard education in Burma as a lamentable and melancholy failure due in a large measure to the fact that the department was presided over for years by an officer who came from Bengal." Wherein do you consider that the policy was faulty?—The whole plan of education here has been a mistake. What ought to have occurred should have been the adaptation of the existing monastic education that we found here. When we first came here there was a system of education in connection with the monasteries, and we should have adapted that; if we had done so, education now would have been of a much better character than what has resulted from our introducing an entirely different system. We have simply left the monastic schools alone and set up other schools, which have taken away the pupils from the monastic schools, and these are now dying out. The education given in the monastic schools was held to be religious education and, therefore, it could not be supported by Government, and the consequence is that we have gradually put an end to the system altogether.

10670. Do you mean that the schools did not get a subsidy?—Yes. It is a purely secular education that we give in our Government and municipal schools.

10671. The monastic system should be developed more than it has been?—Quite so. The reason why it was not developed was because the officer who came here in charge of the department did not know the country, and did not know what could be done with the system already existing.

10672. Has the policy changed at all latterly?—To a slight extent. In some of the monastic schools they now have English-speaking teachers, so that the boys can also go to those schools and learn English. That was the drawback—that these schools only taught Burmese; the people could not learn English in those schools; if we had taken the schools as we found them, we could have grafted upon them some of our own methods, and the result would have been considerably better.

10673. (Mr. Dutt.) As to the freedom from control which you desire for the Local Government in financial matters. Would that include your power to develop the resources of this province by fresh taxation?—I have not considered the matter of imposing fresh taxation, but the Local Government would not be inclined to put any fresh taxation on the country.

10674. Would you desire to have power to impose fresh taxation without the sanction of the Government of India?—Yes.

10675. Would that be popular?—It would depend upon how it was used.

Mr. G. F. Arnold.

10676. Having made an assignment to him, would you permit the District Officer to make his own arrangement for the collection of revenue in his own district?—No, he would collect it according to the general system and according to rules.

10677. Do you recommend similar freedom to the Heads of Departments?—Yes, my only object here is to do away with references. For example, when officers exceed the amount which is provided in their budgets for certain objects, they have to go up for sanction. Having got the general control of this lump sum, they should be able to devote part of it to a certain object without any restriction. They can do that as to small heads, as it is, but they frequently have to go up for sanction of the higher authority.

10678. Under your system would it be necessary for the Heads of these Departments to frame budgets for their own departments?—I think it would be necessary for their own information, otherwise they would not know where they were.

10679. And they should submit the budgets to the Local Government?—No, I do not think that would be necessary, except merely to show the objects of the expenditure.

10680. You say "The District Board scheme has been tried in Burma and long since died of inanition." Do you say that from your personal knowledge?—No, because it died a long time before I can remember, but I know it from the papers which I have seen. In 1884 they were started, and by 1891 there were none left.

10681. Has the law been annulled or cancelled?—No, it was not done upon any legal basis; it was done entirely by executive order, and no laws were either brought into force or amended.

10682. Does the Burman take less interest in the expenditure of the taxes that he pays than the people of other parts of India?—Yes. I do not think he takes any interest at all. I think he is satisfied, and that he has no objection to the way in which the money is expended. It is very doubtful whether it would be of value to suggest to him to do otherwise. If the people wished for any alteration, it seems to me that they would shew it in some way, but when you have them on District Boards or Municipal Committees, and so on, they never shew that they want to know anything.

10683. You do not think it is desirable to foster in them a desire to take interest in such matters, and to know in what way the taxes of the country are spent?—No; I think it is very doubtful.

10684. You speak of forest administration in Burma. Are these reserved forests generally confined to large areas of real forest, or do they include waste lands in villages?—Villages are practically always excluded from reserved forests.

10685. Then the reserved forests only include real forests away from villages?—Not necessarily away from villages; you get villages on the borders of forests, but it is a very rare thing to include in the reserved forest itself a village which is inhabited.

10686. When there is a forest which is on the borders of a village, has the District Officer any voice in the administration of the forest?—He has no voice in the administration, but he has a voice in the original proposal to reserve the forest; the proposal is sent up through him, and any one who is dissatisfied with the orders of the Forest Settlement Officer has an appeal to the Deputy Commissioner; so that he is the appellate authority. When it is once done it is out of his control, except that, as District Officer, if he finds it is creating hardship, he can report that, and he can get an area disafforested, if he can shew that the people have not sufficient land on which to graze their cattle and so on.

10687. But the forest officer is not under any sort of control, or orders of the District Officer?—The position is really that the forest officer should report his proposals through the Deputy Commissioner; the Deputy Commissioner is supposed to be informed of everything that is done in forest matters; but as regards the actual management of the reserved forest, when once it is reserved, the District Officer has nothing to do with it.

10688. When it is once reserved, suppose the people came to the Deputy Commissioner and clamoured about their want of pasture lands, would he have the power to instruct the forest officer to reserve places for pasture?—No, he could only report it to the Commissioner, who could report it to the Local Government.

10689. Would it not be desirable to give the District Officer a voice in such a matter as that?—It would be undesirable. I am not prepared to say that it might not do good, but it would not be possible with the amount of work the Deputy Commissioners have to get through that they should undertake this additional burden.

10690. Otherwise you have no very clear opinion against it?—It would be a good thing, but it would make it rather difficult for the forest officer to do his work.

10691. Your land revenue settlements here are revised after 15 or 20 years?—The majority at present are re-settled after 15 years; it is now under discussion to increase the period to 20 years. The proposal came from the Government of India.

10692. You say you have to obtain the sanction of the Government of India to the rates fixed for any district or area under the settlement. Are these rates proclaimed or made known to the people before they are sent up to the Government of India for sanction?—No. After they come back from the Government of India, it is proclaimed that they will come into force after a certain date.

10693. After they have been sanctioned by the Government of India and have been proclaimed, suppose the people object, have they any remedy?—No.

10694. So that practically the whole thing is done and finished before the people have any say upon the matter?—That is not quite so, because they can go to the Settlement Officer before the matter goes up at all and make their objections. The Settlement Officer publishes his proposals; at any rate the people are aware of them, and objections appear in the settlement reports; you will see "The inhabitants of such and such a place objected to these rates on such and such grounds"; any objections that are raised are duly considered.

10695. Would you have any objection to having the rates published before they are finally sent up for sanction?—No, I should have no objection. The difficulty practically precludes you from raising the rates if there has been any mistake; the rates proposed by the Settlement Officer, the people are then liable to be deceived; it practically precludes you from raising the rates if there has been any mistake; the people would consider it rather a breach of faith if you had once published the rates, and then, when the matter came up afterwards, the Local Government thought that the rates were not high enough; it would be very difficult to make any alterations subsequently.

10696. So that on the whole you think the present system is the best?—Yes, because the way in which the rates are fixed is such that it is a practical safeguard that the people will not be over-assessed.

10697. You say that you would curtail the right of appeal to the Government of India now granted to officers against orders affecting them personally, by refusing it to any one whose salary did not exceed Rs. 250 per mensem. I suppose there are members of the Provincial Service who get less than Rs. 250 per mensem?—Members of the Subordinate Service. Rs. 300 I think is the minimum at which the Provincial Service starts.

10698. Suppose a man getting Rs. 250 per mensem was dismissed, would you allow him an appeal to the Government of India against the order of the Local Government?—No. The Local Government has power to make appointments up to Rs. 250; that is why I fixed the same limit in questions of dismissal.

10699. You recommend that the Local Government should have the power of borrowing in the market or raising loans?—No; I recommend they should get any money they want through the Government of India.

10700. You do not support what the Lieutenant-Governor says as to the power of raising loans?—No; personally I do not think it should be necessary. If they cannot get, either in the form of contribution or grant from the Government of India, as much as they want, I should then be inclined to give them powers, but I doubt if it would succeed.

10701. (Sir Frederic Lely.) As to your argument about the invasion of Burma by Indians, which you describe as the influx of a foreign race with a baser standard of living, has that occurred since our annexation of Burma?—Yes, practically so. I imagine it started before the annexation, when we occupied Lower Burma.

Mr. D. SHEARME was called and examined.

10705. (Chairman.) You have about nine years' service, of which four were spent in the district and the remaining five in the Secretariat in one way and another?—Yes.

10706. Is there any general rule in this Government that officers who have been employed for a certain number of years in the Secretariat should go back to their districts?—I think there is no rule; there is no definite practice.

10707. If there was any such rule you would have a fair opportunity of knowing whether there was any rule or practice of the nature referred to?—Yes.

10708. You are concerned with education, municipalities, the Medical Service and Marine?—Yes.

The powers of Local Governments should be extended so as to permit them to create new appointments of the class usually held by officers of a Provincial Service and to enhance salaries up to the limit to which the salaries of such officers usually extend. The powers that have recently been conferred on the Government of India in paragraph 2 (i.) and (ii.) of Resolution No. 6660—Ex., dated the 1st November, 1907, if delegated to Local Governments, would be sufficient for this purpose. The restrictions imposed in Article 283 of the Civil Account Code to the effect that no new general Service or duty may be undertaken and that no new class of officer may be created should be retained. I think that Local Governments should also be empowered to abolish any appointment other than those usually held by Gazetted Officers recruited in England, and should be allowed to create new grades, provided that the pay of any grade does not exceed Rs. 500.

I think that a great deal of correspondence would be saved if a number of petty restrictions of the Civil Service Regulations on the power of Local Governments were removed. I also think it should be the rule that general orders issued by the Government of India should not be held to supersede the ordinary powers of a Local Government unless they are specially declared to do so. As an example of the inconvenience resulting from the present system, I quote the following: The Government of India in a resolution dealing generally with the recruitment of Hospital Assistants prescribed a form of bond which Hospital Assistants were required to execute. The amount of penalty prescribed in the bond was not sufficient in the case of Hospital Assistants recruited for service in Burma, inasmuch as these Hospital Assistants had been educated entirely at the expense of the Local Government, and, unless they served the prescribed time in Burma, they would receive the education at the expense of Government without giving any adequate return. It was held that the sanction of the Government of India was necessary to an alteration in the amount of penalty prescribed by the bond.

10702. Therefore you say it is a fair inference to make that this influx is the result of the connection with India?—Yes, I think that that has given an impetus to it. The native of India was not really safe before that time in Burma.

10703. Do I correctly describe your argument as showing the influence of India over a minor province?—If natives of India came over to Burma before we took the country, they were not safe; as soon as we took it they were safe.

10704. But so far as your argument has any weight, it means that this is a result of British rule?—It seems to me that the argument holds good that we stimulated the result. I have pointed out as an example how liquor shops have been opened in Burma in order to meet the wants of the Indian emigrants, necessarily tending to the demoralization of the Burmese youth.

(The witness withdrew.)

I consider that Local Governments in general, and in particular the Local Government of this province, which differs so widely from others should have extensive powers in adapting the general line of policy laid down by the Government of India to local conditions. As regards education, for example, this province possesses an indigenous system of primary vernacular education in the monasteries; but apart from Mission schools and Government schools there is very little provision for Anglo-vernacular secondary education. A general policy therefore, founded on consideration of the conditions prevailing in India, must necessarily require much modification before it can be regarded as suitable for this province.

I think that the restrictions imposed on the power of Local Governments to make rules under both general and local Acts may with advantage be relaxed. In certain cases, no doubt, it is necessary that the Government of India should retain the power either of making rules or of requiring them to be made subject to their previous sanction; as, for example, rules under the Arms Act. The Government of India are responsible for the protection of the country and must therefore regulate the conditions under which arms are imported and possessed. But in many cases rules of purely local interest require the sanction of the Government of India. As an example of this, I would quote rules made under the Inland Steam Vessels Act; rules made for the destruction of records (under Act III. of 1879); rules with respect to establishments to be maintained for the service and execution of processes under the Lower Burma Courts Act and Upper Burma Civil Courts Regulation. Other examples in which a reference, that appears to be unnecessary, has to be made to the Government of India are:—Under section 35 of the Indian Ports Act, 1889, for fees prescribed for pilotage; under the Tramways Act the sanction of the Government of India is required for an order authorising the construction of a tramway if any part of the tramway is to traverse land not included within the limits of a municipality or cantonment. Thus, in the case of Mandalay, when the tramway was first built it was entirely within the limits of the municipality, and no reference was made to the Government of India. The Company wished to extend their system to a suburb of the town, and for this a reference has to be made to the Government of India. Generally speaking, I consider that when rules under Acts are entirely or mainly of local interest, a Local Government should be empowered to make rules subject to the control of the Government of India; that is to say, the Government of India should have power to require a Local Government to amend or cancel a rule, but it should not be necessary to obtain sanction before making a rule.

I think that in the matter of rules under Acts there is a tendency towards excessive uniformity.

As an example of this, I would quote a proposal to frame general rules under the Petroleum Act applicable to all provinces in India. It is obvious that in any case there must be a number of special rules for this province, e.g., to enable dangerous petroleum to be transported from the place of production to the place of refinement, and it is difficult to see the advantage of framing a uniform set of rules to regulate the possession and transport of petroleum in a province, such as Burma, where petroleum is produced on a large scale and in the other provinces of India where, with the exception of Assam, no petroleum is produced. As another example, I would quote the rules under the Poisons Act. In this case the Government of India declared in February, 1904, that they had no desire to impose uniformity of detail in the rules framed in the different provinces; but in February, 1907, after considering the rules that had been submitted in accordance with their orders by Local Governments, they expressed the opinion that the rules for each province should be drawn on uniform lines, and accordingly forwarded two sets of rules to Local Governments with the request that they should be issued and adopted without further delay. It was not suggested that the rules of this province were unsuitable; it was merely considered that uniformity was in itself desirable. In my opinion the contrary position should ordinarily be taken, namely, that the suitability of rules for the province, where they are to have effect, should be first considered, and save in exceptional circumstances, the attempt to secure uniformity in different provinces should not be made.

I consider that the general supervision of municipal affairs should be vested in the Commissioner of the division except in the case of a Presidency Municipality. The Local Government should retain general control over the establishment and constitution of municipalities and also over the qualifications and remunerations of the servants of municipalities, but I would transfer to the Commissioner the great part of the power of control now vested in the Local Government by law; e.g., I would give the Commissioner power to make rules to regulate the system of electing a committee, the power to fix the term of office of members, to make rules for the assessment, collection and remission of taxes, and to declare what are suitable objects of expenditure from municipal funds. Where "the previous sanction of the Local Government" is now necessary for the imposition of taxes or for the making of bye-laws which involve taxation, I would substitute "the previous sanction of the Commissioner."

I am in favour of delegating financial powers to Heads of Departments. Generally speaking, I think that financial control should be exercised mainly in the course of preparing the departmental budget. Where provision has been made in the budget for a specific purpose, the money should be disbursed, or an officer should be entertained, without further reference. Similarly I should allow Heads of Departments to create temporary appointments up to say Rs. 100 a month, provided the duties are ordinarily undertaken by Government and provided that there is adequate provision in the budget. I should also increase the power of reappropriation now possessed by Heads of Departments. If Local Governments were empowered to delegate any of the financial powers entrusted to them that they might think fit, a considerable amount of unnecessary correspondence would be avoided.

In certain matters municipalities should be allowed to make their bye-laws without the previous sanction of the Local Government, which is now required in all cases. The previous sanction of the Commissioner should be required to the imposition of taxes and to bye-laws which involve taxation, but, in the other cases, if bye-laws were made subject to the Commissioner's control, that is to say, if the Commissioner had power to require the Committee to amend or repeal a bye-law, it would be sufficient. In the case of the Rangoon Municipality the power of control should be exercised by the Local Government instead of the Commissioner. The following are examples of bye-laws which I consider municipalities should be empowered to make without previous sanction:—
